"He's moved away. He used to live in that little house over there, but he's going to live in a fine house in Fort Pickering now."

The reporter greatly marveled and went to the house pointed out to him, and asked a man there if Dorsey still lived there.

"No," was the reply. "You see he drew part of the big prize in the Louisiana State Lottery, and he wants more stylish quarters. He's got the money and I guess he's happy. I wish I was in his place, that's all."

Mr. Dorsey is said to be a man in every way deserving the good luck that has been thrust upon him by chance.—Memphis (Tenn.) Avalanche, June 4.

Another Bank Embezzler.

Cleveland, Ohio, Special:—Isaac A. Stanton, paying teller of the National bank of Commerce, was jailed Wednesday evening the 11th, for embezzling $100,000 from the bank. The shortage was discovered when Cashier Garretson counted the reserve fund kept in a special apartment of the vault combination of which was known only to Garretson and Stanley. When asked to explain the shrinkage Stanley confessed that a year ago he was troubled about a debt of $800 in his house and thought he could take that sum from the reserve fund without harm to any one, invest it in grain, realize a profit, pay off the mortgage on his place and return the money; but the investment was unfortunate, and to cover the loss he took more, and so on till he had taken $100,000.

A Great Horseman.

Mr. J. H. Goldsmith, owner of the Walnut Grove stock farm, N. Y., says of the wonderful curative qualities of St. Jacobs Oil, that having long used it for rheumatism and on his breeding farm for ailments of horses and cattle he cheerfully accords this great paincure his preference, as the best he ever used, in an experience of twenty years.

Details of White Thunder's Murder.

White Thunder, the Sioux chief, was shot and killed on the 1st inst., by two chiefs of the same tribe, named Spotted Tail and Thunder Hawk. White Thunder was a man of prominence among the Rosebud Sioux, and aspired to the place made vacant in the tribe two years ago by the murder of old Spotted Tail by Crow Dog. Young Spotted Tail also was aspirant for his father's place, and was jealous of White Thunder, and it is supposed this feeling of rivalry caused the murder. White Thunder's only child, a daughter of sixteen years, is a pupil in the Carlisle school, and so are two of the Young Spotted Tail's brothers, one of whom a young man nineteen years old, is 6 feet 4 inches high. The other is a boy of thirteen. A seventeen year old daughter of Crow Dog is also a student.

Papillon Cough Cure.

A delicious syrup, perfectly harmless, that cures that distressing affliction, WHOOPING COUGH, in a few days. It prevents the paroxysmal coughing, which causes the whoop. Bronchial or ordinary hacking cough, so prevalent in childhood and old age, are permanently cured with this simple syrup. It is purely vegetable, and can be administered to infants without the slightest danger. It relieves and cures whooping cough and any cough of children or adults.

We are constantly in receipt of testimonials, and reports from physicians and druggists, praising the efficacy of this delicious syrup. If your child has a cold, a few doses of Papillon Cough Cure will prevent a contagious malady. For a hacking night cough, this remedy is superior to all others.

Price, $1.00 per bottle, six for $5.00. Directions in ten languages accompany every bottle. For sale by all druggists.

LET TRUTH TELL ITS STORY.

A Minister and the Orphan Children.

"REV. L. B. PAINE, Macon, Ga., writes: We have been using Swift's Specific at the orphans' home as a general health tonic, and have had remarkable results from its use on the children and employes of the institution. It is such an excellent tonic, and keeps the blood so pure, that the system is less liable to disease. It has cured some of our children of Scrofula."

TUTT'S PILLS

TORPID BOWELS, DISORDERED LIVER, and MALARIA.

From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These symptoms indicate their existence: Loss of Appetite, Bowels costive, Sick Headache, fullness after eating, aversion to exertion of body or mind, Eructation of food, Irritability of temper, Low spirits, A feeling of having neglected some duty, Dizziness, Fluttering at the Heart, Dots before the eyes, highly colored Urine, CONSTIPATION, and demand the use of a remedy that acts directly on the Liver. As a Liver medicine TUTT'S PILLS have no equal. Their action on the Kidneys and Skin is also prompt; removing all impurities through these three "scavengers of the system," producing appetite, sound digestion, regular stools, a clear skin and a vigorous body. TUTT'S PILLS cause no nausea or griping nor interfere with daily work and are a perfect

If you are Interested

In the inquiry—Which is the best Liniment for Man and Beast?—this is the answer, attested by two generations: the MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT. The reason is simple. It penetrates every sore, wound, or lameness, to the very bone, and drives out all inflammatory and morbid matter. It "goes to the root" of the trouble, and never fails to cure in double quick time.

Answer This.

Is there a person living who ever saw a case of ague, billiousness or neuralgia, or any disease of the stomach, liver or kidney that Hop Bitters will not cure?

My mother says Hop Bitters is the only thing that will keep her from severe attacks of paralysis and headache. Ed. Oswego Sun.

My little sickly, puny baby, was changed into a great bouncing boy and I was raised from a sick bed by Using Hop Bitters a short time.
A YOUNG MOTHER.

No use to worry about any Liver, Kidney or Urinary Trouble, especially Bright's Disease or Diabetes as Hop Bitters never fails of a cure where a cure is possible.

I had severe attacks of gravel and Kidney trouble; was unable to get any medicine or doctor to cure me until I used Hop Bitters. They cured me in a short time. T. R. ATTY.

Unhealthy or inactive kidneys cause gravel Bright's disease, rheumatism, and a horde of other serious and fatal diseases, which can be prevented with Hop Bitters if taken in time.

Ludington, Mich., Feb. 2, 1879. I have sold Hop Bitters for four years, and there is no medicine that surpasses them for bilious attacks, kidney complaints and all diseases incident to this malarial climate. H. T. ALEXANDER.

Monroe, Mich., Sept. 25, 1875. SIRS—I have been taking Hop Bitters for inflammation of kidneys and bladder, it has done for me what four doctors failed to do—cured me. The effect of the Bitters seemed like magic to me.
W. L. CARTER.

GENTS—Your Hop Bitters have been of great value to me. I was laid up with typhoid for over two months, and could get no relief until I tried your Hop Bitters. To those suffering from debility or any one in feeble health, I cordially recommend them. J. C. STOETZEL, 638, Fulton st., Chicago, Ill.

THE BRIDEGROOM.

Flora Gage was tall and slender, and shaped like a Juno, with dark, wistful eyes, and black, silk-soft tresses, and a skin where the rosy blood glowed through at every passing emotion of her mind—too beautiful, perhaps, for her beauty had brought to her shrine the frosty-haired old lover whose gold had at last purchased her.

"Such good luck," said Mrs. Gage. "Why, he's worth a quarter of a million!"

"And he keeps such horses!" echoed Mr. Gage, rubbing his hands. "I'm very glad now that I never encouraged Fred Templeton. He's a nice young fellow enough for aught I know, but I don't believe he's got a hundred dollars ahead in the world!"

"But, papa," poor Flora had faltered, "I love him!"

"Flora," said her mother, solemnly, "you're talking in a very improper manner. No well-regulated young woman ever loves a man until she is married to him!"

"I know I shouldn't love old Peckley if I was married forty times over to him!" audaciously rejoined Flora, whereupon her papa and mamma cried out: "Hush-sh-sh," and Flora was "put down" at once.

"Really," said Mr. Gage, "Flora has behaved very well. I didn't think the child had so much sense."

"Fred Templeton was here this morning," said Mrs. Gage, gloomily.

"Well, let him come! She'll be safely married to Peckley by this time to-morrow."

"But they made an appointment to go out to visit the haunted house by moonlight this evening."

"I know it; but Peckley has gone with them. Sly dog, that—sly old dog!" and Mr. Gage chuckled complacently.

While this conjugal tete-a-tete was transpiring at the Gage mansion the bride-elect was wandering over the deserted rooms of the old "haunted house" in the valley below; with Fred Templeton at her side and Philo Peckley trudging behind.

"Is it really haunted?" said Mr. Peckley, stopping to wipe his damp brow, for he had been walking briskly, although it was a December day.

"Oh, there can be no doubt about it," said Miss Gage. "Nobody has occupied the premises in twenty years. It's a ghost all in white that flits through the upper room and wrings its hands."

"Shall we turn back?" said Mr. Templeton, quietly.

"Turn back! nonsense!" cried Peckley, "Why, I'd as soon go over the whole house by myself as not."

"Not into the haunted garret?"

"What haunted garret?" demanded Peckley.

"The garret," said Templeton, with great solemnity, "where the ghost lurks among the ruinous beams, and where strange sounds appall the chance passer."

Mr. Peckley's eyes sparkled. He was quite aware that he was rather lacking in the romantic element—here was an opportunity for him to outshine that young scoundrel of a Templeton.

"Come on!" he cried, "you shall see for yourselves! I'll go three times around the garret, all alone; you shall hear the sound of my footsteps. Ghosts, indeed! What nonsense!"

"Well, if you really have courage——" began Templeton.

Mr. Peckley's only reply was an upward scramble which made the ruinous rounds of the ladder squeak violently. But his blood chilled a little, nevertheless, as he heard the retreating footsteps of Mr. Templeton descending the ladder. The huge beams of the garret, draped with waning festoons of cobweb—the vague, shimmering reflections of the moonlight on the floor, the mournful whistling of the winter wind through the chimney-stacks, which rose up like a monster mausoleum in the very center of the place, were none of them of the most mirth-inspiring order, and as Philo stood with chattering teeth in the middle of the floor's huge black rat skurried across, like an imp of darkness, close to his very feet.

Three several times Mr. Peckley trotted round the garret with starting eyes, pallid cheeks, and ears that fancied the shriek of disembodied wind! Then he fled precipitately to the trap-door, and strove to pull it up.

But it would not yield to his strength. Evidently it was bolted or chained below. "Templeton! Tem-ple-ton-n-n! Flora! Flora Gage! Hello-o-o, I say."

And the echoes, weird and wild, returned his outcry, and then there was a hollow horror of silence over all.

Mr. Peckley scrambled to his feet and ran to the end window, which commanded a view of the road beyond the frozen river and belt of the leafless trees. There they were, Fred and Flora, arm in arm, descending the road as cozily as possible, while he—Philo Peckley—was barred and bolted into the great garret of the haunted house!

* * * * * * *

"No Mr. Peckley yet? And the guests all here—and the minister waiting—and Flora ready dressed this half hour! I don't understand this at all, Mrs. Gage—no, not at all!"

And Mr. Gage ran backward and forward, with a face as red as a peony, and decidedly apoplectic symptoms about his eyes.

"Oh, dear!" said Mrs. Gage, wringing her hands. "What shall we do? Do you suppose Philo Peckley has changed his mind, Mr. Gage?"

"Changed his mind, ma'am?" The peony red changed to a vivid purple. "A man change his mind about marrying my daughter! If he has, ma'am, it will be the last opportunity he will have to change it in my house! I'll give him five minutes more by my watch, and then if he isn't here—"

"Think of the big cake, Mr. Gage," pleaded his wife, "and the four dozen champagne, all packed in ice! And the roast turkeys, Mr. Gage, and Flora's wedding dress that cost $150, and the scandal of the thing, Mr. Gage! [illegible] said we should not have a wedding all the same, Mrs. Gage," he said, with his eyes fixed steadfastly on the fleeting second hand of the watch; "but Fred Templeton is here—as fine a young fellow as ever breathed! No one shall say my daughter was left to wear the willow. If Peckley don't make his appearance in short order he'll find himself too late; that's all I've got to tell you!"

He was as good as his word! Five minutes later the guests were all electrified by the entrance of the wedding cortege. But, instead of Philo Peckley, the bridegroom was Mr. Frederick Templeton.

Scarcely had the lovely and blushing bride begun to receive the hearty congratulations of her friends than there was a bustle in the hall and a stout, short, elderly man rushed in, his hair powdered with dust, and cobwebs hanging about him. It was Philo Peckley.

"I've come to be married!" he said. "Where is my bride!"

"You are too late sir!" roared Papa Gage, furiously.

"Allow me to introduce my wife, sir, Mrs. Templeton," said Fred, with a mischievous twinkle in his eyes. "I hope you were not inconvenienced by the ghosts. In love and war, you know, Mr. Peckley, all stratagems are fair."

Philo Peckley stood aghast. He had been outwitted, outreached, outgeneraled. Without a word more he turned and quitted the house, never to enter it more.

A Wealthy American Lady Infatuated With a Dissolute French Prince.

The Paris correspondent of the Philadelphia Record writes of a shocking case of female infatuation, which is the talk of the French capital, and is slightly whispered in New York. The name of the lady if made known would be a painful surprise to Americans.

The most notorious scandal now talked about in society is that of a well-known and wealthy married woman, who is traveling in Europe with a French prince. The father of this lady was a successful New York merchant, who left all his enormous property to her when he died. She has in her own right something like $350,000 a year. A perfect godsend to this dissolute French Prince. The prince also is married, and has three interesting children. At first there was an attempt to hush up the matter, but it soon became a public scandal and could not be hushed up. Two of this lady's daughters whom she took with her to Europe when she went off with the Prince have returned to their father, having discovered what was going on, and both they and the father live on an allowance furnished by the mother, who is at present living in Italy with her Prince. The strange part of this is the Prince seems to have no attractions. He is an old man and dissipated, with certain defects in his personal appearance that make him anything but pleasing to look upon, and then he is an inveterate gambler. A friend of mine saw him lose $7,000 of this lady's money at a gaming table one night. He has either had a run of luck lately or the lady has increased his allowance, for he has bought a handsome hotel in Paris, where he is living in great style. The French papers have had a paragraph to the effect that he has recently made a lot of money in America out of petroleum and silver mines, but the Americans in Paris know better than that. The mine this Prince has struck has yielded a richer vein and with less risk than attends ordinary mining speculations.

Four Noted English Speakers.

Robert Laird Collier in the Boston Herald says: When Lord Randoph Churchill, the Marquis of Salisbury and Sir William Harcourt are on the stump you may be quite sure that something is being said that is worth hearing. And they have all been on the stump with a vengeance the past week. If only Mr. Chamberlain had mounted the rostrum and uttered his crisp and snapping sentences, we would then have heard the crack of the whip all around. These four politicians all have what Matthew Arnold is pleased to call "takingness." The press and public are always on the lookout for what they have to say. It is not that there words are always words of wisdom, but that their words are never lacking in wit. There is something spectacular in their political orations. They are something more than word-painters. There is something leptangible in their speeches even than pictures. A certain effect of rhetorical groussing of ideas and phrases that is like fragrance—something spicy and pungent—that is difficult to describe, characterizes the speeches of all these political orators. It is a kind of speaking that I never heard in America. It is less spontaneous in fact, and more so in form, than American stump oratory. All these speakers use the English of the academy—that is, of the most refined society. They are careful, for the most part, of certain amenities of discussion. But, all the same, their sentences have teeth. Their words take hold. They are sure to hit hard. In short, they are talking, something is going on. When one of these four champion stump orators has delivered himself of speech, the columns of the papers are full of meat, and meat with gravy, to boot. Look out for a deluge of letters contradicting certain statements made. Perhaps the editors of the journals will have bushels of letters deprecating the new fashion in political discussion, and despairingly longing for the return of the good old style of slow and sure, dry and dull political discussion.

A Preacher's Financial Experience.

"The Rev. Dr. Goodwin, of Quincy, Ill.," says the Philadelphia Times, "has gone home greatly disgusted with the prevalent methods of the banking business. He was a delegate to the Methodist Episcopal Conference, and left home with a draft on the Marine Bank of New York, because he thought it more convenient than currency. Before his pocket money was exhausted the Marine Bank had suspended. He returned the draft to Quincy for better funds, and received a check on the Metropolitan Bank of New York, but on the day of its arrival the Metropolitan had closed its doors. Not discouraged up to that point, Dr. Goodwin again returned this check to the Quincy Bank, but by the time it reached his home the Quincy concern had collapsed and the minister found himself penniless in a strange city. The facts were laid before a gentleman, and money enough to take him home was advanced.

EXERCISE.

Its Influence upon the Body—Remarkable Illustrations of Trained Strength.

The old Romans who conquered eighty-six foreign nations had recognized the secret of success when they called their armies exercitus, bodies of drilled or exercised men. Exercise overcomes all difficulties, and if the power of its influence has limits, they have never been ascertained. It ensures every victory; practise, i. e., exercise and experience, would enable a hundred veterans to beat a thousand recruits, even if the recruits were better armed. A brigade of ordinary riflemen would have no chance against a regiment of picked archers, such as were employed in the war in the Middle Ages.

In the London Tower, and in the armories of Strasburg, Nuremburg and Vienna, there are several coats of mail that have been pierced through and through, and evidently by the same shot. That is, the arrow has broken the breastplate, passed through the body of the cuirassier, and then through the back-plate.

A common rifle-ball rarely penetrates the body of a full-grown man, even nowadays, when mail-coats are gone out of fashion.

During the middle ages it was the custom to keep runners who followed their carriages afoot while the horses were going at full gallop. Fast runners were in great request, and if parents wanted to qualify their children for a position of that sort, they began to train them from the earliest childhood, and made them undergo a singular operation, namely, the removal of the spleen, which was supposed to have an influence on the vigor of the lungs.

From the city of Puebla in Mexico, a sandy country-road leads across the hills to the valley of Amozoc. Early in the morning that road is crowded with Indian hucksters, who carry heavy baskets on their backs. They often come from a distance of ten or twelve miles, but make the whole trip at a sharp trot, and without a single stop. Their children trot at their sides, carrying small bundles or bags, and thus learn their trade so gradually that they hardly feel the hard-ships of it.

It is certainly queer that nowadays a small short-legged dog can easily outrun the tallest man. It has not been always so. An ostrich proves that two legs can go as fast as four. Want of exercise probably accounts for the whole difference. Next to football, the favorite game of the English schoolboys is the play called "Hare and Hounds." In watching their races I noticed that for one boy who is too short-legged to win, at least twelve are too short-winded.

Their lungs give out along while before their legs do. But that sort of short-windedness can be readily cured by various kinds of exercise, especially by mountain excursions.

Lifting weights is another excellent lung exercise. There is a story of a Grecian Samson, the athlete Milo of Crotona, who day after day carried a calf around the arena, and gained in strength as the calf gained in weight till he could finally carry a steer.

We may doubt if the steer was quite full-grown; but there is no doubt that Dr. Winship, of Boston, Mass., practiced with dumb-bells and bagfulls of pig-iron till he was able to lift (though only for a moment) the weight of the heaviest steer on the Texas prairie. It is equally certain that before he began to exercise he was the puniest student of the medical college. And if a weakly man of modern times could uplift such a weight, why should not a champion of the Grecian arena have been able to carry it for a distance of half a mile? For it cannot be denied that people have become more puny since they began to trust to gun-powder and steam instead of to exercise.

In countries where they still rely on the strength of their limbs, as in Turkey, Hungaria, and Afghanistan, there are plenty of men earning their bread by common labor who would astonish the so-called athletes of a French circus. A Turkish porter will shoulder a box which the driver of a New York express-wagon would hesitate to unload without assistance.

During the last Afghan war, the native warriors carried cannon to a battery on the top of a hill from where the English soldiers were unable to carry them down again.

The foot-soldiers of the Turkish Janizaries had to drill in full armor, run, wrestle, and even swim, without removing their iron equipments. Such a value did their drill-masters set upon the influence of early training that they would never accept a recruit of more than twelve years of age. These cadets were exercised for years, like the sons of the old Spartans, before they were assigned to actual duty, and the result was the Janizaries repeatedly beat the armies of all Western Europe combined.

The ancient Greeks managed to train not only their troops, but the whole nation, by offering liberal prizes for proficiency in all kinds of bodily exercise, such as running, leaping, lifting, spear-throwing and wrestling. At a distance of sixty yards their spearmen could hit a target with unfailing certainty.

Their runners competed with horses and greyhounds. It is on record that the champion leaper of the Spartan Helotes once cleared fifty-two feet, and a native of Crotona in Southern Italy even fifty-five feet.

But the most wonderful results of life-long training are seen in the achievements of the Oriental acrobats, who come from countries where over-population obliges such people to work miracles in order to excel their numerous competitors.

During the last Vienna exhibition a troop of Japanese jugglers attracted far more attention than the display of there native art-works and manufactures. They had amazingly clever rope dancers and tumblers, mere boys some of them.

But their best performers were all gray-headed old men. It had taken them a life-time of practice to master the difficulties of their special tricks. One of them began his performance by putting the palm of his left hand upon a box, and after stretching out his legs horrizontally in one direction, and his head and right arm in the other, he raised himself in a way that his whole weight was supported on the edge of his left hand.

Without ever touching the ground with any other part of his body, he then began to turn on his wrist, slowly, at first, then more and more quickly, till his outstretched feet whirled around like the spokes of a horizontal fly-wheel. The rapidity of his motions was wonderful enough, but how he contrived to keep his balance would have puzzled the best acrobats of our gymnastic associations.

The next performer had an attendant who held a tin-box by a leather strap, and swung it slowly two and fro like the pendulum of a large clock. In the center of the box was a hole, but certainly not more than two inches in diameter. The jugler stepped back to a distance of about twenty yards, and began to throw little copper balls at the tin box. The first ball was caught by the attendant, who thereupon raised the box a couple of inches, but continued to swing it to and fro. The second, third and all following balls went straight through the narrow aperture without ever touching the rim of the hole. He threw forty of them, and then retired, amidst the prolonged applause of the whole audience, for this time everybody could appreciate the miraculous cleverness of the trick.

But the champion of the band came last. His whole outfit consisted of a straight wooden pole, about ten feet long, and hardly three inches in diameter. It was cut off square at each end, and did not seem to be very heavy. This pole the juggler placed upright on the level surface of a wooded board, tried the board with his feet to see that it did not shake and then proceeded to climb the pole.

He clamered up and down some ten or twelve times in quick succession. He then ascended to the very top, seized it with his hands, let go his feet, and went spinning around in a circle, till it made one giddy to look at him.

By a sudden contraction of his body he then joined his feet at the top of the pole, let go his hands, and slowly raised himself till he stood bold upright like a statue on a pillar. All this while the pillar had no other support but a flat wooden board, and was balanced entirely by the management of the statue.

One of the spectators, an expert American gymnast, got permision to go on the stage, and examine that pole. He looked at the floor below, and then examined the board itself. It was nothing but a flat piece of pine wood.

"Well, how do you explain it?" I asked him when he came back.

"I can't believe in witchcraft," he uttered, "so I don't know at all what to say about it."

Ater the performance was over, the jugglers distribited little cards, showing the portraits of their champions, and their principal exploits. Like all Japanese pictures, the drawings were made by hand, but resembled each other as closely as prints from the same steel-plate. They cost only two cents apiece, and were worth keeping, for both the subject and the workmanship illustrated the wonderful influence of exercise. —Dr. Felix L. Oswald, in Youth's Companion.

Value of old Documents.

A strict Mohammedan never destroys a scrap of paper on which there is writing until he has ascertained whether the name of God is on it. A good business-man is equally cautious about destroying any voucher or memorandum relating to his pecuniary affairs.

A great library, according to Mr. Winsor, the great librarian of Harvard College, should preserve every book and pamphlet printed. The worthless tract of to day may prove invaluable to the historian writing in the year 2000. Two hundred years after the execution of the great Marquis of Montrose, the account-books kept by his agent were discovered. From these the biographer of the Marquis drew much of the history of his hero's early life.

Old play-bills, letters, and college charges for breakfasts furnished students, are not usually thought worth preserving. Yet even these "trifles light as air" once helped a man to a seat in the House of Lords.

In support of his claim to be acknoledged as a peer of England, it became necessary to establish the exact date when a certain actress playes at the Royal Theatre of Edinburgh.

As more than sixty years had elapsed since the event, the proof seemed diffcult. Suddenly, one of the claimant's lawyers remembered that the Advocate's Library of Edinburgh preserved the play-bills of the Theatre Royal. They were found bound up in chronological order, and, on being searched, furnished evidence as to the precise date.

It was also necessary to prove where a certain deceased clergyman had resided, sixty years before, during a period bounded by two dates.

The minister had corresponded with an intimate friend, who also was dead. But in his son's library there was found a bundle of old letters written by the minister to the father. They bore the postmark of a village in the west of England and the dates on which they were posted. It was known that the minister, during the period, had taken his master's degree at Oxford, and it was supposed that he had resided there for several months. Search being made for the old bat-telling-books of the college, they were found in the cellar. In them were discovered entries of tea, coffee, rolls and butter, chops and steaks —technically called "battels,"—supplied to him from day to day, with the exact date and charge against each item.

The evidence furnished by these old play-bills, old letters and old account books helped the claimant to obtain his peerage.

Every lawyer in large practice knows that no novelist invents anything more improbable than the facts of life. He also knows that a scrap of writing, such as an old letter, or an ancient memorandum, may become an important link in the chain of evidence.—Youth's Companion.

Last week, when about to break up for the holidays, Mr. Spurgeon dismissed his young men with a caution. "Don't get courting. That is not good for students. Come back, as some one puts it, with your hearts and manners uncracked. Walk in the fields like Isaac, by all means, and meditate, but don't lift up your eyes for Rebecca. She will come soon enough."

The Boston Traveller says: Mrs. Wendell Phillips is again seriously ill, and her friends are considerably concerned at her condition.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Home Notes.

The New York Commercial Advertiser remarks that "it is again fashionable for ladies to comb their hair back from their foreheads and show they have brains."

There are several kinds of paste made for sharpening razors; the sharpest is made of the finest emery powder, 2 parts, mixed with spermaceti, 1 part, and rubbed on the strop. A finer one is levigated oxide of tin, 1 ounce; powdered oxalic acid, ¼ ounce, and powdered gum, 20 grains, made into a paste with water and spread on the strop; the strop is moistened occasionally with warm water; the finest is made of jewelers' rough black lead, and tallow in equal parts, well mixed.

Fashion kills more women than toil or sorrow. Obedience to fashion is a greater transgression of the laws of a woman's nature, a greater injury to her physical and mental constitution than poverty and neglect. The slave woman at her tasks will live and grow old and see two or three generations of her mistresses fade and pass away; the washer-woman with scarce a ray of hope to cheer her in her toil, will live to see her fashionable sisters die all around her; the kitchen maid is hearty and strong when her lady has to be nursed like a sick baby.

A good glue is made of two parts gum tragacanth, one part gum arabic, and a drop or two of carbolic acid to keep it from souring or getting musty.

To make paste for papering walls add to a quart of flour a teaspoonful of soda and a tablespoonful of salt; mix it smooth with warm water, then add boiling water till it is the consistency of thick cream; keep it on the stove only long enough to boil, set aside till nearly cold then strain through a colander, adding hot water if too thick. Use the paste cold. It can be made the day before just as well.

Kerosene lamp burners which have become gummed up can be cleansed by boiling them half an hour in a kettle containing a quart of water and a pint of wood ashes.

A Silk handkerchief can be so arranged as to make one of the daintiest workbags for holding crochet or knitting. One of pale blue or pink brocade is prettiest for the purpose. Lay the handkerchief out flat, turn over to the inside a small portion of each corner, and hem each down with silk to match. About two inches from the edge, all the way round, sew, as a casting, a ribbon half an inch wide, and through this run drawing strings of narrower ribbon, the same color. Trim the edge all round with a fine lace two or three inches wide. The work is placed in the middle of the bag, and the strings drawn, to gather the bag, thus making the lace ruffle at the top. It will be found much more convenient than any other bag, and remarkably pretty.

Rose Coloring or Blush.—Mix together quarter of an ounce each of powdered alum and cream of tartar, one ounce of powdered cochineal, four ounces of loaf sugar, and a small quarter of a teaspoonful of soda. Boil about ten minutes in a pint of pure, soft water; when quite cold bottle for use. This is used for coloring cake, jellies and ice-cream.

The latest fashions for dressing children's hair are as follows: Ringlets are always pretty for babies. Little boys have curls in the back and bangs in front. Little girls have their hair cut short into a crop, but it is not so much favored as long waved hair gracefully falling down the back, with a colored ribbon to keep it in place. Young ladies wear their hair high and twisted on top of the head, though the Grecian knot is still worn on the street. Bangs are not worn as they were early in winter. Side puffs are very becoming to elderly ladies whose hair mingles with gray. Gentlemen continue to part their hair in the middle, while only the dude effects the side lock.

The true way to elevate woman is to put into her hands the instruments of self-support; to make her a fit companion in the world of business and letters as she now is in domesticity; to pare down the hide of man, to cut off two-thirds of his "rights," to pull out the bung of his barrel of conceit, and let him understand that she who was given to him as a companion was not intended to be a slave. When American women understand that there is nothing degrading in work, when the seed of ambition is planted in the breasts of school-girls, when children are taught to regard life as a field of labor, one great step will have been taken toward the plane on which all-right thinking men desire to see their mother's sex.

Farm Notes.

If you have a supply of poultry droppings, this should be worked in where peppers, onions or cabbages are planted, as it is difficult to get the soil too rich for these plants. Ashes are especially valuable for onions and salsify.

The time is at hand when you should examine your henhouse and fortify it against the army of insects so injurious to your fowls. A careful use of kerosene oil will keep off lice. Coal tar is also frequently used to good advantage for the same purpose. Apply it with a brush into every crack and crevice where there is any chance for vermin and it will keep them off.

A wholesome cellar is at the bottom of healthy living. One reason is that the air and floating germs of the cellar find their way to every room in the house. Many of our most destructive diseases are supposed to be caused by minute germs floating in the air and finding lodgment and a congenial home in the animal system, their development causing disease. Mildewed cellars and mouldy closets are nurseries of disease. Even in their dry form the spores of those low forms of life often cause serious sickness. The worst attack of catarrh I ever had was caused by inhaling the dust arising from overhauling a pile of mouldy rubbish.

For honey-producing the honey locust ranks high in the estimation of bee-keepers. It blooms earlier than does the linden, and produces more certainly, if not so bountifully. The American Bee Journal speaks strongly in praise of this beautiful and useful tree, upon the ground that it blooms early in the season, and bees visit it in swarms. It insures rapid breeding in the hive and strong colonies ready to gather honey when white clover comes in season. It also makes an excellent hedge where Osage orange has been extensively tried and experimented with for hedge and failed.

The Germantown Telegraph thus informs its readers how to grow onions without labor: "Prepare a bed, say sixteen feet square, of proper fertility, cultivate deep, and rake it smooth and fine. Now, lay on a board about one foot wide at one side of your bed, stand on the board and place your sets close to the edge, say four inches apart the entire length of the board. Now, lay down another board one and a half inches from the other, place your sets as before, and proceed thus until the bed is completed. Leave on the boards until the onions have matured. Thus you will have a nice bed of onions without labor, save the preparing of the bed and placing of the sets."

In building a cistern, the wall should be coated with the cement on the outside and inside both, as it goes up; and the bricks should be soaked with water before they are laid. The cement adheres with great tenacity when this is done, but is apt to scale off if laid upon dry brick. As the wall is laid the space behind it should be filled with earth and firmly rammed, taking care not to displace the brick. If this is not done the pressure of the water inside may easily burst an unsupported wall outwardly. Such cases have been known to me. By thus using precautions always taken by professional men, the cost of the brickwork is reduced just one-half and the cistern is actually stronger.

Shellbark hickory represents among forest trees the highest standard for fuel. Calling hickory 100, other trees will compare with for real value for fuel as follows: Shellbark hickory, 100; pignut hickory, 93; white ash, 87; white oak, 83; dogwood, 75; fern oak, 73; white hazel, 72; apple tree, 70; red oak, 67; white beech, 65; black birch, 63; yellow oak, 60; hard maple, 59; white elm, 58; red cedar, 50; wild cherry, 53; yellow pine, 54; chestnut, 52; yellow poplar, 44; butternut and white birch, 43, and white pine, 30. A number of these woods which show a very low value for fuel are highly esteemed for fine cabinet work and interior wood work.

Dr. Vessler, a German chemist, gives a recipe for an insecticide which is said to be excellent. It consists of soft soap, four parts; tobacco extract, six parts; amylic alcohol, five parts; methylic alcohol, twenty parts, and water to make one thousand parts. The extract of tobacco is made by boiling together equal parts of roll tobacco and water for half an hour, adding sufficient for loss by evaporation. Then the soft soap is gently and gradually dissolved in the water by heat, and the other ingredients added. The mixture should be stirred before using, and applied with a syringe.

Removing Warts.

1. Burn a piece of linen or cotton on any piece of steel and rub the moisture left on the metal by the burning on the wart three or four successive times. 2. Rub the wart with a strong solution of potash till it disappears. 3. Wet gum ammoniac and rub it on the wart at night just before going to bed. 4. Cover a few sprigs of arbor vitæ with hot water; when the tea is quite strong, pour off and bathe the warts with this, or cursh the juice of the leaf directly on the wart three or four times till it disappears. Take five cents' worth muriate of ammonia, wet a crystal in water and apply several times during the day 5. Cover the warts with baking soda, wet with water and tie them up. A few applications will remove them.—N. Y. Tribune.

Buttermilk as a Drink.

In Warm summer weather many persons feel an irresistible craving for something sour, and often gratify this desire by a free indulgence in pickles or vegetables made acid with vinegar. This demand for acids indicates a deficiency in the acid secretions of the stomach, and the demand for an artificial supply is a natural one, but vinegar is not the best substitute. Lactic acid is one of the chief agents that give acidity to the gastric juice of the stomach in health. This is the acid of sour milk, and, therefore, one of the best summer diet drinks that we can use is buttermilk, It satisfies the craving for acids by giving to the stomach a natural supply, and at the same time furnishing in its cheesy matter a good supply of wholesome nutrition. A man will endure fatigue in hot weather better on buttermilk than on any diet drink he can use. —Orange County Farmer.

How to Overcome the Moths.

This is one of the greatest vexations which careful housekeepers have to contend with, and their depredations are not to be remedied after they have once made inroads. Houses heated by furnaces are especially predisposed to have moths, but every housekeeper must be on the watch for them, for, from the time the windows begin to be left open, the trouble begins. Heavy carpets sometimes do not require taking up every year, unless in constant use. Take out the tacks from these, fold the carpets back, wash the floor in strong suds, with a tablespoonful of borax dissolved in them. Dash with insect powder, or lay tobacco leaves along the edge, and retack. All moths can be kept away, and the eggs destroyed by this means. Ingrain or other carpets, after shaking, are brightened by sprinkling a pound of salt over the surface and sweeping carefully and thoroughly. It is also an excellent plan to wipe off the carpet with borax water, using a thick flannel cloth wrung tightly, taking care not to wet it, but only to dampen. Open the windows and dry the carpet before replacing the furniture.

Other woolens, including blankets and wearing apparel, must be beaten and brushed, and folded smoothly. Be careful to clean every grease spot with ammonia and water, not too strong, and a dark woolen cloth. Tie pieces of camphor into little bundles, and put one in each article. Wrap the articles in newspaper, as printers' ink is a great preventative of moths, and then sew them up in strong sheeting bags, labeled, so that it will not be necessary to open them during the summar except for use. This is a good way for those who do not possess cedar boxes, and the articles need have no other care, if every spot is treated as directed, and the garments are not left hanging in the closet too long before putting away for the season.

Whitewash for Fences and Outbuildings.

A captial whitewash is made by mixing common water-lime cement with sweet skim milk to the proper consistency. The following is the Government whitewash, and a fine whitewash it is:—Put two pailfuls of boiling water in a barrel; add one half bushels of well-burned, fresh quick-lime; put in quickly one peck of common salt dissolved in hot water, and cover the barrel tightly to keep in the steam while the lime is slacking; when the violent ebullition is over, stir till well mixed together, and, if necessary, add more boiling water, so as to have the mass like thin cream; strain through a sieve or coarse cloth. Make a thin starch of three pounds of rice flour and one pound of strong glue, having first soaked the glue in cold water, and to the latter mixture add two pounds of whiting. Add this to the lime wash, and also sufficent hot water to dilute to the proper consistency; keep hot while applying. It will require about six quarts of the mixture for 100 square feet of surface, and it will last remarkably well. It goes without saying that it may be made any color desired.—Rural New Yorker.

Feeding For Rich Milk.

It has been stated by some so-called dairy experts that no amount or variation of food will increase the quality of milk; that the quantity may be increased by feeding, but the fat or butter in it cannot be. This is at varience with, I believe, the experience of every practical dairyman and every dairy expert who has gained his knowledge by practical experience. Professor Arnold recently showed how a native cow had responded to better feeding by largely increasing the proportion of cream and butter in the milk. Professor E. W. Stewart, in his excellent work on "Feeding Animals" states how he increased the yield of milk one-third and that of butter one-half by the regular development of a cow by richer feeding, systematically persevered in. I have increased the butter yield of a cow one-half with very little increase of milk, by the use of palmnut meal, which is very rich in fat of an excellent quality, and which has not the highly nitrogeneous character of cotton-seed meal, and is therefore a safer feed. Indeed, it would hardly be necessary to mention these instances were it not that practical men might be misled to their disadvantage by the popular credit given to scientific statements. But we should never forget how much scientific men have had to take back in the course of their investigations, and how the history of science proves that "it is human to err," and we are all human.—A Pennsylvania Dairyman.

Co-operative Country Store.

A Missouri correspondent reports to the farming world of a successful co-operative country store, owned by fifty farmers, each of whom put $100 into the enterprise at the outset:

"They hired a clerk who gave a bond of $5,000, and a bookkeeper who gave a bond of $25,000. Their goods were bought for cash and directly from first hands right out of the furnishing and dying rooms. They obligated their clerk to sell to no man on time, not even one of the firm. This firm sold goods to the amount of 100,000 in two years. During November and December, 1882, their capital made 28 per cent. on the amount invested. But there is another and unexpected advantage. Those fifty farmers get the best laborers in the country and consequently make the best crops. Why? These hands get all they buy at a low price, and it has got to that point now when our best laborers always ask when they go to a farmer to hire out whether or not he belongs to the farmers' store. If he replies yes, he can get the applicant on better terms than others."

A Wrinkle in Buttons.

From the New York Mail and Express.

"I am worked to death," said an engraver yesterday. "Worked to death making buttons of gold dollars with the owner's monogram engraved on them. I made a couple of dozen such buttons for a leading actress not long ago. The initials were cut deeply in the gold dollar, then enameled, the whole job coming to $100. Very few can afford such expensive buttons. For the ordinary monogram we generally use ten-cent pieces. They are smoothed, the monogram engraved on one side and some fancy figure on the other. The fancy figures are of all sorts, from bull-dogs to Greek gods. I made two comical ones yesterday. One represented a sailor and soldier with a Cupid on the head of each. The sailor sat on a reclining cow and the soldier on a sawbuck. Another, ordered by a young lady, represented a jackass, a monkey and a dude with their heads lovingly together, while underneath was the inscription, 'The Three Graces.'

"Several days ago I made one still more peculiar. It represented a fat man sleeping on a sofa. Huge pieces of cheese and pie, with spider legs and skeleton heads, ran over his body. These were undoubtedly intended for jokes. Still, some people seriously order as incongruous designs and chuckle over the originality of their conceptions, and recipients probably chuckle just as much over the taste of the donor.

Lines About Odd Things To Eat

Gathered from the Caterers' Papers.

Cabbage soaked in sherry wine is now put forth under a French name as something new, but it is merely genteel sauerkraut.

English snipe is about the only game in season now and even of that the supply is not as good as is usually the case at this season.

According to M. Grevy's chef the only sauce that is proper to serve with boiled salmon is anchovy and he wants people to remember it.

An enthusiastic epicure says the preparation of a stuffed olive is, in its way, one of the triumphs of civilization, a magnificent example of man's victory over nature. Sea ravens, both pink and yellow, and sea robins were on exhibition on Saturday morning in Fulton Market, New York, preparatory to doing duty at the Ichthyophagus Club dinner.

SACRILEGE.

They walked in the clover-haunted fields—
A weary worldling, and dainty child;
He seated and worn with the love of self,
She fresh as the dew on the upland wild.
He stole the blush from the sweet wild rose,
And proved that the mornings grew less fair;
That a taint of poison lurked in the bloom,
And hung on the breath of the summer air;
That life is not as good as it seems;
That faith and virtue rarer grow;
That the worm is hidden with greedy mouth
At the heart of all that we love or know.
And a shade fell over the summer fields,
And the sun in its brightness seemed to wane.
Her heart's song faltered—alas! for her.
His doubt crept into the perfect strain.
—Kate L. Brown in May Harper.

THEIR FIRST QUARREL.

If there was one thing that she particularly disliked it was a dog. Her antipathy to the whole canine species was unreasonable, but like all women she asserted her right to be unreasonable when she pleased, and now she thought it too bad that a dog—and a poodle at that—should be allowed to disturb the smooth current of their matrimonial bliss. They had been married just a month, had Jack Applegate and Winnie Matthews, and as yet she had scarcely grown accustomed to being called Mrs. John Applegate. That month had been spent in a delightful honeymoon trip, and never had young married people enjoyed themselves more fully, but now on returning home came the first domestic jar. It was all occasioned by a note that Jack found awaiting him. It read:

San Francisco, Cal.

Dear Jack: Just heard of the happy event. Let me congratulate you. Will send you and your other half a Rocky Mountain poodle by Adams Express to commemorate, the occasion. With joy to yourself and bride,

Frank Parsons.

"Ah," said Jack on reading the note, "Frank has heard of our marriage. The dear old fellow, and though he is way out in San Francisco, yet he is bound to remember us with some kind of a psesent. Peculiar idea to send us a poodle, eh? Frank always was a little odd. That's how he came to go West and seek his fortune on the Pacific slope. Now, the first thing that is to be done is to write to the good old boy, telling him for his sake we will always cherish the gift."

"But," objected Winnie, "you know I can't endure dogs, and poodles especially."

"Yes," said Jack, reflectively, "I know you don't like them, but in this case you might make an exception. Frank is my oldest and best friend."

"Your best friend?" interrupted his wife, with an injured expression.

"Of course he continued, "I mean my best male friend, and what he wouldn't do for me is not worth doing. Why, we roomed together at college, and once he saved my life. I am eternally indebted to him and his poodle, even though it is an unusual wedding present, should be received with distinguished honors."

"Still I can't endure dogs; I detest the very sight of them."

"But Frank's dog ought to be liked for the sake of the giver, and I think it rather inconsiderate in you to make the least objection."

"Inconsiderate!" and Winnie's face flushed. "I'm not at all inconsiderate, and if I don't like dogs I don't, Frank or no Frank!"

"Winnie," slowly remarked her husband, "do not get excited over so small a matter. Of course we will do what we can for the animal. It is not every couple that can start out with a Rocky Mountain poodle, and from what I have heard they are the best watch dogs in the world."

"That is all very true, Jack, but I dislike dogs more than I can tell, and I will never be happy with one in the house To please me you'll give this poodle away when it arrives, won't you, Jack?" and Winnie's tones were soft and pleading.

"Give it away!" exclaimed her husband. "Give away a wedding present! That would be rank discourtesy. You wouldn't propose to give away any of the rest of the presents would you? Mr. Forbes' silver set, for instance, or your father's sideboard, or my mother's parlor set? No, no, Winnie, that would never do."

Jack, in fact, thought more of Frank than young men usually do of their chums, and so the bare suggestion of treating his gift with indignity was enough to make him flare up in righteous indignation. That his wife should not share his feeling toward his friend was a matter of surprise as well as of disappointment. Still he determined that the dog or poodle, whichever it was, should be well treated, and if Frank had seen fit to kindly give it them, they at least would take care of it. His wife not only disliked dogs, but she had hitherto found her husband as tractable as could be wished, and she was not a little vexed to find that her will was not on all occasions his supreme law. It was all the more provoking that he should so stubbornly oppose her, and all for an insignificant poodle. But at all events she believed in a wife asserting her rights and she had no intention of yielding without a struggle.

"Jack," she resumed, do you love me?"

"Yes."

"Love me so much that you want me to be very happy?"

"Of course I do."

"And yet you want to bring a great black poodle dog into our home to torment me, for I never could have a moment's peace if there was a dog about."

"But it is a present from Frank."

"And does Frank come before your wife?"

"Winnie, how can you be so cruel? I care more about you then all the world besides."

"And yet you won't do even a little thing to please me."

"You're unreasonable, Winnie, perfectly unreasonable. This poodle when it gets here, will have come all the way from San Francisco, and if you care anything about me or my friends you would only be to glad to receive it."

And so their quarrel began. Their first quarrel, and they had only been married a month. The outside world may think it a very trivial matter, but to them it was the most serious thing in life. Both were perfectly sincere in the opinion that the other was to blame. She thought that he should be willing to dispose of such a valueless thing as a poodle if she wished it, and he thought that for his old-time friend she would make much of his gift. But it would be a waste of words to attempt to follow the arguments and counter-arguments concerning that poodle, which for all they knew, might never have left San Francisco. The more his discourse the more the animal appeared as the paragon of all earthly virtues, while she continued to paint it as a blacker and still blacker, ferocious and bloodthirsty wolf. This heated discussion was an inauspicious way of beginning life beneath their own roof-tree, but neither paused to think of that. Finally Jack rose from his chair, and standing up in an oratorical fashion, as he did when he was very much in earnest; he said:

"Mrs. Applegate, that poodle is coming, and we must receive it in decent style, so!"

It was the first time in all their married life that he had coldly and formally addressed her as "Mrs. Applegate," and for the moment she felt the blood in her heart chilling. Then her woman nature reasserted itself, and in a voice fully as determined as his, she began:

"Jack, if you wish to destroy the peace of our happy home——"

But Jack was gone, and instead of completing the sentence she walked into the next room and, throwing herself upon the bed, she cried as if her heart would break.

Her husband, when he left the house, rapidly walked down the gravel walk—they lived in the suburbs—and, lighting a cigar, began smoking furiously. He did not return until supper, and then the subject of debate was not again broached, but it was evident that their quarrel was uppermost in their minds.

The next day some hours after Jack had left for business, Mrs. Applegate was surprised to see three or four workingmen prepared with tools and lumber in the yard. Not knowing their business she slipped on her hat, and, going out, inquired.

"Going to build a kennel, mum," answered one of the men. "Mr. Applegate said as how he was going to get a Rocky Mountain poodle, whatever that may be, and he left orders this morning for a kennel."

And what could Mrs. Applegate do? she could not order the work stopped or hinder it in any way, as it would be degrading to her self-respect to reveal to these workingmen that she and her husband were not in perfect accord. So she merely nodded, and, going into the house, listened all the morning to the hammering, and it seemed as if every nail that was driven sent a pang through her heart.

Such is the strange perversion of women, however, that she prepared a dinner of those things which he particularly liked, and in the little womanly touches about the house she did all she could to make everything attractive.

At dinner Jack was unusually jolly, and he tried to make up for her silence by a continual flow of small talk. After the meal he went into the yard and leizurely inspected the nearly completed dog kennel.

"Nice bit of architecture, that," he casually remarked on returning.

"Oh, Jack!" said his wife, with half a sigh.

"Now, Winnie," he began, "do be reasonable. This thing——"

But he said no more, for she had rushed into another room, and, closing the door, was lost to sight and hearing. Feeling decidedly uncomfortable, but still with the reassuring consciousness that he was in the right, Jack Applegate left his home without making the least attempt to kiss his wife good-by. With the poodle in his thoughts he went to the office of the express company and asked if a dog for him had arrived. No, no such animal had come. Then he explained to the expressman that he was expecting a Rocky Mountain poodle, and that it might be well fed and cared for on the road he left quite a sum of money. Then he serenly proceeded to business.

Meanwhile at home his wife was as miserable as she well could be. In one breath she blamed herself, in the next he was at fault. She felt that her heart was breaking, and life no longer was as bright as it had appeared during the happy days of the honeymoon. When Jack returned she was still gloomy and depressed. Supper was melancholy enough, and Jack did not allude to the poodle question until it was over.

"I was at the express office to-day," he observed.

She did not reply or even look up.

"Yes," he continued, ignoring her silence, "but there was no news of our San Francisco wedding present."

Then he paused, but still no answer.

"By the way," he went on, studiously not noticing the fact that she was silent, "What do you think will be a good name for the animal? Seeing that he comes from the metropolis of the Pacific slope, wouldn't it be a good idea to call him 'Frisco? 'Frisco,' 'Frisco, that's not such a bad name for a dog, is it, eh?"

"Jack Applegate!" cried his wife with a sudden burst of anger. "You're a cruel, unloving husband!" and then she sought the refuge of her chamber, and like the bride of a month sobbed and sobbed in despair of soul. The world has grown black to her, and no longer was there joy or brightness in it.

It would be hard to describe the miseries and discomforts of Jack Applegate and his wife for the next few days. He tried to be buoyant, but all to no purpose; and for her part she was thoroughly unhappy. That such a state of affairs could ever have existed would, but a few short days ago, have seemed impossible. Now it was a sad reality. Every day Jack would call at the express office and inquire concerning the expected poodle, but there was no news of it. Meanwhile he had the name "Frisco" painted on the kennel, which, standing conspicuously in the yard, ever reminded his wife of the deplorable and unspannable chasm that was widening between them.

Not to continue this story to an unreasonable length, let it be said that matters went on thus, growing worse and worse every day, for a full week then one morning, shortly after Jack had left for business, what should drive up to the door but one of the large wagons of the Adams Express Company, and Mrs. Applegate signed a receipt in a big book for a bulky bundle, which was carried into the hall and there left. It was addressed to her husband, and under the present condition of affairs she did not presume to open it. Ordinarily she would have taken the trouble to have seen what it was, but as affairs were not at all as they should have been, she allowed the bundle to remain undisturbed where the expressman had thrown it. When Jack returned at noon she told him of it, and he cut the cords and unwrapped the thick papers, she meanwhile not wishing to appear curious, retired to the dining room.

Jack worked several moments before the contents of the package were reached, and then out rolled a glossy, long-haired skin of a grizzly bear, the head, with its glaring eyes and horrible teeth, being perfect. It was as beautiful a skin as possible to imagine, and for a moment he stood lost in admiration. Then he noticed that an envelope had dropped from its folds. Picking it up he read:

San Francisco,

Dear Jack—Hope you'll like the Rocky Mountain poodle. Shot him myself.
Frank Parsons.

That was all, but, like a flash, it came to Jack that poodle may have more than one meaning.

"Winnie!" he called, and his voice had the old, loving ring.

She came, looked at the bear skin, read the brief note, and in a moment realized it all.

"Oh, Jack!" was all she said, and a moment afterward he held her in his strong arms and their kisses were those of mutual reconciliation.

That night he chopped up the kennel for kindling, and were it not for the bear skin, which they call "Frisco," there would be nothing left to remind them of Their First Quarrel.

American Wives of Titled Britons.

London Letter:—And now, just a few words as to the marriages of American women among the English aristocracy. I hate taken the trouble to look into the thing, and I find that some American girls have made some "grand alliances" in England. Beginning with the present century, it appears that in 1800 Baron Ashburton married Miss Anne Bingham, of Philadelphia. In the same year Baron Erskine married a daughter of General Cadwalader, of the same city. In 1828 the Duke of Leeds married Miss Caton, of Baltimore. In 1862 Lord Abinger married a daughter of Commodore Magruder, of the United States Navy. In 1872 the Hon. Henry Wodehouse (the Earl of Kimberley's brother) married Miss King, of Georgia, the lady afterward, in 1880, marrying the Marquis of Anglesey. In 1875 Viscount Mandeville married Miss Yznaga, of New York; and about the same time Lord Randolph Churchill married Miss Jerome, of the same place. I think this is a pretty good showing. You can't go any higher than dukes and marquises in this country, for princes can only marry "royalties." And then, aside from his title, Lord Randolph Churchill is one of the rising statesmen of his time, and is on the high road to the premiership at no very distant day. I have not included the baronets, as they are very "small potatoes" with us. It may, however, be of interest to know that Sirs Robert Burnett, Thomas Hesketh, John Lister Kaye, Robert Graham, John Rose, Sidney Waterlow, and Charles Wolseley have all married American wives.

Sinful but Patriotic.

Mr. Emory Storrs, of Chicago, was dining recently in London at Minister Lowell's, and near him sat the Duke of Argyll, who during the conversation, expressed surprise that Chicago should have treated Oscar Wilde—"a man whom we think nothing of, if we think of him at all"—so well. "It's all a mistake, your grace," replied Mr. Storrs, "we had nothing to do with Wilde in Chicago." "But I certainly read in the New York and Boston papers long accounts of his reception in your city." "True, your grace," answered the Chicago lawyer; "but the recent growth of Chicago has made it the metropolis of the United States, and all the seaboard cities are jealous of her, and say spiteful things about her." Mr. Lowell, of Boston, was about to interject a remark just here, but Mr. Storrs silenced him with a significant look. After the meal, and on the way up-stairs, the American Minister touched Mr. Storrs arm, and whispered: "You got out of that very well, Storrs. Sinful, but patriotic.

Sunday in Vermont.

Last Sunday one of the pastors of the little village of Pownal was walking to church, when he saw a man with his coat off, digging in his garden. The good man beheld with grief and astonishment, and, coming up to the fence, began to recite in a solemn voice: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days thou shalt labor and do all thy work."

"See here," said the man in the garden, looking up, "be you talking to me?"

"Yes, my poor man, I am."

"Wal, you needn't worry about me, then. I ain't goin' to do any work; I'm only diggin' worms to go a-fishin' with."

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Household Miscellany.

Removing Tan.—A wash to remove tan is made of sliced cucumbers soaked in milk, applied nightly to the hands and face, and left to dry on.

Fruit Stains on Fingers.—Take half an ounce of cream of tartar, and half an ounce of salts of sorrel, mix them well together, and keep tightly closed. Rub a little on the fingers when dampened, and the stains will disappear. It will also take out ink, and remove stains from table-cloths, napkins and towels. It is sold under the name of salt of lemons, but there is no lemon in it.

To Destroy Red Ants.—Grease a plate with lard, and set it where ants congregate; place a few bits of wood so the ants can climb on the plate easily; they will forsake any food for lard; when the plate is well covered with them, turn it over a hot fire of coals; they will drop into the fire, and you can then reset the plate for another catch. A few repetitions will clean them out.

Inflamed Eyelids.—Mrs. C. M. writes: "I have used the following prescription for inflammation of the eyeball as of the eyelids, and consider it an excellent remedy. I have known it to remove cataract when the sight was nearly gone. One thing should be observed in using such washes—not to wet the finger or swab from the bottle and apply it to the eye, but to take a little from the bottle whenever using it and throw away whatever is not needed. The wash in the bottle will in this way be saved from contamination. Sulphuret of zinc as large as a pea, one teaspoonful ether, one teaspoonful laudanum, two ounces rain-water."

To Keep Furs.—Beat them thoroughly to get all the dust from them and any moth eggs that may have been deposited in them. Hang on wire frames, and put into closets lined with tar paper. Every three or four weeks beat them with rattans in the open air. The closet should be thoroughly washed, before being used, with soda and water. All small articles may be kept in boxes with enough tar paper in them to keep the moths out. The strong odor of this substance drives away or kills the moths. This method is now used by furriers in the preservation of their goods from the ravages of the moth.

Introductions.—In these common sense suggests this: The person of less degree is introduced to the person of greater degree. By universal courtesy gentlemen are introduced to ladies, unless, for example, a young lady is presented to a very distinguished or aged man. People in society know notning about etiquette books, but only do as others do, using such forms as good taste and custom suggests.

To Clean Frosted Silver Ornaments.—To clean frosted (dead) silver ornaments, disolve a lump of soda in a saucepan of boiling water, and place them in it, and leave them for a few minutes; add a small piece of yellow soap, and rub the articles while in a boiling state with a soft toothbrush. When taken out, place them in a hot oven on a brick until the desired effect be produced.

Whitewash.—Take half a bushel of freshly burned lime, slake it with boiling water; cover it during the process to keep in the steam. Strain the liquid through a fine sieve, and add to it seven pounds of salt, previously well dissolved in warm water; three pounds of boiled rice ground to a thin paste and stirred in boiling hot; one-half a pound of powdered Spanish whiting, and one pound of clean glue, which has been previously dissolved by soaking it well, and then hanging it over a slow fire in a small kettle within a larger one filled with water. Add five gallons of hot water to the mixture and let it stand a few days covered from the dust. It must be put on quite hot. About a pint of this mixture will cover a square yard. This is an excellent and a permanent whitewash.

Miscellaneous Farming Hints.

The following points favor the setting of small trees: (1) Small trees have larger roots in proportion; (2 they cost him less; (3) expressage or freight is less—expressing small trees is usually cheaper than freighting large ones, and then so much more speedy; (4) less labor handling, digging holes, etc.; (5) less exposed to high winds, which loosen roots and kill many transplanted trees; (6) planters can form heads and train them to their own liking; (7) with good care, in say five years, they will overtake the common, large-sized trees. Without good care, better not plant any size.

Here is a point from the Rural New-Yorker. Apropos of the foot-and-mouth scare: "Smut is a species of ergot, and corn is a grass; therefore smutty corn is an ergotized grass; and smutty corn produces gangrene of the extremeties and decay of the bones of the feet and tail. That is all there is of this bugaboo. Smut and mould in corn have been unusually prevalent the past season, and the consequence of a larger amount of disease in live stock. Let us recognize the simple nature of the trouble, and then sensible men will know how to apply the remedy. But a lot of charletons are posing before the amazed public, gaining reputation for knowledge by the mysteriousness of their words and their oracular manner."

The seventeen-year locust will raid parts of Virginia this year. As a contemporary remarks: "It is a blessing to the country that these voracious fellows are, by nature, prevented from making a raid all over the country the same year. They usually appear in the latter part of May, and after chattering among the grasses, trees and shrubbery, shed their shells, and disappear in six or seven weeks. These cicadæ are not usually destructive or mischievous, being unlike the locust of Egypt, which are said to have been of similar species to the "grasshoppers" of Western plains. Our seventeen-year locusts are among the most unique of organized beings, requiring nearly two decades to perfect their being, and all, barring accidents, living a given period, and dying by hordes at the end thereof.

Uncle Waldo says, in the New York Tribune, that a locust plantation may be cut off clean and marketed in from 12 to 20 years from planting, and the crop will bring from $400 to $1,000 per acre. The second crop will be ready for market in two or three years less time than the first, as the roots are stored with sap, and push a wonderful growth. One need not wait twelve or fifteen years for a return, however, for after the plantation is four years old it may be seeded to grass, and will produce enough pasture to pay a fair interest on the investment. After four years' growth the thinnings of the plantation will yield a regular income for several years, and this is particularly true of the second growth, which is dense and rapid.

M. Newgas, one of the principal extensive horse dealers of Chicago, says as follows of the grade Percheron-Normans: "Of draft horses I handle more Normans than of any other breed. They are more enduring, have better feet; are finer built, more attractive and are true to work. They are broken before they are ever harnessed. They will sell in New York, conditions being equal, for from $50 to $75 more than a Clydesdale. I advise farmers to breed their mares to Percheron-Norman horses in preference to any other breed."
—Chicago Tribune.

A farmer's wife thus suggests, through the Orange County Farmer, the idea of canning milk, which may in some cases be desirable, as, for instance, to bridge over a dairy drouth: "Visiting a farm a few years ago, some excellent coffee upon the table disclosed the presence of cream. This surprised me, for I knew the cows were dry, and there were no very near neighbors. I asked, and the answer was, 'O, that is canned milk.' Since then, I have done the same way two seasons, and intend to do so again soon. When the milk is brought in and strained, put it on to boil in a steamer, or pail set into a kettle of boiling water. As soon as it reaches the boiling point and begins to bubble, pour into glass jars already prepared and heated, and screw up immediately. Keep it where it will not freeze, and when needed it is ready for use."

Remedies for Sleeplessness.

Sleeplessness.—"1. A light supper. 2. Fold a soft white cloth twice, four inches one way and three inches the other, wring from tepid water and place at the back of the neck at the base of the brain. It will induce sleep. I have tried it for one insane with fever with good results. 3. [Dr. Franklin's remedy.) When you are awakened by uneasiness and find you cannot sleep again, get out of bed, beat up and turn your pillow, shake the bed clothes well, with at least twenty shake, then throw the bed open and let it cool; in the meanwhile continue undressed, walk about your chamber till your skin has had time to discharge its load, which it will do sooner as the air may be drier and cooler. When you begin to feel the cool air unpleasant, then return to your bed; soon you will fall asleep and your sleep will be sweet and pleasant. M."—Sometimes an empty stomach induces sleeplessness, by permitting all the blood to rush to the head. In that case a light meal should be taken as a sleep inducer.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Wicked Weight of Walking Suits.

It will not be long, shrewd observers say, before the English girl, once such a picture of beautiful bloom, will succumb to the "invaladism" of the last quarter century in this country. She is not only laced near to extinction around the waist, but the slender style of gown and coat compel an equal flatness and compression all over the chest and digestive organs. Apparently these girls are chameleons, supposed to feed on air, for there seems to be no allowance and no room for food in their economy. The English woman of the past also wore very tight stays, but her frame was allowed some expansion for breathing and comfort above and below the waist. At present the ideal figure is flat-chested, and flat, and almost concave, from throat to toe. This horrible imprisonment of the vital functions, with the hearty appetites and frequent feeding of the English habit, must in time play havoc with health and complexion. One saving chance for such a girl is her absorbing devotion to tennis; when, for purposes of the game she must get into a loose-fitting suit and wear comfortable, firm-tread shoes. Her walking costume is cruelly, heavily and criminally wrong. When will the doctors generally take the field against these enormities in dress? There is one physician already in Philadelphia who refuses to prescibe for any such patient until she has changed her style of dress, and, especially her heels. If all the fashionable doctors would have the courage to do likewise, simply denying their countenance to nervous and other sufferers, until these last are willing to dress less dangerously there would soon be a visible lessening of the average of suffering. It is not that these distorted beings die; on the contrary they live expensively useless and tortured lives.—Phila. Ledger.

Ornamenting With Real Ferns.

Many useful articles can be ornamented with real ferns, mosses and flowers. Cut out in white cardboard a set of toilet mats, draw a scallop round them, taking half the circumference of a cotton reel as a guide. Cut the scallops out with a sharp pair of scissors, and punch a hole in the center of each with a shoemaker's punch, a quarter of an inch across. The ferns, mosses, small flowers, etc., must now be prepared by pressing them with a hot iron, first covering them with one or two sheets of blotting paper. Now with a small brush cover all the under side of each leaf or flower with hot gelatine and water (half an ounce of gelatine to half a pint of water will be about the proportion), and lay it on the mat very carefully, in the position you wish it to be, pressing firmly with a soft cloth on and off for a few minutes, till it is firmly fixed. Brush over both sides and the edges with hot gelatine. It is better to give it two coats before varnishing. These mats will wash with a little soap and water if they have been thoroughly gelatined and varnished. The "stamped out" designs can be used in making this kind of mats, instead of ferns, etc.

Fancy Stock Craze.

New York Tribune:—Here are a few plain words from The Springfield Republican apropos of the "Fancy Stock Craze" (especially as, at present, it relates to Jerseys) and the otherwise reputable journals which foster it for a consideration—in the form of advertising patronage, or otherwise: "There is an inside to the great combination auction sales of imported and domestic stock in cities, that the buyers are not fully admitted to. Country animals are sent here to be washed, shampooed, combed, groomed and plumped by skillful hands, days and weeks before the sale, and then under the glare of an electric light in the excitement of a crowd, the wily auctioneer caps the climax with figures of speech that entrap the unwary. This is a 'gambling in stocks' that is literal, as some have found to their sorrow. The wonder is that some of the agricultural papers, that are usually sensible, should sell themselves so cheaply in abetting the swindle."

A Sure and Safe Insecticide.

The frequent praise of kerosene and milk to destroy insects is not illy bestowed. Professor A. J. Cook has for years, as reported in The New York Tribune, found that kerosene mixed with soapsuds and sponged on plants is quick death to plant-lice. Last summer he and his students experimented quite thoroughly with kerosene and milk—using sour milk, as cheaper—and found that by stirring well it remained mixed for some minutes, giving ample time to apply it. They tried it on many plants, and found that applied one of the oil to five of milk did no harm to any plant. That this stregth might in some cases be injurious to some very tender foliage is possible, but they found no such case, but found the mixture a quickly destrnstive to all plant-lice; to cabbage larvæ, both the green and striped; to the old black squash bug, and various grubs and beetles, like the grape flea-beetle and the grub of the same. This is not new to your readers, but may prove to be a timely reminder.—Amateur.

Character of the Horse.

In the section of a horse, strength, soundness, size, form, health, age, pedigree, color, etc., are all taken into consideration, but the good or bad qualities, the character, receive little attention. Still nothing adds to or detracts more from the animal's real value. I think this indifference arises from a common notion that the character cannot be determined beforehand. But it is revealed as plainly as are soundness, age and strength. The plan to be adopted is this: Select two horses whose dispositions you are familar with—one gentle, one vicious. The points to be observed are all about the head. Study the head well. Look first at the eyes, then the nasal contour, then the ears, and afterward all the other points about the head. When you have done this select other horses whose characters you know. In a surprisingly short time you will have learned wherein the eye, nose, ears, etc., of a vicious horse differ from these organs of a gentle horse. Then select two horses again—one intelligent and one dumb. Study the same points, most particularly the eyes, however, and you will soon be able to distinguish an intelligent from a dumb horse.

In this way a person of ordinary ability can learn to distinguish the character of a horse in a few months of study. The information thus gained may save him a runaway, perhaps a limb of life, and it is especially valuable to one who has young horses to train. It is apparent that a nervous, excitable horse should not receive the same treatment accorded a heavy, sluggish animal. It May be necessary to use the whip on the latter when to apply it to the former would be the worst policy imaginable. So a horse that is very sensitive, thin-skinned and hot-blooded, or one vicious and treacherous, should be treated entirely different in training from the kind, docile, "family horse." Ignorance of these facts very often increase, instead of diminish, the faults of the horses. Accorded right treatment the high-strung colt might be reduced to submissiveness; but wrongly treated he is rendered vicious. And I have found that wrong treatment of colts in training proceeded far more often from failure to critically distinguish traits of character than from any other fault.
—J. M. Stahl.

A Foolhardy Exploit.

When in Garibaldi's British Legion at the bombardment of Capua, a soldier, who afterward became Brigadier General MacIver, was challenged for a basket of wine to show himself over the breastworks "for one short minute." The next minute he sprang on the parapet. Zip—zip—zip—zip whistled the bullets around him, and there he stood as calmly as if on parade, firing and reloading and still without cesation the zip—zip—zip of the leaden messenger of death sighing around him and even striking near him, like a fierce storm of hail. Ere long his cap was shot off his head, his loose red Garibaldian shirt was perforated, and his body actually grazed in many places, and yet he kept his stand. Each instant his comrades expected to see him fall back dead or mortally wounded, but he never flinched nor stirred even except to load or discharge his rifle. Most of the officers were almost paralyzed at his temerity, but at length one of them called out: "For heaven's sake, MacIver come down! You have tempted Providence too long." Thus adjured, the young Hilander fired a parting shot from his rifle, and then coolly lighted a cigar with his face still to the enemy. Then he turned deliberately round and jumped down amongst his astonished companions, having been five minutes on the parapet.

Every Person a Lunatic Now and Then.

Prof David Swing says: The fact that a druggist of this city has ended a human life by putting up the wrong medicine awakens much indignation. He says many customers were in the store; he was in a hurry; he put up morphine instead of some similar drug. The inquiry arises whether the clerk is able to fill an order only when he has no customers in the shop? How empty must be the shop in order to secure safety? Must the street in front of the drug store also be empty? What if a fire engine goes by? What if a dog fight occurs while the druggist is reaching for quinine? Is he justified in taking down strychnia? What if his mother-in-law has come to visit him?

Such questions come up and properly; but there is another side to the fact of erring druggists, and that is, that most persons are crazy part of the time. The exceptions are rare. Each one is now and then a fool of the most complete order of species. All the law and penalties in the world will not avail to make a druggist or anybody else have his full senses through all his life. Crazy moments or seconds will come. A wise man will step backwards off a porch or into a mud-puddle, a great philosopher will hunt for the specs that are in his hand or on his forehead, a hunter will sometimes shoot himself or his dog, a barber will sometimes forget his job and slice off a piece of a chin or an ear or the nose. A girl at work at Marshal Field's had been feeding a great clothing knife for 10 years. Last week she watched the knife come down slowly upon her hand. Too late she woke out of her stupor with one hand gone. For a few seconds her mind had failed and she sat by her machine a temporary lunatic and had watched the knife approach her own hand.

The man recently murdered on North Clark street, of Chicago, saw the enemy come up with murder on his face, saw him draw a revolver, and, instead of making a lightning spring at the man, he stood bewildered and thus fell dead: His reason left him in the second of his greatest need.

One of the most distinguished professors in one of our colleges was teaching near a canal. Walking along one evening in summer he walked as deliberately into the canal as he had been walking along the patch a second before. He was brought to his senses by the water and mud and the absurdity of the situation. He had on a new suit of clothes and a new silk hat, but though the damage was thus great he still laughs over his adventure.

Our mail collectors find in the iron boxes along the streets all sorts of papers and articles which have been put in by some hand from whose motions the mind has become detached for a second. A glove, a pair of spectacles, a deed, a mortgage, a theater ticket goes in and on goes the person holding on to the regular letter which should have been deposited. This is called absent-mindedness, but this is a brief lunacy. A lunatic is a person whose mind is habitually out of balance.

Various Short Things.

The desertions in the British army in 1883 were 3,717 altogether. Desertion is prevalent almost exclusively among the very young soldiers. Of the 4,317 cases reported last year only 617, or just one-sixth, were those of men having over three years' service.

Lieutenant Abercrombie will next month leave Portland, Ore., with an expedition to investigate the resources of Alaska. He expects to travel about five thousands miles by November, making a collection of furs and minerals, and taking photographs of the country.

Taxas forty years ago was practically a desert and the handful of settlers lived entirely on game. To-day there are more than 10,000 000 cattle, sheep, horses, mules, and swine in the state, and the cotton crop last year was worth more than the cotton crop of the entire United States in 1843.

The Rev. Dr. Wright, a distinguished A. M. of Trinity College, Dublin, has created some sensation by an article in which he says that many of the Fellows of that University do not believe in devine revelation or the existence of a personal God. Several are, at the best, agnostics, if not atheists. There is no way for disciplining a Fellow or Professor for erroneous views, and so it is a propaganda of skepticism.

Major Burke, Manager of the New Orleans exhibition, has chartered the Great Eastern, to be used as a hotel. It will leave Liverpool in September, loaded with exhibits. After they have been landed the vessel will be thoroughly cleaned and will be used as a hotel, under the charge of a skillful caterer. It has 350 state-rooms, and it will be located almost within the exposition grounds.

According to the new code in Mexico divorce is made possible. It being a Roman Catholic country, and divorce is not sanctioned by the church, but as the church has been completely separated from the state, and only civil marriage is recognized, it is only a logical consequence that divorce should have a place in the statutes. The divorce law defines that a divorce shall not absolutely annul the marriage tie, but shall suspend some of its features; it provides for separation, alimony and care of children.

A strange case, which puzzled the inhabitants of Pawtucket, R. I., was the finding of a large quantity of little eels in a street puddle, made by a heavy shower the other day. There were nearly a hundred of them, squirming, lively, and from an inch to three inches in length. The prevailing theory is that they came down with the rain.

Most bells were originally feminine. Now the two or three called by Christian names in England are masculine. The most celebrated, Great Tom, at Oxford, was originally named "Mary Tresham," the Vice-Chancellor of the period, writes: "Oh, beautiful Mary, how musically she sounds." She has done little to belie this reputation since she became Tom. Once only, in the year 1800, Tom got into disgrace by a series of inconsistent strikings, which greatly alarmed the undergraduates, who divided in opinion as to whether there was an earthquake, the Dean was dead, or the college on fire.

Ten millions of votes will most likely be cast at the election which is to take place in November. The votes cast at the election of 1880 numbered 9,193,743, which showed an increase of 782,997 over the election of 1876.

Immigration to this country this year has fallen off about 20 per cent. Our exports are also 20 per cent. behind the volume of 1883. Under these circumstances, notwithstanding the country is rich and money plentiful, it is an excellent time for economy and retrenchment.

It is a suggestive illustration of the sweeping character of military conscription in France that the chamber of deputies, as the cable reports, should have refused to allow young men training for holy orders to be exempted from military service. The value of a man as a fighting machine is, among the military powers of Europe, of much more consequence than his value as a member of civil society. In most countries preparation for the church is attended with no other combative tendencies than the conflict of creeds; but where society is based upon the sword, it is natural that the cassock should have to yield to it.

Section 4,747 of the United States Revised Statutes provides that "no sum of money due or to become due, to any pensioner, shall be liable to attachment, levy or seizure, by or under any legal or equitable process whatever, whether the sum remains with the pension office or any officer or agent thereof, or is in course of transmission to the pensioner entitled thereto, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of such pensioner." In the recent case of Robion vs. Walker, in which the interpretation of that section was involved, the Kentucky Court of Appeals held that pension money received from the United States is exempt from seizure for debt while it is being transmitted to the pensioner, but not after it is actually received by him.

Judge Gildersleeve, of New York, in his address to the Grand Jury, congratulated the police upon their success in bringing into subjection the common thief and burglar. But he was grieved to note the existence of another class of criminals produced by the spirit of extravagance and speculation who threatened the community with dire calamity. "While in obedience to the law," he said, "we are punishing the low thieves from the sloughs and slums of the city for stealing small sums, let us not neglect the guilty in high places who steal large sums and are amenable to the same law." Only in this way can a cessation of the gigantic thefts and swindles that have been brought to light in New York be brought about. If the enforcement of the law against small criminals has had a salutary effect, a similar remedy for a great criminal ought to be equally efficacious. The remedy is certainly worth trying.

Bismarck has fallen into disfavor with the workingmen of Germany. A few days ago he stopped at Friedrichsruhe on the way from his summer residence to Berlin. It became noised about that he was stopping at the hotel and very soon a great crowd collected, workingmen composing the majority. Pretty soon the cry was started, "Down with Bismarck," and the mob responded with insulting yells and epithets. The man of iron and blood viewed the hostile demonstration with savage eyes, and, boiling with rage, ordered his servants to summon the police and assist in dispersing the mob. The sight of his liveried servants only increased the tumult, and it required considerable work on the part of the authorities to quiet matters down. When once safely out of Friedrichsruhe Bismarck delivered a long homily on "the ingratitude of the people" to those who were in attendance upon him.

The House Committee on the Reform of the Civil Service has submitted a unanimous report against repealing the reform law of last year. The committee consists of Messrs. Mutchler, of Pennsylvania; Cox, of New York; Clements, of Georgia; Hoblitzell, of Maryland; Finerty, of Illinois; Barksdale, of Mississippi; Seymour, of Connecticut; Robertson, of Kentucky, 8 democrats, and Bingham, of Pennsylvania; Phelps, of New Jersey; Millard, of New York; Lyman, of Massachusetts, and Hitt, of Illinois, 5 republicans. The report is not only unanimous, but it is emphatic and unqualified. It recognizes the evils of "patronage;" it condemns the "spoils system;" it attributes the maintenance of the system to both parties, and holds both responsible for the duty of uprooting it. It expresses the conviction of the committee that much good has already been done, and that much more can be done. And it all concludes as follows: "Your committee, entirely satisfied with the thorough, conscientious and non-partisan work of the Civil Service Commission, are justified in the belief that its continuance will aid in a large degree in eradicating the prevalent evils of the civil service of the government, remove just complaint, and restore public confidence in the work performed by the subordinate officials. Special cablegrams from Washington announcing that the United States government has received no communication from England concerning American dynamite conspiracies against the British government, and meditates no suppressive action, have kindled anew the feeling of irritation against the American authorities.

Secretary Lincoln and Gen. Sheridan, coming west on the Fort Wayne limited express, tendered their passes, but were informed that it was not a paper train. Sheridan remonstrated, but the conductor persisted that they must pay their fare or he would stop the train at the next station for them to get off, and proceeded to carry this programme into execution, when Phil paid his money and continued his journey.

As was announced when Minister Sargent retired, the president and secretary of state have determined to leave the German mission vacant until Chancellor Bismarck learns how to treat respectfully a representative of this government. As an act of retaliation, Bismarck has decided to suspend relations with the United States, and Baron Eisendecker, the German minister, presented to the secretary of state his letter of recall. They visited the president and the usual speeches of regret, good wishes, etc., were made.

The speaker has laid before the house a communication from the attorney general, transmitting a letter from the United States district attorney of the District of Columbia concerning the trial of the case of Hallett Kilbourn vs. J. G. Thompson, saying: I fear that unless congress shall either direct that the judgment which now stands for $20,000 shall be paid, or shall modify the laws so that the connection of the government with this case shall cease when final action shall have been taken on the bill of exceptions by the supreme court of the United States, the government may have to pay a much larger sum than $20,000.

Frank L. Loring, of Flemming & Merriam "Fund W." fame, was taken into custody at Chicago by United States marshal and conveyed to the county jail, where he will be required to serve the sentence of a year's imprisonment imposed upon him by Judge Blodgett, beside paying a fine of $500. His partner, John Flemming, is at present in Dakota, but is expected here in two or three days to join Loring in his enforced retirement.

Mrs. Charles Wright, a young widow of Toulon, Ill., retired to her bed chamber and made an attempt to hang herself, but the rope was broken in the attempt. She then procured a butcher-knife and hacked her throat in a frightful manner. Then she stabbed herself with a pair of scissors, inflicting a ghastly wound. She next repaired to the medicine chest of her late husband, who had been a druggist, and mixing together four or five poisons swallowed the deadly dose. Shortly after this last desperate attempt, she was discovered in an insensible condition and the services of a physician secured, who succeeded in saving her life. She still avows a determination to die.

The Bank of Miner county, located at Howard, Da., has suspended. White & Widner are the proprietors of the bank, which is a private concern, and in the banking report for last January was given a capital of $10,000, and a surplus of $2,500. The firm was formerly White and Kandall, but Mr. Widner came from Alexander, Da., recently and bought Kendall's interest.

A Dane named Hans Frederick Morck, aged about twenty-seven, left Lemay, Southern's [illegible] about three miles north of the Brule river [illegible] American Exchange bank, Duluth, but nothing has been seen or heard of Morck since. Foul play is suspected.

Edmond Yates, of the World, has got himself involved in another libel suit. The World recently contained an article professing to give details of certain dishonest practices in the career of Edward Legge, a well known war correspondent of the London papers, the author of "Wayside Sketches" and "Killed at Saarbrucken," and the originator and former editor of the Whitehall Review. Mr. Legge promptly responded with a suit for damages.

The Miner county bank at Howard, Dak., has closed its doors. The proprietors were W. W. White and Henry Widner, doing business under the firm name of White & Widner. It is not known yet what the amount of deposits were. The bank was opened in the spring of 1882 by Mr. White, formerly of Cresco, Iowa; later, Dr. H. Kendall bought an interest in the bank, which he held for some months, finally dissolving partnership and retiring. Mr. Widner subsequently became a partner, having formerly been in the banking business in Alexandria, Hanson county.

The Mahdi's famous lieutenant, Osman Digma, is described by one of his soldiers to be of a tall and slender build, with pale complexion, large open eyes and a fine moustache. His countenance express courage and energy. He is almost always on horseback, and wears over his left shoulder a veil such as the Mohammedans of old wore. He generally carries a very long musket, and under his mantle a long sword. He has one wife and three children.

London Cable: Prince Bismarck has discovered another leak of the fighting material of Germany, and is vigorously protesting against it. The government of Holland, in the prosecution of its interminable war with Sumatra for the possession of Acheen, has been actively recruiting its colonial army, and, it is said, has induced many able-bodied Germans to enlist for this purpose. Prince Bismarck is very indignant over this loss of fighting men, and has addressed an angry note on the subject to Jonkheer Van Der Haevon, the Dutch ambassador at Berlin.

The New Rates on Newspapers.

The following act is now in force:

Be it enacted, etc., That the rate of postage on newspapers and periodicals of the second class, when sent by others than publishers or news agents, shall be one cent for each four ounces, or fractional part thereof, and shall be fully prepaid by postage stamps affixed to said matter. Approved June 9, 1884.

Hereafter postmasters will receive for mailing newspapers and periodical publications of the second class when sent by other than the publisher or news agent, at the rate of one cent for each four ounces or fractional part thereof.

End of Spaulding Land Cases.

Yankton, Dak., Special.—The cases of the United States vs. D. J. Spaulding, commonly known as the Spaulding land cases, which have been on trial here, have ended in the acquittal of the defendant on all charges. Three cases were tried, one for forgery and two for presenting fradulent pension papers. On the first the jury stood ten for acquittal and two for conviction for thirty-two hours before an agreement was reached, on the two second, the jury deliberated but fifteen minutes. Several other similar cases pending against Mr. Spaulding were thereupon dismissed. The verdict was received with satisfaction, there being ample evidence that Mr. Spaulding's offense, if it had been committed, was unintentional, and arose out of some new construction of the law. He is a wealthy Wisconsin lumberman, and brother-in-law of Congressman W. T. Price.

A Terrifying Lightning Episode.

Some forty-five hundred people who were in the colliseum at Minneapolis, Thursday afternoon, had an experience to be remembered. The dress circle and balcony were well filled, and the stage presented a bright and cheerful appearance. The full chorus of nearly a thousand children were seated in the great sounding board, the girls dressed in white.

Throughout the entertainment there was the occasional disturbance of rumbling distant thunder with flashes of lightning that seemed to trace the bright wood finish. One or two sharp peals added to the apprehension, when suddenly there was a loud, sharp report, apparently in the space between the ceiling and roof, the crash of falling glass from the centre skylight, and confusion worse confounded. People started to their feet; faces blanched, and their fear was written on many faces. A panic was threatened among the children and in the audience, and it was a moment of intense excitement, and wonderment and questioning in every look.

As the thundershower passed over it singled out for an electric shock the gilt ball on the top of the flag staff in the center of the building, the highest point that presented itself. The electric current flashed down the pole, shattered the apex of the building, ran along a timber, attacked a bolt, followed along to an electric light wire, and thence made its way without further injury to the building and to an electric lamp and passed outside the building and to the head of the steps from the railroad, which it shattered, and then buried itself in the ground. It was not an easy task to meet the emergency entirely among the children, and the excitement of the little ones was added to by the intercession of anxious parents, one alarmed mother mounting the stage from the orchestra while it was playing to where her child was to be found

The Iowa Pharmacy Law.

Letter from Des Moines.

Last week I gave you the decision of the state board of pharmacy as to their construction of the statute relating to the sale of liquor by druggists, which was that under the pharmacy law of 1880 and 1882, they were authorized to sell and dispose of liquor for medicinal purposes without obtaining a permit from the county board of supervisors. Now comes the attorney general with an elaborate opinion addressed to the board, in which he reverses their decision and holds—

First—That the supplemental act of 1882, printed without number or chapter, and which was not approved by the governor is invalid.

Second—That under the pharmacy law of 1880, as mentioned by chapter 137, laws of 1882, druggists were not required to get a permit.

Third—That chapter 143, laws of 1884, repeals section 1540 of the code, and provides a substitute, which provides a penalty against any person selling liquor for any purpose, unless he has a permit; that the pharmacy law of 1880 and 1882 is conflict with this substitute; that chapter 143, laws of 1884, repeals all laws in conflict therewith.

Fourth—That after July 4 a druggist must get a permit to sell liquor for medicinal purposes, and that his application for a permit must be signed by a majority of the legal voters in the ward or township in which he resides or does business.

Fifth—That the act of 1884 does not change the code relative to the granting of permits, and that the power is still in the board of supervisors, and is discretionary.

This settles a much vexed question among pharmacists in this state from and after Fourth of July, and those familiar with the history of the legislation upon the subject will concede that the attorney general's opinion is in harmony with the object and intent of the legislature.

Suits Against Grant, Ward and Fish.

Suits involving $50,000 have been instituted at St. Antonio, Iowa, against Grant & Ward and James D. Fish of New York. Elihu Spicer is the plantiff. The first suit alleges that on July 11, 1882, Ward executed and delivered to Spicer a prommissory note for $20,000, with 5 per cent. interest until paid, and to secure the payment of same, deposited with the defendent, 584 shares of Yonkers smelter stock, 1,000 shares of Freeland mining stock, and 3,374 shares of Tabor mining stock. Spicer seeks to collect his $20,000 and interest by bringing suit in this county, and suing and garnishment against Berg & Co., of this city, who are indebted heavily to Ward. The petition of C. H. Mallory & Co., against Grant & Ward alleges that April 14, 1883, Grant & Ward executed six promissory notes for $5,000 each, payable to James D. Fish, of the Marine National bank; that Fish endorsed in blank, and for a consideration transferred them to the plantiffs. Garnishment against Berg & Co. was also issued in this suit. Mallory and Spicer gave garnishment bonds for $100,000.

The Rascally Washington Bankers.

The Washington Star says: Disclosures show that the failure of the banking house of Middleton & Co., was not only most disgraceful, but one of the most disastrous on record. Property left for safe keeping, good margins on stocks, charity funds, and all of the deposits, and in fact everything, has been swept away and used by this firm until it is doubtful if it pays a cent or a mill on the dollar. It is shown that they have been giving funds to make purchases which they have simply passed to their own credit and spent. Dickman, formerly Middleton's partner in New York, said that if the Middletons had any defense or explanations to make, they could very easily appear before the creditors' committee and show if these large sums were lost through failures in ordinary business channels, or had been, as openly charged, deliberately stolen. Some of the officers were before the grand jury recently endeavoring to secure the indictment of the Middletons for obtaining money under false pretenses. The developments are not yet made public, but promises some very ugly features.

A Result of Religious Frenzy.

Wheeling W. Va., Special: A boy named Andy Adams attended a series of meetings held by the minister of a Baptist church on North creek, near here, in the district schoolhouse. He became deeply impressed and went insane on the subject of religion. The family consisted of the boy, a sister of 8 years, and the mother, who lived in a sparsely settled neighborhood. The non-appearance of the family last Monday caused apprehension, and when the neighbors called they found that the mother and daughter were both dead. The former had her head mashed and the latter's throat was cut from ear to ear. The boy was found crouched in a corner. In reply to questions he said the Lord told him to offer his mother and sister as a sacrifice, and would bring them back to life again. The mother was killed with an axe, and the sister's throat was cut with a butcher knife. The boy is in custody. The religious meetings have been stopped.

Lynching in the Black Hills.

Alexander Fiddler, a notoriously hard character, was lynched at Sturgis Saturday morning the 14th. He and two soldiers named Hews and Brown assaulted and robbed an emigrant named Schramm of $300, near Fort Meade, Wednesday evening. In the scuffle Hews was shot in the arm, and upon being questioned at the hospital disclosed the names of his confederates and the particulars of the assault. The parties were arrested. At 4 this morning Fiddler was taken from the officers by fifteen masked men and conducted to the outskirts of the town where, after threats of hanging, he promised to show where the money was concealed and did so; whereupon he was taken into a ravine and hanged on general principles.

Last Week's Failures.

There were 184 failures in the United States reported to Breadstreet's during the week, ending 14th against 182 to the preceding week, and 165, 104 and 60 in the corresponding weeks of 1883, 1882 and 1881 respectively. About 77 per cent were those of small traders whose capital was less than $5,000. Among the suspensions reported were: Herron & Spencer, wholesale cocoanuts, New York City; Howard D. Thomas & Co., manufacturers of cotton and woolen goods, Philadelphia; State bank of West Virginia, Charlestown; Leory, Moore & Co., bankers, Greenville, Mich.; A. Carriere & Sons, exchange dealers and B. J. Weats, Son & Co., chemicals and fertilizers, Baltimore.

Fatal Railroad Collision.

A Philadelphia telegram says, the morning accommodation train from Atlantic City, on the Camden & Atlantic railroad, collided with a special Sunday school excursion train, ten miles east of Camden, at 9 o'clock Saturday morning. Both trains were running at the usual speed, and meeting on a curve, struck each other with terrific force. Following is a list of the victims: Killed—Engineer Baxter, Engineer Palmer, A. G. Edwards, Conductor Smith, Baggage Master Vaughan, Mail Agent Wylie, Fireman Barker, Frank Fenton superintendent of the road.

The collision was the result of misunderstanding of telegraph orders.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

The Mexican soldiers' pension bill was taken up in the senate on Monday. The pending amendment was laid on the table, being Riddleberger's amendment to strike out the phrase "for the suppression of rebellion," from Hoar's amendment providing pensions for soldiers who fought "in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion." Mr. Williams moved to lay Hoar's amendment on the table. Carried—yeas 25, nays 15. Hanley, Miller, and Platt (rep.) voting with the democrats.

In the house, bills were introduced amending the act authorizing the formation of national banking associations and repealing the internal revenue tobacco tax. Representative Dingley's bill regarding national banking associations provides that in all suits at law or in equity now pending or hereafter brought to enforce the liability of shareholders in national banking associations for contracts and debts and engagements with such associations to the extent of their stock therein at par value thereof in accordance with the provisions of the revised statues, shareholders shall have the right to set up in defense thereof equitable discharge of the liability by voluntary payment before the assessment is levied upon said stock by the controller of the currency to enforce said liability, or any other equitable defense which such stockholders may have to such suits.

The house Tuesday considered bills coming from the committee on Indian affairs. Most of the session was devoted to Mr. Nelson's bill to open the Red Lake Indian reservation in Minnesota. Mr. Nelson made a very clear and comprehensive explanation of his bill. He said he thought there was some misapprehension in regard to it. It had been charged that the bill was in the interest of pine land rings, and gotten up to defraud the Indians. He effectually answered this charge by showing that this bill has been so carefully drawn as to prevent any fraud upon the Indians whatever, and that it was against the interest of pine land speculation. It is doubtful whether it will come up again this season, but Mr. Nelson says he will avail himself of the first oppotunity to call it up again.

In considering the river and harbor bill in the house on Tuesday, the following items of interest to the northwest were agreed to:

Improving harbor at Ahnapee, Wis., $15,000; Green Bay, Wis., $10,000; Kenosha, Wis., $5,000; Kewaunee, Wis., $18,000; Manitowoc, Wis., $15,000; Menominee, Wis., $10,000; Milwaukee, bay, Wis., $85,000; Oconto, Wis., $15,000; Stockholm, Lake Pepin, Wis., $15,000; Port Washington, Wis., $10,000; Racine, Wis., $7,000; Superior Bay and entrance, Wis., $45,000; Sheboygan, Wis., $28,000; Sturgeon Bay canal, Wis., $10,000; Two Rivers, Wis., $8,000; Ice harbor, Dubuque, Iowa, $20,000; Duluth, $45,000.

The house has passed a resolution reported by the committee on ways and means, for an adjournment on the 30th of June, but it is not probable that the necessary business can be completed by that date. The appropriation bills are very far behind, and could not be completed, even if the house should hold session night and day. Of the thirteen regular appropriation bills only two have become laws.

The senate Wednesday went into secret legislative session on the item in the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill appropriating $250,000 to cover the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality act. The bill passed.

The house passed the bill providing for the construction of the Hennepin canal.

The following nominations were made to the senate by the president:

Patrick B. Sinnol of Oregon, agent of the Indians at Grand Ronde agency, Oregon. Registers of land offices A. W. Rothert of Coma, Cheyenne, Wyo.; O. P. Chisholm, Illinois, Bozeman, Mont.

Much to the discomfiture of the friends of the Hennepin canal scheme, the appropriation for it was stricken out of the river and harbor bill by the house Thursday. Mr. Oates of Alabama made the motion to strike out, which was carried by a vote of 140 to 102. The vote against this motion was composed chiefly of Western and Northwestern members. The heaviest vote for it came from the Eastern and Middle states and along the Mississippi river south of St. Louis. The vote to strike out was also largely made up from members who do not share in the appropriation bill, and who are naturally opposed to it. The Republicans chiefly voted for the Hennepin canal, but the Democrats, under the lead of Randall, generally voted for the motion to strike out.

The river and harbor bill passed the house by a vote of 156 to 107.

In the senate, Thursday, the 12th, a final vote on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, and the bill passed—yeas, 38; nays, 2—Vance and Van Wyck. The bill as passed is almost precisely as reported from the senate committee on appropriations, making an addition of $800,000 to the bill as reported from the house.

On Friday Mr. Brown obtained unanimous consent to take up the bill to require the payment in cash to the State of Georgia of $25,555, appropriate for that state by an act passed in March, 1873, to refund to Georgia certain moneys expended for the common defense in 1777. Mr. Dolph moved an amendment to include $35,000 for Oregon and $40,000 for California to refund moneys expended to those states in the suppression of the Modoc hostilities. After a long discussion, Mr. Ingalls moved to recommit the bill to the committee on claim. Adjourned to Monday the 16th.

In the House, the whole Friday session was occupied on the postal bill. A protracted discussion arose on the senate amendment in changing the amount for payment to letter carriers and the incidental expenses of free delivery systems, to $4,000,000, $45,000 of which is to be used in the discretion of the postmaster general for the establishment of the free delivery system in cities where it is not now established. There were very strong speeches on both sides of the house in favor of the increase, and the result was that the amendment was agreed to by a decided majority. The conference committee agreed to the increased appropriation of $12,750,000 for inland mail transportation. This clause provides that—

If any railroad company shall fail or refuse to transport the mails when required by the postoffice department upon the fastest trains run upon the road the company shall have its pay reduced 50 per cent of the amount provided by law.

The senate struck out all that part of the bill reducing the compensation of all nonsubsidized railroads for the transportation of mail 5 percentum per annum and the subsidized railroads to 50 percentum of the compensation authorized to be paid to other companies. The amendment was disagreed to by the conference committee.

The treaty which has been under consideration in the senate committee on foreign relations, providing for an international copyright and patent system, and which has already been ratified and promulgated by twenty-four governments, was reported adversely by the committee to the senate, and after a brief discussion rejected.

English bicyclists and tricyclists propose to have a cycling path of their own all the way from London to Brighton, under a special act of parliament. The track will be about 45 miles long, starting a few miles out of London and running to Brighton, and will be 18 feet wide paved with asphalt, and of easy gradients. It is estimated to cost an average of £7000 per mile, or £315,000 in all. The Brighton to London road is the favorite one for South county cyclists, hundreds of wheelmen going and returning within the day during the season. It is estimated that a five-shilling fee would be very readily paid by 300 cyclists a day during eight months of the year for excursion tickets from London to Brighton and back, besides hundreds of smaller fees for intermediate distances.

The growth of feeling against the Jews in the Austrian capital is shown by the announcement that an anti-Semitic daily newspaper is to be established at Vienna. It is said that the first number will make its appearance at the beginning of October, and that ample funds have been obtained to insure the success of the enterprise.

Charles Goldstein, a defaulting merchant of Selma, Ala., was arrested at Quebec Friday night, on a writ of capias issued by the superior court, by R. D. McGibbon, attorney for Messrs. H. B. Claflin & Co., of New York, for $24,036. He paid the claim in cash and being released he sailed in the Circassian for Europe as he had intended.

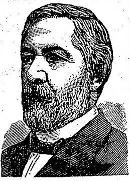
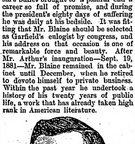
BLAINE AND LOGAN

Portraits and Biographies of the Republican Candidate for President and Vice President.



JAMES G. BLAINE.

Mr. Blaine was born at Indian Hill Farm, Washington county, Pa., Jan. 31, 1830. His grandfather was with Washington at Valley Forge, and named his county after his old chief. At fifteen Blaine went to school at Lancaster, Ohio, living in the house of Tom Ewing, then secretary of the treasury. In 1850, he graduated from Washington college and became tutor in the Blue Lick Springs, military academy. There he met Miss Stanwood, a Massachusetts girl, teaching in the Millersburg female seminary, twenty miles off, and married her. He returned, in a year to Pennsylvania and studied law, but never practiced. In 1852 he moved to Maine, and with aid from the Stanwoods' became editor, of the Kennebec Journal, and later of the Portland Advertiser. In 1858 he was elected to the legislature; and five times enjoyed re-election, being speaker the last two terms. In 1862 he went to congress. His first term was spent in quiet studying, but after that he came prominently before the country and was elected speaker of the Forty-first, Forty-second and Forty-third congresses. In June, 1876, Mr. Blaine was appointed by the governor of Maine to fill the vacancy in the senate caused by the resignation of Lot M. Morrill, who had been made secretary of the treasury. On the meeting of the Maine legislature in January, 1877, Mr. Blaine was promptly elected for the full term ending March 4, 1883. In both branches he was a persistent and terrible debater against the South as massed on the Democratic side of house and senate. In 1876 Mr. Blaine's nomination seemed certain at Cincinnati. His rivals were B. H. Bristow, Roscoe Conkling and John F. Hartranft, governor of Pennsylvania. So long as there was a possibility of Blaine's nomination, the supporters of Bristow, Conkling and Hartranft remained steadfast. On one ballot Blaine came within a half dozen votes of enough to nominate. So certain were his supporters that he would secure the prize that they telegarphed to all parts of the country that he had the nomination in his grasp. The next ballot, however, was a surprising one. Ohio and Pennsylvania led off for Hayes of Ohio, and a stampede setting in, he was nominated by an overwhelming vote amid great excitement. Mr. Blaine took his defeat philosophically, and turned his eyes toward 1880. He went into the Chicago convention of that year with 284 votes. Gen. Grant, Sherman, Edmunds and E. B. Washburne, were against him. His choice being impossible, his supporters nominated Garfield, and Mr. Blaine became secretary of state in the new cabinet, and the controlling spirit in the administration. Mr. Blaine was with the president the morning of July 2 in 1881, when the assassin's bullet brought to a painful end a career so full of promise, and during the president's eighty days of suffering he was daily at his bedside. It was fitting that Mr. Blaine should be selected as Garfield's eulogist by congress, and his address on that occasion is one of remarkable force and beauty. After Mr. Arthur's inauguration—Sept. 19, 1881—Mr. Blaine remained in the cabinet until December, when he retired to devote himself to private business. Within the past year he undertook a history of his twenty years of public life, a work that has already taken high rank in American literature.



THE VICE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE.

Gen. John A. Logan was born Feb. 9, 1826, in Jackson county, Illinois, and is of Irish parentage. He was a lieutenant in the Mexican war, and was admitted to the bar in 1852, being elected to the legislature the same year, and in the office of prosecuting attorney of the Third judicial district, holding that office until 1857. He was re-elected to the state legislature in 1853, 1856 and 1857, and was presidential elector on the Buchanan and Breckenridge ticket. In 1858 and 1860 he was elected representative at congress. In July, 1861, he enlisted in time to be in the first battle of Bull Run. His Bravery in Grant's Northern Mississippi movements met with a promotion to the rank of major general. At Vicksburg his column led the entrance on June 25, and he was the first military governor. He succeeded Sherman at the head of the fifteenth army corps in November, 1863, and when McPerson lost his life, on the 22d of July, Logan succeeded him and commanded the army of the Tennessee, going with Sherman on the march to the sea. From the close of the war to 1871 Gen. Logan served in the house. In that year he was defeated for re-elected in 1877 by David Davis. But was returned at the expiration of Gov Oglesby's term in 1879. He is a man of great decision, some learning, and is a lingering monument of this machine period in American politics. He was Grant's lieutenant in 1880, and is suspected of an alliance with Blaine this year.

Children in the Frigid Zone.

When Lieut. Greeley comes home (he must be Capt. Greeley then), he will have a great deal to tell us that will be interesting. Mere visitors to strange places and peoples are not apt to find out very much about them, and what little they do find out is likely to be wrong. That is the reason why we know so little about the Indians. It is necessary to live among a people, to understand their language, to get their good will and confidence, to play with their children and converse familiarly with their elders, in order to know them.

Lieut. Ray, of the United States Navy, returned a few months ago from Point Barrow in latitude 74 degrees, where he had been stationed for two years to observe the weather and collect facts concerning it for the Washington weather bureau. He was placed in that northern region to do what Lieut. Greeley was expected to do at a point much farther north. His party consisted of ten men, a pilot, a naval surgeon, seven sailors, and himself.

They had a wonderfully interesting time up there in the cold. The lowest temperature during their stay was fifty-six degrees below zero; the highest, fifty above zero; and they had a breeze one day in January (a gentle Arctic zephyr), the velocity of which was ascertained to be one hundred and thirty miles an hour. Little snow and less rain fall in that region, and there is no thunder and lightning.

In their snug house, built by themselves, of rough timber and lined with matched boards, they found no difficulty in keeping warm. It is not until you go two hundred miles further north that you reach the real Arctic cold, ranging from ninety below zero to twenty above. With precautions, people can get along with some comfort where the average temperature of the year is as high as seven above, as it was with them. In the spring, the dandelion bloomed abundantly about them.

Near their station were two small tribes of Esquimaux, each consisting of about one hundred and forty people. Lieut. Ray, after closely observing them for nearly two years, pronounces them the best-governed and happiest people in the world, particularly the children. Though he never saw a child punished in any way during his residence among them, yet he found the children always will-behaved.

At times there would be as many as twenty-five children at the post, and the conduct of all of them was so gentle and correct that the Americans could not help contrasting it with that of other children who play under the stars and stripes. No matter how many tools, garments or dainties might be scattered about unguarded, no boy or girl of one of these tribes ever so much as touched one of them; nor would any child, even the smallest, enter a tent unless invited.

The children are exceedingly beloved by their elders. Although boys are valued more highly than girls, yet any kind of a child is highly prized—partly because children in latitude 74 degrees are a scarce article.

Few parents are blessed with more than one, or, indeed, could well maintain more than one; and if they are so happy as to have two, they are generous enough to let one of them live with a couple who are childless.

Like all undeveloped and poor tribes, they are haunted by superstitious fears, and crave stimulants with a fierce and insatiable desire. The strongest whiskey, the strongest tobacco, even alcohol itself, and the scrapings of an old pipe, they will consume with the keenest enjoyment and without apparent injury.

Even these children, who have so many good qualities, drink and smoke if they can procure the means of doing so, which, happily, they cannot very often. Lieut. Ray declares that he has seen a baby three months old with its little mouth full of tobacco while it was in the act of taking nourishment from its mother.

Before the present year comes to an end we hope to have something as curious to tell of Lieut. Greeley's experiences.

Senator Fair denies that on his recent trip to California he went with any intention of remarrying his divorced wife. A singular feature of the case, and one not generally known to the public, is that, in addition to $4,000,000 received by Mrs. Fair upon that occasion, the senator voluntarily added a fifth. At the conclusion of the legal proceedings, Mrs. Fair found herself utterly at a loss as how to invest her large fortune, and in her dilemma applied for help to her former husband. To this appeal he at once responded, and now—though separated from Mrs. Fair—yet has entire charge of her money affairs, investing her large capital entirely according to his own judgment.

In the house Monday Robinson carried out his policy of opposing the acceptance of decorations by Americans from foreign governments, and introduced a bill to prohibit any such concession to the effete monarchies of Europe. He also introduced a joint resolution offering the thanks of congress to all Americans who had saved human life, and declaring that any congressman who opposed it is a disgrace to himself and to his country. Mr. Dunham sarcastically moved the reference of the resolution to the committee on public help, which was carried with laughter.

The Giant Powder company's magazine at Denver, containing 10,000 pounds of giant powder, located three and a half miles east of the city, exploded with terrible force Tuesday morning. A large number of plate fronts in the business portion of the city were wrecked. A new farm house 300 yards distant was completely demolished. The occupants miraculously escaped injury. No clue to the cause of the explosion.

John and Charles Kennedy, two laborers of Louisville, Ky., have received word that they have fallen heir to about $2,000,000 from an uncle who lately died in Australia. The uncle formerly lived in Louisville, but left suddenly one day and for about thirty years was not heard of.

Three rusty keys among the effects of John O. Taylor who died the other day in New York, furnished the only evidence that he had a fortune of $260,000. That sum was found in a deposit vault to which the keys belonged. He left no kin.

S. G. Cornwall, bookseller of San Francisco, at the instance of Mr. John Kimball, manager of the Pacific, the Congregational newspaper has been convicted of selling obscene photographs.

During a severe thunder storm at Harrisburg, Pa., Frank Dively and wife, residing on Eleventh street, were struck by lightning and killed at their doorway.

The Catholic Archbishop Ryan of St. Louis has been appointed to succeed Archbishop Wood, late of the archdiocese, Philadelphia.

Our good brother Rothpletz is very tenacious and evidently thinks what he don't know about branch railroads is not worth knowing. In his last issue he advises us to "read up" and try to discover that his pet branch scheme does not connect Red Lake Falls with St. Hilaire. He claims it does not but we still have to confess our ignorance in the matter if it does not. St. Hilaire ought to vote him a leather medal, at the least, for suggesting the addition of such a pretty suburbs as the Falls will make to that thriving young city. We have known some very astute men to slop over once in awhile and Rothpletz seems no exception to the general rule. If Rothpletz would only whoop-er-up for the Lake Park road, instead of wasting his valuable brain power on the St. Hilaire connection he would be more liable to do some good for his patrons and friends than he will in his little wild-cat scheme.

Bro. Holmes of the Gazette was watching the other animals at the circus last Monday. Among other things he told us that Red Lake Falls is bound to get a railroad from Lake Park this summer. If Red Lake Falls is bound to have a road anyhow she had far better expend her money to build south than to pay out any money to build a line to connect with St. Hilaire's road, thus being made, as it were a tail to St. Hilaire's kite. If Red Lake Falls needs a road at all she needs one that will give her daily intercourse with the outside world. What's the earthly good of a connection with a branch that don't afford communication more than once or twice a week? Her excellent stage service is better than that. We would like to see her obtain a good road but we don't think much of her branch scheme.

GRAND CELEBRATION

OF

St. John Baptist Day,

Crookston, June 24th.

PROGRAMME.

Solemn High Mass at 9 a. m., Right Rev. Bishop Siedenbusch, officiating.

Grand procession with representation of St. John Baptist in chariot, from the church to Dobson's grove. Speeches by Hon. H. Steenerson, P. A. Dufour and other orators.

For the 100 yard foot race the prize will be an elegant easy chair This is a beautiful piece of furniture, something of which any one might be justly proud.

The tug of war. For this the prize will be a box of fine imported cigars. This prize will certainly be of interest to the gentlemen.

For running, hop step and jump, the prize will be an elegant meerschaum cigar holder in case.

Sack race. For this the prize will be a fine silver vase, beautifully engraved.

Wheelbarrow race. The prize for this race will be a splendid separable bamboo fishing rod. This article is indispensable to any one who lives on the banks of the Red Lake River.

Go as you please. 30 minute race. Prize, a beautiful and expensive silk hat of the latest patern.

Hurdle race, 100 yards Prize an elegant silver clock of the latest design. This is, indeed, a very handsome and useful article.

Running long jump race. Prize, smoking case. This is a very handsome affair. It is Japanese workmanship, and is made up of little sliding cases on the inside for cigars, pipes and tobacco, and shows the ingenuity of the Japanest workman.

Fat man's race. Prize, a gold headed cane. This is the most expensive prize on the list, the cost of which was $28. The stick is ebony and the head solid gold. The fat men of our city are especially invited to call and examine this cane.

Anklet race. Prize a handsome meerschaum pipe'

Potato race. Prize, a pair of roller skates. This will be especially intering to the small boys, and they must all be prepared to compete for the skates.

Handicap prizes. 1st, $3; 2d, $2. These prizes are certainly very interesting to everybody.

Boat race, half-mile dash. Prizes; 1st, $6; 2d, $4. These are also prizes that will interest everybody.

A large platform has been erected on the grounds and good music will be in attendance, so that all who wish may trip the light fantastic. Meals can be obtained on the grounds during the entire day. Grand display of fireworks in the evening, and a grand ball at the new Opera House. The management of this celebration have left nothing undone that could possibly be done, not only to make this the event of the season, but to make it the grandest celebration ever held in this county, and a general invitation is extended by the management to everybody in the Red River Valley to be present on that occasion. Come, everybody, and bring your friends. The committees on prizes have certainly showed their good taste and judgment in the various selections, and they wish to state that the track is finished and may be used by any who wish to practice in order to compete for a prize. A man is on the ground all the time and keeps everything in good order. The prizes are on exhibition at I. Fortier's place, corner of Robert Street and Broadway,

A Sad Accident.

On Sunday morning, a sad and fatal accident occurred in the town of Vineland. A farmer had a small boy, whose name we have failed to learn, in his employ. The boy slept in an adjoining building and on Sunday morning early the farmer went out and awoke him. When the boy came out the farmer was trying to shoot a gopher that had run into a board pile and the boy went to the further end to scare the gopher out. The farmer shot at the gopher with the revolver which he had and the ball, striking a plank glanced and struck the boy in the forehead, killing him almost instantly. This sad incident shows that we cannot be too careful in handling firearms.

FARM NOTES.

American Agriculturist.

REVISE THE PATENT LAWS.

If the farmers of every township, or school district, had an association, the members of which would make common cause against all frauds who claim to have patents on the commonest farm devices, and instead of compromising these claims, could contest them, this would usually be the last of them. When our Patent Rules are revised, and the present seems a good time for doing it, we would suggest that much of the trivial stuff that is now patented, be rejected altogether. The present rule seems to be, to give a patent to everything that has not been patented before. A farmer may have used a simple device for many years. Some sharp fellow coming along sees it, and procuring a patent, may prevent the farmer from using his own invention, unless he pays a royalty. Abuses of this kind are not rare; they should be made impossible. At present a patent is worth nothing to the inventer, until he has been at the expense of defending it in the courts. The government should keep out all the trivial stuff, and allow patents for only really useful and important inventions, and having once granted a patent, and taken pay for it, should defend it in the courts without cost to the inventor. A treaty, which has been made by representatives of our own, European and South American Governments, has been presented to the Senate. The nations in this union or league, agree that a patent granted in any one of these countries, shall be valid in all the others. This scheme seems to be favorable to our own inventors. But the people have something to say, as well as inventors, and before concerning ourselves with our foreign relations, let us have patent laws that are acceptable to farmers and others at home, and not be open to the abuses at present possible.

Crookston, Thursday, June 19.

'ROUND HOME.

Geo. Q. Erskine returned to this city last Friday.

S. O. Cundy, of St. Hilaire was in the city last Saturday.

The Central House has been crowded with guests the past week.

A large crowd is in attendace at the Roller Rink every evening.

W. C. Kennedy, one of Crookston's old settlers, and now of Grafton, D. T., was in the city last Monday.

The circus was a grand affair and the parade started at just 9 o'clock by the regulator at Berthiaume Bros.

Time is money and you can find the correct time at Berthiaume Bros. jewelry store on Robert Street.

There will be a game of base ball in Crookston on July 5th between the Grand Forks and Crookston clubs.

E. H. Jenne moved his stock into the new barn last Saturday. There is room enough for twenty-one horses.

Goods delivered to any part of the city on short notice. Bauchman & Milette.

In passing down Robert Street dont fail to call at Berthiaume Bros. jewelry store and examine their fine stock of jewelry, watches, clocks and silver ware.

Swanson & Keoppe have got a kiln of brick ready for market, cream brick, and we understand that it is the finest kiln of brick ever made in the Red River Valley.

Judge Carruth went over to Grand Forks last Friday to talk with the ball boys in that city, and if possible make some arrangements for a game in this city on July 4th.

Flour and feed at Bauchman & Milette's.

That silver trumpet for the best drilled fire company is now on exhibition at Morris' Bros. jewelry store. It is an elegant piece of mechanism, and we hope that the boys will keep it in Crookston.

Mrs. I. U. Jennings has just received a large stock of Spring and Summer Millinery Goods and guarantees to sell at prices 25 per cent lower than the same goods can be purchased at any other place in the Northwest.

Young people's meeting held in the Baptist Chapel every Sunday evening from quarter after six to quarter after seven. Meeting dismissed in time to get to other church services. All the young people cordially invited.

George Gowin, of this city, has gone for an extended trip through the east. He goes first to Montreal, Canada, and then to Connecticut, his old home. He will be gone about a month, and will then return and resume his old position.

The hose company went out for a little practice last Friday evening. They all do well with the exception of one seal-skin Jim, and he is balky. When they started to run he held back and finally laid down while the others went on.

Last Saturday afternoon some of the boys got to thinking that they could lift almost anything that was not nailed down. So one of the log-drivers and seal-skin Jim made a bet of $10, each one of course willing to bet that he was the strongest man. The money was put up and the judges selected. They then went over to the roundhouse and the judges picked out a large piece of iron that weighed 500 lbs. The bet was the best 3 in 5. Seal-skin Jim carried off the stakes, cigars and etc.

UTZINGER.—In this city, on Saturday, June 14th, 1884, at 12 o'clock m., WILLIE UTZINGER, of diphtheria, aged 6 years and 1 month, after an illness of five days.

This sad event took place while the father and mother were absent. Mr. C. C. Utzinger was at Winona as a juryman in the U. S. Supreme Court. He returned last Sunday by way of Grand Forks and arrived at five o'clock. Funeral took place at six.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred and seventy-eight and 25-100 dollars ($378.25-100,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by John B. Derosier, a single man, mortgagor, to Joseph L. Daoust, mortgagee, bearing date the twelfth day of April A. D. 1883, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 2d day of November A. D. 1883, at 9:50 o'clock a. m., in book "A" of mortgages, on page 228. The said mortgage was duly assigned by an instrument in writing, duly executed and delivered by the said Joseph L. Daoust to Arthur Yvernault, dated the 29th day of May 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds on the tenth day of June 1884, at 3:30 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on page 148, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter (nw¼) of Section six (6,) Township one hundred and fifty (150,) Range forty-four, according to the government survey thereof in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the first day of August A. D. 1884, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated June 11th, A. D. 1884.

ARTHUR YVERNAULT,
Assignee of Mortgagee.

JOHN McLEAN,
Attorney for Assignee. [7-13]

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication June 5th, 1884.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of sixty and 65-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Ferdinand Laplante and Amanda Laplante, his wife, to The America Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London, (Limited,) bearing date the 8th day of October A. D. 1881, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 8th day of October A. D. 1881, at 4:30 o'clock p. m., in book "E" of mortgages, on pages 337, 338 and 339, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for eight hundred and twenty-five dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage, and due the 8th day of October 1886, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, payable anually on the first day of January in each year, according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Ferdinand Laplante and Amanda Laplante, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum until it becomes due, and default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, the said mortgagee therefore elected, that all of said sums described in said note should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note, and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The southeast quarter of Section four (4,) Township one hundred and fifty (150,) Range forty-seven (47,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of twenty-five and 73-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Andrew J. Oslie and Martha A. Oslie, his wife, to The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London (Limited) bearing date the 16th day of November A. D. 1881, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 7th day of December A. D. 1881, at 1:15 o'clock p. m., in book "E" of mortgages, on pages 556, 557 and 558, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note of three hundred and fifty dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage, and due the 16th day of November 1886, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January of each year, according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Andrew Oslie and Martha Oslie, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the makers thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. from the time it becomes due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1884, and the interest now due on said interest the said mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said note, should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The southeast quarter of Section eight (8,) Township one hundred and fifty-four (154,) Range fifty (50,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of twenty-one dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Halvor Peterson and Anne Peterson, his wife, to The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London, (Limited,) bearing date the 29th day of January A. D. 1881, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of minnesota, on the 22d day of February A. D. 1881, at 4 o'clock p. m., in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 161, 162, 163 and 164, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note of two hundred and fifty dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage, and due January 29th 1886, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January in each year, according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Halvor Peterson and Anna Peterson, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the time it became due, and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st. 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, the said mortgagee therefor elected that all of said sums described in said note, should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note, and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter of Section eighteen (18,) Township one hundred and forty-eight (148,) Range forty-eight (48,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances will be sold at public auction, to the highest highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

In passing down Robert Street dont fail to call at Berthiaume Bros. jewelry store and examine their fine stock of jewelry, watches, clocks and silver ware.

Swanson & Keoppe have got a kiln of brick ready for market, cream brick, and we understand that it is the finest kiln of brick ever made in the Red River Valley.

Judge Carruth went over to Grand Forks last Friday to talk with the ball boys in that city, and if possible make some arrangements for a game in this city on July 4th.

Flour and feed at Bauchman & Milette's.

That silver trumpet for the best drilled fire company is now on exhibition at Morris Bros. jewelry store. It is an elegant piece of mechanism, and we hope that the boys will keep it in Crookston.

Mrs. I. U. Jennings has just received a large stock of Spring and Summer Millinery Goods and guarantees to sell at prices 25 per cent. lower than the same goods can be purchased at any other place in the Northwest. [51-tf]

Young people's meeting held in the Baptist Chapel every Sunday evening from quarter after six to quarter after seven. Meeting dismissed in time to get to other church services. All the young people cordially invited.

George Gowin, of this city, has gone for an extended trip through the east. He goes first to Montreal, Canada, and then to Connecticut, his old home. He will be gone about a month, and will then return and resume his old position.

The hose company went out for a little practice last Friday evening. They all do well with the exception of one seal-skin Jim, and he is balky. When they started to run he held back and finally laid down while the others went on.

Last Saturday afternoon some of the boys got to thinking that they could lift almost anything that was not nailed down. So one of the log-drivers and seal-skin Jim made a bet of $10, each one of course willing to bet that he was the strongest man. The money was put up and the judges selected. They then went over to the roundhouse and the judges picked out a large piece of iron that weighed 500 lbs. The bet was the best 3 in 5. Seal-skin Jim carried off the stakes, cigars and etc.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred and seventy-eight and 25-100 dollars ($378.25-100,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by John B. Derosier, a single man, mortgagor, to Joseph L. Daoust, mortgagee, bearing date the twelfth day of April A. D. 1883, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 2d day of November A. D. 1883, at 9:30 o'clock a. m., in book "A" of mortgages, on page 223. The said mortgage was duly assigned by an instrument in writing, duly executed and delivered by the said Joseph L. Daoust to Arthur Yvernault, dated the 29th day of May, 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds on the tenth day of June 1884, at 3:30 o'clock p. m., in book "B" of mortgages, on page 148, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter (nw¼,) of Section six (6,) Township one hundred and fifty (150,) Range forty-four, according to the government survey thereof in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the first day of August A. D. 1884, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated June 11th, A. D. 1884.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication June 5th, 1884.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of sixty and 65-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Ferdinand Laplante and Amanda Laplante, his wife, to The America Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London, (Limited,) bearing date the 8th day of October A. D. 1881, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 8th day of October A. D. 1881, at 4:30 o'clock p. m., in book "E" of mortgages, on pages 337, 338 and 339, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for eight hundred and twenty-five dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage, and due the 8th day of October 1886, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, payable annually on the first day of January in each year, according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Ferdinand Laplante and Amanda Laplante, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum until it becomes due, and default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, the said mortgagee therefore elected, that all of said sums described in said note should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note, and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The southeast quarter of Section four (4,) Township one hundred and fifty (150,) Range forty-seven (47,), containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of twenty-five and 73-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Andrew J. Oslie and Martha A. Oslie, his wife, to The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London (Limited) bearing date the 10th day of November A. D. 1881, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 7th day of December A. D. 1881, at 1:15 o'clock p. m., in book "E" of mortgages, on pages 556, 557 and 558, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note of three hundred and fifty dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage, and due the 16th day of November 1886, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January of each year, according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Andrew Oslie and Martha Oslie, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the makers thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. from the time it becomes due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1884, and the interest now due on said interest the said mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said note, should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The southeast quarter of Section eight (8,) Township one hundred and fifty-four (154,) Range fifty (50,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of twenty-nine and 40-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Camille Bruitts and Sophie Bruitts, his wife, to The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London, (Limited,) bearing date the 4th day of February A. D. 1882, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 4th day of February A. D. 1882, at 2:45 o'clock p. m., in book "F" of mortgages, on pages 139, 140 and 141, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note of four hundred dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage, and due the 4th day of February 1887, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January in each year according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Camille Bruitts and Sophie Bruitts, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the time it became due, and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, the said mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said note should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter (nw¼) of the northeast quarter (ne¼) of the northwest quarter (nw¼) southwest quarter (sw¼) northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section ten (10,) Township one hundred and fifty-one (151,) Range forty-five (45,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

To the Hon. Judge of the District Court of Polk Co., Minn.

We the undersigned grand jurors of Polk County Minn., having examined the charges made by State examiner Knox, as they appear in the Pioneer Press and St. Paul Globe of the 18th of June 1884, alleging a misappropriation of the public funds by the county commissioners, of the County of Polk aforesaid, after examining the records and hearing testimony, we beg leave to report as follows, viz:

Relative to the $300 appropriated for the purpose of building a jail or lockup in East Grand Forks, we found upon examination that the tax payers of said village, and the adjoining towns petitioned the board for such aid, alleging that roughs and other men in an intoxicated and turbulent state of mind, crossed the Red River, from Grand Forks County, D. T., and were the source of great annoyance to the citizens of said village, and by the aid of a place of safe keeping for such characters, the peace and good order of the community would be best preserved and as the appropriation assumes the temporary loan, and the County of Polk holds the title to the lots and building (known as such lockup) we are of the opinion that no censure should attach to the board for such action.

Relotive to the $500 appropriated by the county board for county fair purposes. We find that the board issued an order for said amount and delivered it to M. R. Brown for safe keeping, and by him to be given to the county fair association upon their guarantee to hold an annual county fair for five years, and to give the county the free use of the grounds for a monthly sale of stock. Said guarantee being refused by the said association, the order was recalled and cancelled at the last session of the board, and no money has ever been paid out of the county treasury on such order.

Relative to the extra allowance of clerk hire in the county auditor's office. We would respectifully report that in our opinion such allowance is fully justified on account of the very large amount of work done in said office, and the multifarious duties of the auditor of this county, and in view of the able manner in which such duties are performed by the present incumbent, Mr. P. J. McGuire, we are further of the opinion that the present salary and allowance for clerk hire is inadequate commensurate with the duties of said office, and not equal in proportion to the salaries paid other officers, nor the same office in other counties. We are grateful to the present auditor for his courteous and candid statement of facts for our information.

We further find that the $535 paid to the board of county commissioners during the past year, was for services rendered while acting as committees of the board examining bridges, team work, mileage, poor aid or supervision etc. Itemized bills for said services being on file in the auditor's office. In absence of proof to the contrary, therefore, we deem such expenditure to have been necessary, and leave it to the judgement of all rational men, if a county comprising the area, and varied interests of the county of Polk can require its commissioners to attend to its business properly for a compensation of $60 per year.

We found that a temporary loan of $1,997.90, from the surrent school funds to the county revenue fund in the fall of 1883, has been duly replaced to said school fund on the 9th day of May 1884. Said loan though not strictly according to law, was however in our opinion justified by the circumstances and the county is really the gainer by the operation.

In regard to the $60 paid to the county auditor for letting contracts. We find that said services were rendered in accordance with duties imposed on county auditors by the law passed at the last legislature, whereby county commissioners are empowered to establish drains through wet lands. There having been several drains established, the auditor has been compelled to hire livery teams, and to perform a large amount of extra work, and we believe the law entitles him to pay for the same.

In regard to the matter of $400 allowed commissioner Brown for negotiating $4,000 of thirty year six per cent bonds for the county, said rate of interest being one per cent less than the rate mentioned in the enabling act of the legislature, legalizing the bonding the county of Polk and the work of placing said bonds was no small matter, so he would be entitled to reasonable pay for the same. Mr. Brown did not present a bill for said services, so we do not consider the other commissioners authorized in allowing the said amount. No order has been issued for said amount, and the matter is now before the district court for adjudication. We believe that the $100 allowed commissioner Brown for supervision of the poor, was for services actually rendered and think he was entitled to it. There has however no order been issued and the matter is before the district court for settlement.

In relation to the $120 to school district No. 100, said district was by order of the county commissioner detached from joint district No. one, of the counties of Polk and Norman. Said district No. 100 proceeded to raise money by subscription for maintaining a public school, which they did for four months, at an expense of $120. In the course of time the order of the commissioners establishing said district No. 100 was declared by the district court to be null and void. The people in said territory petitioned the county board to repay the money expended by them for said school, as the people of said territory were all this time paying taxes to joint district No. one. We therefore see no reason for censuring the action of the county board in this matter as it is in our estimation a matter of more justice than law. We find that the books of the county auditor show that he has drawn the sum of $375 as salary for the present year A. D. 1884, up to the present date. The bonds of the First National and Merchants banks as repositories for the county funds, are now in proper shape, according to the opinion of the county attorney, a new bond having been made.

Signed.

To the Hon. Judge of the District Court, of Polk County, Minn.

We the grand jurors of Polk County, Minn., having examined the county jail, and having viewed the premises, we find the jail kept as well as can be expected and the prisoners had no complaint to make in regard to their treatment. But the building called a jail is a poor substitute for a jail, and is not fit to hold prisoners with safety. We recommend that a new jail be built on the county grounds near the court house, or that the necessary repairs be made on the present one, by putting in a new steel cell.

We have examined the several county offices and find they are all short of safe room. The clerk of courts has no safe room of any kind, he keeps his books in boxes or on tables and shelves. The register has not the amount of safe room needed for his valuable records and books, many of them being exposed to the mercy of fire, if the court house should burn. The auditors and treasurers offices are better supplied, but they are also short of safe room. We recommend that one or two large fire proof vaults be built as soon as possible for the safety of county records.

Polk County Journal.

Crookston, Thursday, June 26.

The hotels are crowded again this week.

Capt Douldson of Kenedy made us a call last Thursday.

Jumping and foot racing are the sports now a days.

There will be some fine races on July 4th and 5th.

Harry Leech has returned from his western trip.

Look out for the Presbyterian ladies with their open house on the 3d and 4th of July.

Charlie Davis says stop. That is he has got canned goods piled up so that it reads stop.

Ed. Slee, of Warren, was in on Friday to see how the metropolis of the Northwest progresses.

C. O. Christianson, of Fargo, was in on Thursday last looking after his interests in this city.

Geo. McLean, assistant postmaster, returned from his trip below last Thursday and resumed his old position.

Where shall we take our cream on the 4th? The Presbyterian ladies will serve you.

Ellis & Johnson are receiving numerous orders for oil from different parts of the country.

McKinnon Bros. are making six large wagons for T. B. Walker, will be used for drawing off large loads of lumber.

Gilbert Dumas, on Main Street, manufactures the finest boot and shoes ever made in this city. Repairing neatly done. Give him a call.

Whence the great rush on Robert Street? Because Berthiaume Bros. are selling watches jewelry and everything in their line lower than ever before.

The big whistle on the new saw mill blew at precisely 12 o'oclock last Wednesday. It can be heard for a number of miles across the prairie.

Jack Burton, one of the old St. P., M. & M. conductors who resided in Crookston, is now running on the western division of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Two of the heavy weights of our city, Pete Misgen and Dr. Thomas, ran a foot race last Wednesday evening. It was a good race but the Dr. forgot something and so Pete won the race.

Everybody needs a watch, and Berthiaume Bros. will give you better prices than you can find this side of Chicago. Give them a trial.

A. Sture returned from the farmers' meeting at Mankato on the 20th. He reports a good time and an interesting meeting. He says the prospects are good for the next meeting to be held at Crookston.

Last Wednesday evening there was a great display of fire works on Second Stree', balloon ascens on, etc. In front of the Commercial house was a banner on which were the words. "Crookston's tribute to Walker's mill."

Young people's meeting held in the Baptist Chapel every Sunday evening from quarter after seven to quarter of eight. Meeting dismissed in time to get to other church services. All the young people cordially invited.

The Presbyterian ladies will serve ice cream and strawberries July 3d and 4th. Patronize home talent.

Call at Berthiaume Bros. and examine the elegant stock of jewelry etc., selected expressly for our friends and patrons in the Red River Valley. Prices lower than ever before.

St. John Baptist day was celebrated in this city, but owing to the inclemency of the weather the full program could not be carried out—which was a very great disappointment to everybody, for great preparation had been made to make this one of the grandest celebrations ever held in this county. About 8:30 St. Jean Baptiste Band assembled at the Crookston Opera House and formed in line and marched down Broadway, down Second to Main up Main and down Fletcher Ave. to the Opera House again. And right here we wish to call your attention to the fine appearance of the band with their new uniforms with Drum Major and all complete. About 9:30 the rain fell in torrents and continued until after noon so that the entertainment at the grove had to be given up so the doors of the Crookston Opera House were thrown open and a large crowd of people assembled there and they all seemed to enjoy themselves. There were sundry games and a bountiful lunch prepared, and a large amount of Ice Cream and lemonade was disposed of. The first thing on the program in the evening was the fire works which were fine; after this was the grand Ball which was largely attended, the very best of music was in attendance and every thing was nicely managed, and it was by all whom we have heard express their opinion, the most enjoyable event of the season.

NOTICE.

Crookston, June 14th 1884.

Notice is hereby given, that all parties in the town of Crookston, owning or occupying lands in the said town upon which is growing wild mustard are hereby ordered to destroy or cause to be destroyed the same before it goes to seed or they will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. 4th of July CELEBRATION!

We wish once more to call the attention of the people of Polk County to this fact, that there will be the grandest celebration held in Crookston on July 4th ever held any where in this country, and we want to see every township in Polk County represented here on that day. You will be amply repaid for coming, for the attractions on that day will be many and varied. There is no reason that we wish to state to you why you should celebrate, only that every citizen and every man who intends to become a citizen of these United States should celebrate, and we want you all to come to Crookston, the metropolis of the Northwest, the city that has never had a boom but that has moved along surely, steadily and solidly until now she has no equal in the Northwest. A city that is the center of trade and the forwarding point for this whole Northwest, a city of 6000 people who are full of vim and energy and who are all well aware that they live in the metropolis of the Northwest. A city whose buildings, mills, water power are as good as the best: A city that is backed up on all sides by the best farming country in the Red River Valley, and now again we would invite you all, every man, woman and child in the valley to come to Crookston on July 4th, and we will show you what kind of a celebration a city (the commencement of which can be only dated back about six years) can get up. Again we say come.

Snow, left the residence of her uncle, No. 402 Exchange street, St. Paul, where she had been visiting about five weeks, between 11 and 12 o'clock last Thursday night, unknown to any one in the house, and has not been heard from since. She is about five feet three inches tall, and of slight build; hair light brown, worn with bangs, and back hair in three long braids. She went away wearing a light blue shawl, a blue cashmere dress, and a wine colored, tight-fitting Jersey.

The commissioner of the general land office has written a letter to Representative Strait regarding the cases of John Kulpincke and John Stritersky of Hutchinson, Minn., against the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba, and the Hastings & Dakota Railroad company. These are the cases in which a large number of settlers in the vicinity are interested. The commissioner says that the register and receiver at Benson have been directed to permit both claimants to complete their entries in accordance with the decisions of the secretary of the interior.

Lewis Swerk, aged sixty years, lives alone in a little hut on ten acres of land in the town of Hart, Winona county. During the past five or six years he has manifested symptoms of insanity, and this malady has grown upon him until he has become a terror to the neighborhood. He has barricaded the doors and windows of his hut, and has pierced them with port holes for defense. He is armed with two navy revolvers, a sword, pitchforks, etc., and has raised a black flag over his hut. He has shot at several of the neighbors, and a state of fear pervades the residents in that vicinity.

Luverne Herald: Mr. H. Borkholtz, proprietor of the City Flouring Mills at Rock Rapids, a well-known and highly esteemed citizen, died suddenly at his home on Wednesday, the 18th, from the effects of a dose of poison. Although the evidence is not conclusive, the suspicion is generally entertained, and strongly supported by the circumstances, that the poison was administered by the murdered man's wife.

The county auditor of Ramsey county, filed with the district clerk the delinquent real estate tax list of Ramsey county for the year ending May 31. The entire assessment for the year was $1,102,667, of which $305,000 was collected by the county treasurer from Dec. 1, 1883, to Feb. 29, 1884; $719,000 between March 1 and May 31, and about $5,000 since June 1, leaving about $73,667 delinquent.

Orders have been issued by Gen. Terry at Fort Snelling, remitting the unexpired portion of the sentence of the general court martial in the case of Lieut. George B. Ahern, Twenty-fifth infantry, who was tried nearly six months ago for absence without leave and disobedience of orders in visiting St. Paul, and sentenced to be reprimanded and to be confined to the limits of his post for one year.

John H. Wilson, a blacksmith, living with his family in Monticello, Wright county, was on Saturday examined before Justice Cochran of Buffalo by reason of a change of venue, on a charge of attempt to commit rape on the person of a Mrs. Spaulding of that village, and was bound over in $400 to appear at the fall term of the district court. Public opinion is largely against Wilson, who is a person of extremely loose morals.

Mrs. Sarah C. Shaver, sister of George W. Chowen, died at her home, opposite Wayzata, Lake Minnetonka on Friday, and the funeral, which took place Sunday afternoon, was attended by a large concourse of citizens. With her husband, James Shaver, Jr., the deceased settled on a tract of land on the south shore of Wayzata bay in the spring of 1852, and was the first white woman locating on what is now Minnetonka township.

Peabody, junior steward; J. P. Pond, chaplain; Jean C. Fischer, tyler.

Judge Brener, who succeeded Judge McCrary on the federal bench in the Eighth circuit, made an excellent impression with the bar of St. Paul and Minnesota and with citizens generally, by his happy speech on opening court for the first time in St. Paul. Occupying a place which for several weeks promised to work changes in the personnel of Minnesota's delegation in congress, there necessarily attaches more than ordinary interest to Judge Broner's arrival here. He is assuredly a gentleman worthy of the honor that fell to him.

Building of the new elevators has already begun by the Farmers' Union Elevator company. At Sabin the structure is rapidly rising. Lumber is unloaded on the site of the new house in Glydon, South of the Northern Pacific track opposite Bangs & Co.'s warehouse. Material is on the ground or in transit for the elevators at Barnesville, Kragneso, Carman, Angus, Argyle and Stephen. Each house is to be of 30,000 bushels capacity, built in crib fashion, and requires 120,000 feet of lumber.

In the state of Illinois there is an organization among the Knights Templar for the purpose of furnishing life indemnity, or procuring benefit to widows and orphans of its deceased members. The organization includes some of the most prominent knights of the state. The same organization is about to be established in St. Paul, and the knights are interesting themselves greatly in the mater. Several of the prominent sir knights have enthusiastically taken hold of the enterprise and are now at work at the organization, which promises to be a large one.

The horse thief who shot Marshal Hall of Zumbrota last week, was pursued by Deputy Marshal Anderson and posse so closely that he abandoned the horses he had and took the road on foot. The posse came up to him sitting by the roadside, when he immediately fled. The party fired twice at him, he dropping both times, but he rose and escaped. They followed his trail to near Easby's mill, but he escaped. Search was made until Sunday afternoon, but no thief was found. A rumor was current that a German had been shot by the same party, but it is not corroborated.

A monument to the late Col. Henry C. Rodgers of the 8th Minnesota, was unveiled at Brownsdale, Mower Co., on Tuesday, the 17th. There was a very large attendance from the neighborhood, and ex-Governor Ramsey presided over the ceremonies and Hon. Mark H. Dunnell. The oration was listened to with the closest attention. Adjt. G. Swift read eloquent letters regretting their absence from Pennock Persey, J. H. Baker and A. C. Hawley, visitors spend the afternoon reviewing old times, Col. Rodgers' grave being decorated with flowers.

The appearance of Capt. Russell Blakeley upon the streets of Stillwater recalled to the mind of E. D. Farmer of Stillwater the time when in the summer of 1848 he was at work upon the steamer Argo, with Capt. Blakeley clerk. While passing in front of the Winona Prairie the boat struck a snag and sunk in the shallow water at that point. The next morning one of the roustabouts named Jackson, a half-breed, rapped at Blakeley's door to get him up and drink with him. Blakeley refused and the half-breed kicked the door in. At this Blakeley turned out and gave the fellow a sound thrashing. At that time there was no settlement where the city of Winona now stands.

DEPARTMENT CROP REPORTS.

The Acreage of Spring Wheat in Wisconsin Greatly Decreased—Wheat and All Other Crops Doing Well in Minnesota Dry Weather Complained of in Some Localities.

Washington, Special Telegram, June 18.—Advices to the department of agriculture from Wisconsin say the effect of the constant and increasing tendency toward dairy and stock farming in the state has been to decrease the acreage of spring wheat. As compared with last year the decrease is about 10 per cent. The condition of the wheat is excellent. Frequent rains and growing weather are giving it a strong root and spreading it finely. There has been a noticeable increase in the area of clover the present year, and the condition is above the average. In Minnesota the report says at least one-third of the land devoted to wheat last fall, and nearly all of that in the prairie counties, has been replowed and seeded in other grain, while in the strictly wooded districts the grain is generally in excellent condition. The weather during three-quarters of the past month was cold, but especially favorable for cereal crops, and these have grown remarkably fast. Meadow pastures and corn, however, have been retarded somewhat until within the closing quarter, when higher temperature prevailed and they are now coming on rapidly. From Iowa the reports are very promising, especially in relation to spring wheat, oats and corn, and in fact all crops average well, meadows, pastures and fruits being very satisfactory. Corn planting was several days earlier than last year. The ground is in fine condition, and there is very little difference in the low and uplands, and the stand is good. Nine-tenths of the seed was raised in Iowa, and with ninety days of average weather Iowa will have one of the best crops ever raised in that state.

INCREASE OF SPRING WHEAT AREA.

The need of ready money in new countries for farm improvements has its legitimate effect with the multitude of settlers going into Dakota, and the increase of wheat area is apparently 40 per cent, or 400,000 acres. Altogether the increase of spring wheat area is really 900,000 acres. This makes the aggregate breath in wheat, winter and spring, about 33,500,000 acres, with a yield of thirteen bushels per acre, which may be expected if favorable prospects continue. The harvest will count. The small amount of winter wheat in the spring wheat belt was greatly injured in the northern belt, and much of it has been plowed up, especially in Minnesota. In Nebraska the winter wheat is doing unusually well. The condition of spring wheat is high, averaging 101. It is not less than 100 in any of the principal spring wheat states, and only falls to 99 in Montana, 98 in Vermont, and 95 in Maine. There is no country where a decrease of acreage is reported, though a number of the old counties in South Dakota show no increase. It is reported from Montana that since spring there has been no examination until within the past week. Grass is therefore not up to the average by 10 per cent. Notwithstanding there has been a great number of new farms opened in Montana this spring, the total acreage of spring wheat, oats and barley is but little more than that cultivated last year. The cause of this is the low prices to which grain went last fall and winter, which was occasioned by the competition brought on by the completion of the Northern Pacific railroad. The prospect of the continued low prices has had the effect to cause farmers to sow only part of their fields—such acreage as they could cultivate without hiring laborers.

The Penitentiary Too Good for Them.

The Washington Star, referring to the failure of Middleton & Co., bankers, of Washington, says: One of the latest developments of the way in which their customers were plundered is shown in the case of Hon. James H. McKenney, clerk of the supreme court of the United States. McKenney had been a close friend from boyhood of D. W. Middleton, Jr., and succeeded Middleton, Sr., as clerk of court and his confidence, therefore, was unbounded in Middleton, Jr. His deposits in securities and money with the firm amounted to $61,000, every dollar of which is lost. They not only took his money in general default, but cut open envelopes in which he had placed his securities, such as bonds and stocks for safe keeping, and sold them. McKenny has nothing but plundered envelopes, to show for the savings of a life time, though part of this amount belonged to the court; nor did they spare even their own families. In another instance, $10,000 in trust bonds had disappeared in the whirlpool. There is still another aggravated case. They had power of attorney from a gentleman absent from the city to attend his business here, and had a key to the safe. On hearing of this failure he hurried to the city to look after his own securities. He found every one had been sold. This safe was not in the Middleton bank.

Save the Children.—Croup Will Come.—Be Prepared for It.

Croup will attack the children; it cannot well be avoided, but the "little ones" can be saved terrible racking pain and torture, and the parents sorrow and anguish, by having a bottle of DR. THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL at hand to give them on the first appearance of Croup. It never fails to give relief. One mother writes:—"My little girl had croup of the worst form, and Thomas' Eclectric Oil relieved when everything else failed. FIVE MINUTES AFTER the first dose she was quite easy."

Take a child screaming with pain from a burn, and you can immediately stop the pain with DR. THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL. As it is almost impossible to protect the rising generation, from an occasional burn, fathers and mothers should provide for the emergency by keeping DR. THOMAS' ECLECTRIC OIL handy. It is just as good for a scald, a frost bite, a bruise, a strain, and heals a cut quickly.

When the children cough, Eclectric Oil will at once stop the cough.

When they have colds, it will cure them quicker than anything you can use.

If throats are sore, rub Eclectric Oil on the throat, and a few drops given internally will cure in 12 hours.

Death of Bishop Simpson.

Bishop Matthew Simpson one of the oldest bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died in Philadelphia on Wednesday last. He was born at Cadiz, Ohio, June 21, 1811. He was educated at Madison College, which afterward merged into Allegheny College. After his graduation at Madison College, subsequently merged into Allegheny College, his first pastoral work was in the Pittsburg conference, where he was soon recognized as a young man of unusual ability and zeal. He was professor of Natural Science in Allegheny College from 1837 to 1839, president of the Indiana Asbury University from 1839 to 1848, and editor of the Western Christian Advocate from 1848 to 1852, the latter year being the date of his ordination as a bishop, in Boston. For thirty-two years he has performed the work of the bishopric with distinguished efficiency, and his life of seventy-three years has been one of the most useful of his time.

The Fitz John Porter Case.

After the reading of the Journal in the senate, on Wednesday, the 18th, which contained an allusion to the Fitz John Porter bill, the chair stated that no further action on that bill was necessary than to have the action of the house announced to the senate. Debate ensued as to whether the provision relating to back pay secured the object in view, which was ended by the chair laying before the senate a message of the house of representatives announcing the concurrence of that body in the report of the conference committee, which recommended that the house recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the senate and agree to the same. This action takes the Porter bill back to the house of representatives, as finally passed, so far as the action of congress is concerned, and there is doubt whether it will receive the presidential signature.

L. L. Brady, county attorney at Mille Lacs county, wrote an inquiry to Attorney General Hahn asking the law regarding the size of school districts. The attorney general holds that the county commissioners are only empowered to make a district six miles square, according to section 17, chapter 36, revised statutes.

THE STAGE DRIVER'S STORY.

How General Scott's Life was Saved and How His Driver Twice Escaped Death.

The traveler of the present day, as he is hurried along by the lightning express, in its buffet cars and palace sleepers, seldom reverts in thought to the time when the stage coach and packet were the only means of communication between distant points. It is rare that one of the real old-time stage drivers is met with now-a-days and when the writer recently ran across Fayette Haskell, of Lockport, N. Y., he felt like a bibliographer over the discovery of some rare volume of "forgotten lore." Mr. Haskell, although one of the pioneers in stage driving (he formerly ran from Lewiston to Niagara Falls and Buffalo), is hale and hearty and bids fair to live for many years. The strange stories of his early adventures would fill a volume. At one time when going down a mountain near Lewiston with no less a personage than General Scott as a passenger, the brakes gave way and the coach came on the heels of the wheel horses. The only remedy was to whip the leaders to a gallop. Gaining additional momentum with each revolution of the wheels the coach swayed and pitched down the mountain side and into the streets of Lewiston. Straight ahead at the foot of the steep hill flowed the Niagara river, towards which the four horses dashed, apparently to certain death. Yet the firm hand never relaxed its hold nor the clear brain its conception of what must be done in the emergency. On dashed the horses until the narrow dock was reached on the river bank, when by a masterly exhibition of nerve and daring, the coach was turned in scarce its own length, and the horses brought to a stand still before the pale lookers-on could realize what had occurred. A purse was raised by General Scott and presented to Mr. Haskell with high compliments of his skill and bravery.

Notwithstanding all his strength and his robust constitution the strain of continuous work and exposure proved too much for Mr. Haskell's constitution. The constant jolting of the coach and the necessarily cramped position in which he was obliged to sit, contributed to this end, and at times he was obliged to abandon driving altogether.

Speaking of this period he said:

"I found it almost impossible to sleep at night; my appetite left me entirely and I had a tired feeling which I never knew before and could not account for."

"Did you give up driving entirely?"

"No. I tried to keep up but it was only with the greatest effort. This state of things continued for nearly twenty years until last October when I went all to pieces."

"In what way?"

"Oh, I was doubled all up; could not walk without a cane and was incapable of any effort or exertion. I had a constant desire to urinate both day and night and although I felt like passing a gallon every ten minutes a few drops could escape and they thick with sediment. Finally it ceased to flow entirely and I thought death was very near."

"What did you do then?"

"What I should have done long before: listen to my wife. Under her advice I began new treatment."

"And with what result?"

"Wonderful. It unstopped the closed passages and what was still more wonderful regulated the flow. The sediment vanished; my appetite returned and I am now well and good for twenty years more wholly through the aid of Warners' Safe Cure that has done wonders for me as well as for so many others.

Mr. Haskell's experience is repeated every day in the lives of thousands of American men and women. An unknown evil is undermining the existence of an innumerable number who do not realize the danger they are in until health has entirely departed and death perhaps stares them in the face. To neglect such important matters is like drifting in the current of Niagara above the Falls.

Bishop Whipple's Quarter of a Century.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the accession of Bishop Whipple to the episcopate of the diocese of Minnesota celebrated at Faribault with much ceremony The bishop was escorted from his residence to the speaker's stand in the park by Mayor C. L. Lowell and board of aldermen and a committee of citizens preceded by the Faribault band and Faribault Guards. After taking their places on the stand, Mayor C. L. Lowell made a speech, recounting some of the benefits derived from the Bishop's work in Faribault, and in conclusion, tendered the Bishop the Freedom of the city. Hon. Gordon E. Cole followed in an elaborate address, Bishop Whipple made a feeling and characteristic response. After the bishop had concluded his remarks, Rev. James Dobbin, rector of Shattuck school, introduced the Rt. Rev. D. B. Knickerbacker, bishop of Indiana, who spoke briefly. Among the guests from abroad attending the festival were a large number of gentlemen and ladies who were graduated from schools founded by Bishop Whipple.

20 Years!

The reports from the use of Swift's Specific (S.S.S.) in the treatment of Cancer continue to be wonderful. There seems to be no doubt that it is a positive specific for Skin Cancer or Epithelioma.

"For twenty years I suffered from a Cancer on my neck. 'Patent Potash and Mercury Mixtures' fed instead of curing the Cancer. I lost the use of my arms and the upper part of my body. My general health was broken down, and my life was despaired of. S. S. S. cured me sound and well. This new lease of life it gave to me cannot be measured by any monetary value. I owe my life and the support of my family to Swift's Specific."

W. R. ROBISON, Davisboro, Ga.

"Mr. Brooks near Albany, was hopelessly afflicted with Cancer. It had eaten through his nose into his mouth and throat. The time of his death was only a question of a very short time. He prayed for death, his suffering was so great. S. S. S. has had a wonderful effect on him. His improvement is so great that we all feel sure of his being perfectly cured in time.

THE CARLTON LEGACY.

"I never knew of this mortgage, Mr. Brief," said Mrs. Carlton, in a troubled tone; "what did you say was the amount."

"Five thousand dollars," answered the lawyer promptly.

"There will not be much left after that's paid off."

"I fear not," said Mr. Brief, compassionately, for, although a lawyer, and such popularly supposed to be inaccessible to the gentler feelings, he had for years known Mrs. Carlton, and pitied her in her sudden widowhood, aggravated by the unexpected discovery that she was nearly without resources.

"Yet the house and grounds are worth eight thousand dollars—at any rate they cost my husband quite that amount."

"No doubt; but if thrown upon the market I fear very much they will not bring more than six."

"And that is all we have to begin upon," said Mrs. Carlton with a sigh.

The lawyer would have gainsaid her, but she had only spoken the truth.

A little explanation may here be given.

Mr. Carlton had been in receipt of an excellent income on which he was able to live in a handsome house, and maintain an excellent style of living. His wife had supposed that he kept within his income, or at least did not go beyond it; but it must have been otherwise, for he had raised five thousand dollars by mortgage on the house, of which at his death there appeared to be no traces. The house was all that he left behind him, except the furniture which cost a considerable sum, though it would doubtless have to be sold at a large reduction from the cost price.

When the lawyer had departed, Mrs. Carlton consulted with her daughter as to their future plan.

"What shall we do, Caroline?" she asked, helplessly; for she was not a woman of any business capacity.

"We must sell the house, of course, mother," said Caroline, "and the furniture, also, and move into lodgings."

"I am afraid there won't be much left after that."

"No, I fear not.

"Mr. Brief thinks we can't get but six thousand for the place."

"That will leave us a thousand to start with."

"But that is very little."

"We shall realize something on the furniture—perhaps five hundred dollars."

"It cost four times that."

"But there is always a great sacrifice, you know, mamma."

"Then all we can reckon upon is fifteen hundred dollars."

"True, but that is something."

"But it won't support us."

"It will help support us. Then, mother, I shall be able to teach; you know I have had an excellent musical education, and I don't doubt I can I get plenty of pupils. Don't trouble yourself about the future. I am sure we shall get along well."

Mrs. Carlton was somewhat cheered by these cheerful prognostications of her daughter. But her hopes were still farther raised by remarking that Caroline was engaged to John Rivers, a young man of property, the engagement having taken place six months previous. Under the influence of this remembrance she said:

"But Caroline, what will John say to this plan?"

"What should he say?"

"He will be unwilling that his wife should teach!"

"Perhaps he will not wish to marry me now, mother."

She said this steadily, though her face was a little pale:

"It would be dishonorable in him to abandon you," said her mother warmly.

"I have given him the chance, however, mother. I thought it only right."

"What do you mean?"

"That I wrote a letter yesterday, saying that under the changed circumstances I would not hold him to his engagement."

"That was foolish, Caroline. You should have waited until he mentioned it."

"I don't agree with you, mother," said Caroline, proudly. "If John does not keep to his engagements, I wouldn't by any means have him do so."

"But he will."

Caroline smiled sadly.

"Then there is no harm done," she said.

But for herself she was not so confident. Though she loved John Rivers, she had not been blind to his faults, and she knew that he was selfish and calculating. But she had been ready to marry him without question when her father was alive, and the family were, or supposed themselves to be, in a good pecuniary position. Now all was different, and she had left the decision to him, doubting much what that decision would be.

At this moment, a boy was seen approaching the house.

"It is Edward Harrod," said Mrs. Carlton; "I wonder what he wants?"

Carolina went to the door.

"Here is a letter," said Edward, "which Mr. Rivers gave me for you."

"Thank you for bringing it, Edward," said Caroline, with outward calmness, though her heart beat quickly. She didn't trust herself to read it in her mother's presence, but went up into her own chamber, and locking the door so as to guard against all interruption, she opened and red it.

It was as follow:

"DEAR CAROLINE—I received your letter yesterday, and lose no time in replying. Although, as you say, circumstances have changed since our engagement, I should not have thought of receding from it. Thank Heaven! I am not so mercenary. But doubtless you allude to your reluctance to leave your mother in her present loneliness, and though I shall be the loser, I cannot help feeling that you are right. I feel that it will not be generous to hold you to our engagement under these circumstances, and therefore, with great sorrow and reluctance, as you may well imagine, I accept your decision, and release you from your promise. But in so doing I trust that you will still give me your friendship, and I shall always wish you the utmost happiness.

"Yours affectionately,

"JOHN RIVERS."

Caroline smiled bitterly when she [illegible]

[illegible] of it upon me. Doubtless it is the way of the world, but such things are hard to bear."

She did not leave her chamber for an hour. When she rejoined her mother, it was with a calm manner; but no one save herself knew how difficult it was to maintain it.

"Mother," she said, "it is all over between Mr. Rivers and myself."

"Is it true?" her mother asked in bewilderment.

"Read that letter and you will know."

"It is contemptible!" commented Mrs. Carton, indignantly. "I didn't think John Bivers would behave so dishonorable!"

It was of course the same afternoon that an old man, poorly dressed, tottered to Mrs. Carlton's door.

Caroline, for they had no servant now, answered his knock.

She looked with some surprise at the bent figure before her.

"Yes, sir."

"I am her Uncle Benjamin."

"Come in, then," said Caroline, kindly; "she will be glad to see you."

She had often heard Benjamin Carlton spoken of. He had wandered away from home years before, and no one knew what he was doing or how he fared. But now, broken in body, and to all appearances poor, he had come back.

"I am glad to see you, Uncle Benjamin," said Mrs. Carlton, kindly; you do not seem very well."

"No, I am feeble. I think I have not long to live."

"Let us hope you are mistaken, uncle."

"Can I stay here?" asked the old man, almost imploringly. "I—I have no home."

"You are welcome to stay with us, and share the little we have," said Mrs." Carlton.

"The little!" Yet you live in a handsome house. I thought you must be rich."

"Appearances are deceitful," said Caroline. "The house and furniture are all that my poor father left us, and there is a mortgage on it that will swallow up the whole. Then we must shift for ourselves."

"Indeed! I am sorry to hear that. I am afraid I ought not to burden you!"

"It is no burden, Uncle Benjamin," said Caroline, "God will care for us, and while we have a shelter, you shall share it."

"Who is your lawyer?" asked the old man.

"Mr. Brief."

"Does he live in this village?"

"Yes; his office is next to the post office.

The old man retired early.

The next morning he took his hat and cane, and prepared to walk out.

"Where are you going, uncle?" asked Mrs. Carlton.

"For a little walk," he said.

"Are you able?"

"I shall not go far."

He returned in a couple of hours, and seemed quite exhausted. He went to bed and slept heavily. It was clear that he had but little strength left, and that the end of his mortal pilgrimage must be very near.

The doctor was summoned, but said that he had no particular disease. Old age and a general breaking up of the bodily powers, had come upon him, and for this there was no remedy.

During his illness, Mrs. Carlton and her daughter attended him with assiduous care.

"Poor old man!" said Caroline. "He is evidently destitute. It is lucky for him that he found us. We can soothe his last days."

One day, perhaps a week later, Caroline entered the old man's bedchamber. He was propped up by pillows, his face ghastly, his skeleton hand resting nevertheless upon the coverlid.

"He is dead!" she exclaimed in alarm and approached the bed.

Indeed it was so. The old man had only returned in time to die.

Three days later the funeral took place—a small one, for the old man was popularly supposed to be a pauper, and no interest was felt in him.

A day after the funeral Mr. Brief knocked at the door.

"I suppose you have come about the mortgage," said Mrs. Carlton. "Have you found a purchaser for the house?"

"I was not sure whether you would wish to sell it," he answered.

"It is not a matter of inclination," said Mrs. Carlton, sighing. "We must leave it."

"I am not so sure of that,"

"But you know how we are left."

"Yes, I know, but I doubt if you do."

"What can you mean, Mr. Brief?"

"I mean that your Uncle Benjamin has left you all his property."

"His property! Poor old man! He was penniless."

"By no means. He left in my hands bank-shares to the amount of twenty thousand dollars, and a will which divides them in equal shares to your daughter and yourself. You see, therefore, you can remain here, if you like."

The astonishment and joy of Caroline and her mother may well be imagined.

The astonishment and chagrin of John Rivers may also be conceived. He at once called upon Caroline, and sought to renew the engagement, but it was too late. She received him coldly, and decisively refused him. A year later, she married a yonng man who was better worthy of her and the fortune which she brought him.

Climatic Eccentricities.

The very remarkable climatic eccentricities, if so they may be termed, that have latterly attracted attention the world over, are typically exemplified in the last Winter season about Stavangov, Norway, where in latitude 58 deg. 58 min., or only one degree south of the extremity of Greenland, the thermometer but once during the month of January fell to freezing point. The grass plots of the various gardens are described as having been practically as green as in Summer. Daisies, snowdrops, pansies, violets and prim-roses had their blossoms well set; peonies had appeared above the ground, and roses had thrown out vigorous shoots."—Boston Budget.

WRESTLING BRUTALITY.

How Easily Men can Act Like Beasts.

Brooklyn Eagle "Life in New York."

If ever there was a thoroughly honest wrestling match it was that at Irving Hall between Ross and Sorakichi. The Japanese and Scotchman wrestled about two months ago in Cleveland. In the West Ross is a great man. He is a backer of prize fighters and other athletes, and he is a wrestler himself of no mean powers. At one time he claimed the championship at catch-as-catch-can wrestling. He is six feet high, has a pair of enormous shoulders, and is quick and clever. When Sorakichi went out to Cleveland to wrestle with Ross men traveled from the surrounding cities to see the match. Ross felt good humored. He had looked the Japanese over, and came to the conclusion that he could do him up with one arm. Sorakichi's head only came a little above the brawny Scot's elbow when he stood alongside of him. He could easily walk under his arm, and his weight was forty pounds less than that of Ross. They faced each other in Cleveland, and after an hour's terrific work they left the stage. Ross went to bed to nurse a broken rib, a sprained wrist, and one or two other slight mementoes of the match, and Sorakichi went to a hospital for repairs. When they came up for their second contest in New York both men were in an ugly temper. They sprang at each other like bull dogs, and fairly fought as they wrestled. Despite the enormous disparity in size and weight the Japanese held his own with his gigantic antagonist. Sorakichi is the strongest man of his size and weight in America, without the slighest doubt. On the stage the wrestlers looked liked a giant and a pigmy striving for the mastery. It took the giant one hour and four minutes to throw the pigmy in this instance. Ross attempted to break the left arm of the Japanese once, and would have done it had it not been for the threats and hisses of the audience. It is not generally considered so, but wrestling is more dangerous, than sparring. In San Francisco a few weeks ago, Whistler was wrestling with Muldoon, when the latter caught a back lock on him and deliberately twisted his arm; the result was a broken wrist for Whistler. This broken wrist of Whistler's must make Dufur, now champion of New England, smile if he remembers—as he doubtless does—his match with Whistler some years ago in Germania Hall. There were very few men present at the contest, as it was arranged very quickly and not advertised. The two wrestlers sprang upon the stage about 8 o'clock and went resolutely to work. Each had a considerable amount of money on the match and they wrestled for all they were worth. Toward the end of the first bout Whistler got Dufur down with his (Dufur's) left arm twisted behind his back. Whistler seized the left hand of the fallen athlete with both of his brawny fists and began to pull it backward. He was endeavoring to hurt Dufur so badly that the latter would have to give in and drop his other shoulder to the floor so as to constitute a fall. Dufur resolutely, and with Spartan endurance, withstood the strain. It is necessary, in order to secure a fall at catch-as-catch-can wrestling to press two hips and one shoulder, or two shoulders and one hip to the floor. Whistler was trying to force Dufur to the floor by deliberately pulling his arm out of joint. The men were dripping wet and Whistler had his teeth set like a bull dog. Every drop of blood went from Dufur's face, leaving him as white as a ghost. His friends begged him to give in, but he was stubborn and refused. Then he gasped, gave a short cry that sounded like a woman's voice, and sank half insensible on the stage. A small scarlet spot as big as a penny appeared on his shoulder, and when he was helped to his feet his arm hung lifeless at his side. It was an exhibition of brutality which I have never seen equalled at a boxing match. His arm was pulled into place, and in a month's time it was as strong as ever. A man who is thoroughly developed and in good condition can stand a strain that will cripple an ordinary man. Another instance of the dangers that the wrestlers run has just come under my notice: William Miller, a well-known athlete, while wrestling with Donald Dinnie was thrown so roughly by the Scotchman that his right leg was broken in two places. Miller will be crippled all the rest of his life.

The House of Many Mansions.

The following paragraph entitled "The Dimensions of Heaven" is from "Lewis' Penny Readings:" And he measured the city with a reed, 12,000 furlongs. The length and breadth and the height of it are equal."—Rev. xxi., 16. twelve thousand furlongs equal 7,920,000 feet, which being cubed is 496,793,088,000,000,000,000 cubic feet. Reserving half of this space for the throne and court of heaven, and half the balance for streets we have the remainder of 124,198,272,000,000,000,000 cubic feet. Divide this by 4,000, the cubical feet in a room 16 feet square, and there will be 30,321,843,750,000,000 rooms. We will now suppose the world always did and will contain 990,000,000 inhabitants, and that a generation lasts 33⅓ years, making in all 2,070,000,000,000, every century, and that the world will stand 100,000,000 years, or 1,000 centuries, making in all 2,070,000,000,000 inhabitants. Then suppose there were 100 worlds equal to this in the number of inhabitants and duration of years, making a total of 2,970,000,000,000,000 persons and there would be more than a hundred rooms 16 feet square to each person.

The wife of Senator Benjamin H. Harrison, of Indiana, has decorated eighteen dinner plates in a novel manner, which was wholly her own idea. On each side she has painted a bird of a different species, and on the border of the plate a verse in old English text of poetry written by one of the best authors about that particular kind of bird. This not only has the merit of originality, and so excites the interest and admiration of those who see the plates, but has the further advantage, as every verse is one which has been little quoted, of suggesting topics of conversation at a dinner party when the plates are used, which is always an estimable boon on such occasions. FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Home Hints.

Simple fare, plainly cooked, is what children need; and the fashion of letting them sit at table with older people and eat just whatever they fancy is decidedly injurious.

Take a dainty cup and saucer, half filled with water, float upon the surface a piece of raw cotton, well moistened, sprinkle this with grass seed and in a few days you will have a thing of beauty that the eye will thank you for.

If the stairrods are dingy, their appearance may be improved by washing them with sweet milk; polish them with a flannel cloth.

Kerosene oil will remove spots from old furniture and clean it better than anything I have ever tried. Very often on your sideboard and mahogany tables you will find white spots; by rubbing these with kerosene oil they will all disappear.

Excellent Soft Gingerbread is made of one cup of sugar, one cup of butter, one cup of sour cream, one cup of New Orleans molasses, four cups of sifted flour, one tablespoonful of soda dissolved in a little hot water, one tablespoonful of ginger, three well-beaten eggs, the rind grated of one lemon. Raisins may be added, if you please.

POULTICES.—On a teacup of fine crumbs of good, light bread, or Indian meal, or ground flaxseed, or slippery elm, pour enough boiling water to work up into a smooth mass; spread it evenly on a thick piece of cloth. If you need a mustard or pepper poultice just sprinkle a light-bread poultice thickly with mustard or cayenne. If an active counter irritant is wanted the poultice must have pepper or mustard mixed one to two parts of flour and stirred up with strong vinegar. For more durable irritation croton oil mixed with tartar emetic is used as prescribed by your doctor.

TO CLEAN LACE.—Draw a stocking tightly over a bottle and tie the ends. Lay the lace smoothly over the stocking and tack it in its place. Fill the bottle with cold water and put it in a kettle of cold water with shavings of soap in it; set over the fire and boil. If necessary change the water and repeat the process. Rinse in warm water and in cold and set away to drain and dry. Then remove the lace from the bottle, lay it between folds of paper and press in a large book or under a weight. Thus washed lace may be made to look like new.

The Medicine Chest For the Farm.

The following list of remedies for the domistic veterinary treatment of farm stock, arranged in alphabetical order, with, the doses for different animals, by Professor Brown, we copy from the current Journal of the Royal Agricultural Society:—

Aconite,—Tincture (Fleming's); action sedative, allays fever, and externally relieves irritation. Doses: horse and ox, 10 to 30 drops; sheep; add water in proportion of a tablespoonful to each drop of tincture. For a lotion, use one tablespoonful of the tincture to a pint of water.

Aloes.—A purgative for horse or ox. The ordinary aloetic mass and the solution should be kept at hand; both preparations must be obtained from a druggist. Doses: horses, four to six drams of the aloetic mass as an ordinary purgative; ox, half a pint of the solution, usually given in combination with linseed oil, in cases of continued constipation.

Areca Nut—A useful worm-medicine. The nuts should be kept in a stoppered bottle in a dry place. When required for use, the quantity should be grated by means of a nutmeg-grater. Doses: horse or ox, half an ounce to an ounce of the grated nut, mixed with the food, corn, and bran; sheep, 2 drams; dog, half to one dram.

Carbolic Acid.—A powerful and antiseptic, ordinarily used in combination with 50 to 100 parts water, as an antiseptic lotion to unhealthy wounds, and for disinfecting purposes.

Castor Oil, also Linseed Oil.—Purgative; doses: horses or ox, one to two pints; sheep four tablespoonfuls.

Colic Mixture.—Equal parts of laudnum and sweet spirit of niter, and an eighth part of chloric ether. A half-pint bottle to be kept at hand. Dose horse or ox two to four tablespoonfuls in three parts of a pint of water.

Salts (Epsom or Glauber), common purgative for cattle and sheep. Doses: ox, 12 to 16 ounces, dissolved in a wine bottle of hot water. A tablespoonful of ginger may be added. Sheep, four to six ounces.

Salicylic Acid.—A valuable antiseptic, effective in the treatment of foot-and-mouth disease. Dose: four tablespoonfuls of the acid are to be put in an earthen vessel the dissolved in a quart of boiling water; hot water is then to be added to make a gallon. This solution is to be used to syringe the feet and lave the mouth and nostrils, and also to wash the udder, and finally to sprinkle over the litter; half a pint of the solution may be added to the gallon of drinking water every day. The dry acid (powder) may be sprinkled on the feet after they have been syringed with the solution.

Santonin, used to expel worms, one of the most effective agents for this purpose. Dose: horse, 15 grains, with three drachms of aloes, to be given in the morning before feeding, and repeated after two days.

Turpentine, Oil of.—Stimulant to the skin. Internally used to expel worms; useful in "husk in calves." Dose: a tablespoonful daily in half a pint mixture of milk and eggs, lambs, one quarter of the quantity.

Vaseline.—Emollient to the skin; effective in irritation of the surface, chapped heels, and fever especially if mixed with an eight part of trinitrate of bismuth or carbonate of lead (white lead), or oxide of zinc.

Weed the Young Crops.

Even if your asparagus, carrots and beets are far enough apart to admit of horse-cultivation, and you do cultivate them, don't forget to weed them, also, the weed, Pig-weed, Purslane and Crab Grass are coming up in earnest now, and unless you pluck them out they will overrun and destroy your garden crops. If you wait till they come up a bit, you are liable, in weeding to root up your vegetables as well as weeds and after weeding to expose your half-chocked onions or other truck to the parching influence of a summer sun.

Strawberry Jelly.

In making this jelly, judgment should be used in the selection of the berries. They should be fresh and not sandy or dirty, as they will be if picked in wet weather. Hull the fruit and place it in an enamelled preserving-pan on the side of a bright fire. The gentle heat will soon begin to draw the juice from it, and when this flows freely simmer it until the berries begin to shrink, taking care not to let them remain long enough upon the fire for the juice to thicken. Have ready a dry sieve, which has been thoroughly cleaned and scalded, and pour the fruit into this, and after the juice has entirely drained through, strain it through several thicknesses of muslin. After weighing it, put the juice again in the preserving-pan and boil it quickly, for twenty minutes, stirring it frequently. Then remove from the fire and put it in the sugar (crushed white sugar is best for the purpose), allowing for each pound of juice fourteen ounces of sugar, adding the latter gradually as fast as it is dissolved. Place the pan again on the fire as soon as all of the sugar has dissolved, and boil until done. To test whether it has boiled enough, place a little upon a plate or saucer; if it becomes stiff it is done sufficiently. Then remove it from the fire, fill and cover your jelly jars, and set away for use in a dry, cool place.—The Caterer.

Straberry Syrup and Preserves.

One gallon of capped strawberries will weigh six pounds when gathered fresh and allowed to lie lightly without being mashed. For this quantity take one pound of best white sugar, either granulated or crushed loaf. In a china bowl put a layer of strawberries and a layer of sugar alternately, until all the sugar has been put in. Let them remain so for three or four hours, to extract all the juice. Then with a skimmer dip up all the berries, and lay them on a colander to drain, without mashing them. When all the juice is drained from them, strain it through a coarse linen towel or piece of flannel. Then measure it, and to every pint of juice put one pound of best white sugar, Put the juice and sugar into a stone jar. set the jar into an iron pot of cold water. Set the pot over the fire. Let it boil, stirring it occasionally to dissolve the sugar. Skim the forth off. When all the sugar is dissolved and the froth ceases to rise, take it off, let it cool, put it into bottles, cork them tightly, and set them in a cool place. This syrup makes a delightful flavoring for ice cream, and with the addition of a little lemon juice or vinegar and water makes an agreeable summer beverage. After all the juice has been drained from the strawberries they will weigh two pounds less than they did at first. Take then their reduced weight in crushed loaf sugar, and put a layer of the berries and a layer of sugar. Put them in a stone jar, set the jar in a pot of cold water, set it over a brisk fire, and let the fruit boil until perfectly tender and transparent. Stir gently at first, so as to dissolve the sugar without breaking the berries. The preserves require more cooking than the syrup. Strawberries preserved by this method keep much longer than when prepared in the usual way. If you wish the color of strawberries to be bright, do not let pewter or tin come near them during the process of preserving, for either turns the color dull directly.

How a Woman Puts on Shoes.

When a woman has a new pair of shoes sent home she performs altogether different from a man. She never shoves her toes into them and yanks and hauls until she is red in the face and all out of breath, and then goes stamping and kicking around, but pulls them on part way very carefully, twitches them off again to take a last look and see if she has got the right one, pulls them on again, looks at them dreamily, says they are just right, then takes another look, stops suddenly to smooth out the wrinkles, twists around and surveys them sideways, exclaims "Mercy, how loose they are!" looks at them again square in front, works her feet around so they won't hurt her quite so much, takes them off, looks at the heels, the toe, the bottom, and then inside, puts them on again, walks up and down the room once or twice, remarks to her better half that she won't have them at any price, flits down the mirror so she can see how they look from every possible direction, and nearly dislocates her neck trying to see how they look from that way, takes thirty or forty farewell looks, says they make her feet look awful big and will never do in the world, puts them off and on three or four times more, asks her husband what he thinks about it and pays no attention to what he says, goes through it all again, and finally says she will take them. It is a very simple matter, indeed.

Asparagus.

If you have got land enough, and like asparagus, but have not got it, you ought to be ashamed of yourself. You can buy one-year-old roots for $4 to $5 a thousand, two-year-old plants for $8 to $10, or a pound of seed for 60 cents. One plant is enough for a square yard of space. Plants when three years old, begin to yield "grass," and with fair treatment they continue in good bearing condition for 15 to 20 years. Any land that will grow potatoes will grow asparagus. It comes into use in April, and lasts till the end of June. It does not yield its product in a day or week, but uninterruptedly during the whole season. It precedes peas, beans, and spring cabbages, and apart from the carrots, potatoes, parsnips and other of last year's vegetables that we wintered in our cellars, we have very few vegetables when it is in season—some lettuce, spinach or German greens, perhaps. "But it is to late now to plant asparagus," you may say. Well, that depends. Some of the Oyster Bay asparagus farmers say that they get better results from May planting than any other, and I would sooner plant in June than in the fall. If you are short of ground, you can raise lots of things on your asparagus beds; for instance, radishes and corn salad sown thinly broadcast over them in spring; they will be gathered for use before "grass" cutting season is over. Lettuce may be planted alongside of the rows or spinach sown there, and both be off before you stop cutting. Or, in the event of a newly set-out plantation, you can raise early potatoes, snap-beans, beets, horn carrots, etc., between the rows. Don't be afraid of impoverishing the ground; give it lots of manure, keep it clear of weeds and cultivate it well, and you can crop it all you want to.

Seedless Fruits.

Dr. E. L. Sturtevant contributes an interesting article to the current Botanical Gazette, containing many examples of fruits which have become partially or entirely seedless from long cultivation. A tendency to produce seedless fruits is assumed as evidence more or less conclusive of ancient or prehistoric cultivation of the plant. Among common fruits that are occasionally seedless are apples, barberries, cherries, cucumbers, especially when grown under the glass, grapes, lemons, medlars, mulberries in the Orient, oranges, pears, persimmons, pomegranates, strawberries and tomatoes. Bananas and pineapples are habitually seedless fruits. It is stated that second-crop pears are always seedless, and a seedless variety is known. All the better pears produce few seeds. Improvement in grapes is always accompanied by a diminution of seed. The European stock, Vitis vinifera, has given rise to many seedless varieties. Our native wild grapes produce more and better seeds than their cultivated offspring. The stones of the cherries very often fall to perfect seeds. Second-crop apples are said to be nearly or quite seedless, while Menocher's Nocore is a similiar example of a seedless variety. While diminution of seeds almost invariably attends high culture, whether of fruits or flowers, there are also familiar examples of seedless fruits among wild plants. Singularly enough, Dr. Sturtevant cites a few examples, although to the detriment of his assumption that seedless fruits indicate long cultivation. The seedless fruits of the cacti or prickly pears of the western plains are surely not due to any interference by man, nor are those of a score of unimportant plants which are common all over the country.

A Lesson in Handling a First Gun.

The first thing to be learned is to stand properly. Plant both your feet naturally and firmly on the ground, so that the joints of your legs are neither stiff nor bent; then lean the upper part of your body slightly forward. Grip the gunstock just behind the guard with the right hand, the forefinger lightly touching the foremost trigger, that is, the trigger of the right-hand barrel. The stock of the gun, a few inches in front of the guard, must rest easily in the hollow of the left hand. Hold the muzzle of the gun up and slanting away from you, so that the lower end of the butt is just lower than your right elbow. Now, if both hammers have been cocked, and you gently and swiftly draw the butt of the gun up to and against the hollow of the right shoulder, you will find yourself in a good position for taking aim, which is best done by keeping both eyes wide open, and looking straight over the rib between the barrels with the right eye.

You will soon discover the trick of doing this, by fixing your aim with both eyes open, and then holding it perfectly steady, closing the left eye; if the line of sight now changes, you have not sighted correctly; if it remains fixed, the aim has been taken with the right eye.

Be careful after firing never to set your gun down with a hammer up. This is the cause of many accidents. To avoid accident you must be constantly on the alert and cautious, not overlooking even the slightest precaution.—St. Nicholas for June.

Amusing Ignorance.

"What big words he uses," said one lady to another, as they were coming out of church. "Yes," was the reply, "he has a decided polysyllable propensity. Nevertheless, his discourses give me satisfaction." The good lady was not conscious that she had the "polysyllable propensity" herself. It is a bad habit. It is never well to use big words when small ones will serve the purpose.

A lady who was making a call on some acquaintances observed that the furniture had been changed, and remarked to the lady,—

"You have been metamorphosed, haven't you?"

"Y-e-s," said the other hesitatingly. "You mean whitewashed, I suppose; it looks much better, doesn't it?"

"What caused your little boy's sickness?" asked a plain mother of a mother whose little son was very ill.

"He was climbing a ladder," said the lady, "and lost his equilibrium."

"Poor little fellow!" said the sympathetic woman; "do buy him another, he'll be more careful next time!"

"Did you find the people indigent?" asked a clergyman of a wealthy member of his church who had been calling on some very poor families.

"Oh, dear, no," they were respectable, but as poor as poverty."

Miss Anna Godwin, the daughter of Parke Godwin, of New York, is engaged to be married to a Turk by the name of DeCastro, who is in this country to look after the interests of Mr. Mackey in the new cable company. Mr. DeCastro was Mr. Mackey's private secretary, but his business talents were more available in another position, and he sent him over here on this important mission. Miss Godwin will not be the first American girl to marry a Turk. Two of the Turkish Ministers have married New Yorkers. Blacque Bey married a daughter of Dr. Valentine Mott, and his son, Valentine Blacque, is a well-known broker, and a much more intelligent man than the average run of brokers. Aristarchi Bey, the present Turkish Minister, has had two American wives and is now a widower.

NO HARM FROM THE DEAD.

Views Controverting the Idea That Pollution Comes From the Grave.

Philadelphia Times.

"For myself." remarked a leading member of the medical profession here, "it would not shock me at all to know that my skeleton, scraped and strung with wires, is to be hung up in the laboratory of Jefferson Medical College. The skeleton of Dr. Warren, the celebrated surgeon of Boston is hanging in in the laboratory at Harvard to-day, but it is not shown to strangers out of respect for the family. This was done at his own request. But there has been a great deal of exaggeration in what has been written and said about the pollution of water and air by the bodies of the dead. Earth is a great deodorizer and when bodies are placed in it they gradually decompose and all septic and poisonous matters are removed. Of a human body weighing 100 pounds 75 are water and 10 pounds bone, leaving less than twenty pounds as a source of disease. Take into account the vast amount of water in the Schuylkill, and the distance that any poisonons matter has to percolate through the soil to reach it, it seems folly to assert that it would affect the water we drink. If a torrent of water should suddenly rush through Laurel Hill Cemetery in contact with the bodies there, the stream would purify itself in a quater of a mile. And then there is another foolish idea that people indulge in that worms eat the human body. They do not, but live on vegetable substances. The bodies of dead aminals and human beings gradually resolve themselves into their constituent elements. An aminal drops dead out on the plains. Birds of prey and jackals pick its bones and they in time crumble into dust.

'So with the human body. The slow process of combustion goes on in the grave, but it is not out of sight. The gases that escape are seized upon by other forms of life. We are dust, and what is the death of one is the life of another. But it would be very different if a dead body were lying in a drain and the exhalations came up into the houses. In London the subject is attracting a great deal of attention, the buried places of the dead occupying an enormous amount of room. There they are agitating legal enactments to compel cremation. The arguments used there are the economy of space and for sanitary reasons. In London, where the death rate is one person per minute, it is becoming a serious question where they shall place their dead. As an instance that gases from the bodies of the dead do not affect the living, I will mention the Church of the Capuchins at Rome. The body of each monk when he dies is placed in the earth below the church until it has decayed. It is then exhumed and placed against the walls of the vault. The survivors who live over this charnel-house are not affected by exhalations or gases producing disease."

Alertness in Journalism.

When the New York Herald sent Stanley to find Livingstone, it began a new movement in journalism. Instead of simply recording events, the great journals strove to make events, in order to describe them. The London Telegraph sent an archæologist, George Smith, to Mesopotamia to find the buried records of the Assyrian Empire.

Nares' expedition to the Arctic regions was accompanied by the Pandora, a little vessel fitted out by two London journals. They put on board a special correspondent, with orders to retain for them all the information he might collect. He, thinking that for once, there was no rival near, kept a journal which he intended to publish in the two newspapers he represented, as soon as the Pandora returned to port. But an unscrupulous rival journal had put on board a literary sailor. He jotted down the details of the voyage, and, as he had opportunity, transmitted them to his newspaper. When the "special" landed in England, he discovered that his journal was ancient history.

The race for the first news has been the occasion for extraordinary "jockeying," At an Oxford and Cambridge boat-race, one London journal hired a small steamer to follow the competing crews. As it went along it laid a cable under water. Through this the special correspondent transmitted, minute by minute, the details of the race, to the paper, and thereby enabled it to publish successive editions fifteen minutes in advance of its rivals.

During the Ashantee, War, the great London Dailies were obliged to use the cable which ran from the island of Maderia to Lisbon, Paris and London. Each paper had its representative at Funchal, on the island, to whom the special correspondent with the army sent by courier his letters.

The strife between the correspondents was who should first get possession of his letters, and thus be the first to file them with the telegraph operator for the transmission of their messages to London. Unfortunately, they had all failed to allow for one obstruction, the quarantine, whose regulations required that no letter arriving from Africa should be delivered until it had been fumigated.

The operation required a day or two; but the correspondents consoled themselves with the reflection that it was the common lot, no one could get ahead of his brothers. The representative of the Daily News was, however, a "happy thought." He went to the fumigator and said,—

"I do not mean to ask you to neglect your duty, and to let me have my letters before you have fumigated them. If you will open the letters addressed to me, and hold, with a pair of tongs, the sheets open so that I looking through the barred window of the fumigating-room, can glance at them, I will pay you handsomely."

The fumigator did as required; the representative jotted down the interesting items, and the Daily News was the first of the London journals to publish a letter from Ashantee.

A DETECTIVE BY MESMERISM.

New York Sun.

The narrative here presented is familiar to many who have heard it from the lips of the gentleman who asserts that he played the most conspicuous part in it. He is a man more than sixty years of age, active in business, and of unblemished reputation wherever he is known.

"It was in 1847 that my attention was first attracted to the subject of animal magnetism, by the appearance in the Western town in which I then lived of a man named Keely, who advertised to give public exhibitions. His method was to select ten or fifteen persons, males and females, from the audience, seat them in a half circle on the stage, and placing a piece of coin or metal in the palm of the hand of each, request them to look steadily at it. While their attention was thus concentrated he made a few passes over each one, seeming to obtain control over more or less of the group, causing them to aid him in what is now the familiar performance of a mesmerist. Four of us young fellows waited on Professor Keely and requested him to teach us his tricks for our own amusement, he replied that he knew very little of this strange power; he only knew that some persons possess a larger amount of personal magnetism than others, and, where one had a superabundance and another very little, the one with the larger supply after gaining the attention, often could control the mind and will of the other. He showed us how he magnetized his subjects, selecting those of negative passive, temperament, and explained that, after having magnetized them once or twice, he had no difficulty in gaining entire control by simply looking at them. In our experiments it soon became apparent that I possessed a larger amount of this mysterious magnetic power than any of the others, and I used it in many cases to such effect that I began to notice that I was being avoided by many of my old friends among the strict church people, and whispers of our employing supernatural agencies and experimenting in the black art were abroad. More than one old acquaintance whom I saw approaching turned a convenient corner before we met. I began to learn how difficult it was to stem the superstitious current.

"One evening my friend Wells—my principal assistant—and myself were sitting in my room. A tap came at the door and there entered a man about fifty years old. He said he had heard about our having a strange power over the minds and senses of many persons, and had called to ask our assistance in detecting a thief. He was the owner of a line of packet boats running between Cincinnati and Toledo on the canal which passed through our town. One of his captains on his return trip had spent the night at a tavern on the opposite side of the canal much frequented by boatmen, had slept with a roll of money under his pillow, had forgotten it and left without removing it from his bed next morning, had returned for it within an hour, but it was gone, and nothing had been seen or heard of it at the hotel. Such crimes were rare in those days, and detectives wore not at hand on all occasions as now. This would be a novel experiment, and at least prove interesting. Hitherto the minds of our subjects had simply followed ours. Here was the opportunity of ascertaining if the mind of the subject could lead.

"It had just been a week since the theft was committed, which put us to great disadvantage in point of time. I had often seen the old tavern, but had never entered it. I requested the packet owner, Mr. Miller to give me a description of the interior and of the room the captain occupied, which was situated, he said, at the extreme end of the long hall, into which all the bedrooms opened on the second floor, and close to the stairs leading to the third floor. A person passing up or down must of necessity pass this door.

"We pledged ourselves to strict secrecy. Only Mr. Miller, my friend Wells, my subject and myself were to be present at our seances. I sent for a man of the name of Reeves, an honest, good-natured countryman, heavy and dull almost to stupidity, but one of our best subjects. Of course he knew nothing about the robbery, and it was not known to a dozen persons in the place. We subdued the light in the room, drew a table up near the window, seated my friend Wells, at one end with writing materials to take notes, the subject at the other, and Mr. Miller at the locked door to prevent intrusion. I bandaged my subject's eyes tightly, and, taking one of his hands in mine, I made a few passes before his bandaged eyes with my free hand, and requested him to go with me mentally wherever I went. I said to him, that it was now 6 o'clock Thursday morning (giving the date of the morning of the theft, and said we were now going to Burns' tavern. Immediately he seemed to conceive the idea that he was leading me. We passed mentally out of my room into the hall—I keeping my mind closely upon the track we must travel—down the stairs, through the passage, and into the street. In order to reach the bridge across the canal we must turn to the right, go two squares, then turn to the left, and three squares further on cross the bridge, turn again to the right and one block away reach the tavern. I observed with alarm for my experiment that as we passed, mentally, into the street he said we are now turning to the left when he should have said to the right; but before I could correct him he spoke of seeing old Dr. Powell at his gate as we passed, and I knew his residence stood at the right of my hotel. He bade the doctor good morning as we passed by.

"Now we are at the grocery," said he.

"Whose?" I asked.

"I don't know," he replied.

"Can you not read the sign?"

"I will go in and see," said he. Then raising his head, as if looking at some high object, he said, slowly as if spelling it out, 'John Green, flour, feed and groceries.'

"I knew the grocery, and saw he was on the right track. He spoke to several persons I knew as we passed on, and as we neared the bridge said, 'Here comes John Bates; he is speaking to you; why don't you answer him?' 'Never mind,' said I, controlling my surprise. 'Go on.' John Bates had been dead six months. Nothing further occurred until we reached the tavern, which he insisted stood at the left of the bridge. When he had reached the long hall on the second floor I said: 'Now stand here and describe the people as they come out of their rooms.' Presently he said: 'There is one comin' out of that door.' 'What is the number of the room?' I asked. 'I will go in and see," he replied. Again I observed the curious fact that, in order to read a sign or a number, he had to look at it from the other side. In a moment he said: "It is No. 12." He described that man and others, but their descriptions did not tally with that of the captain, whose personal appearance had been minutely described to me. 'Here comes another man,' said he, 'from that room down to the end of the Hall, a big man with a red face. He left his door open. Guess he ain't comin' back.' After a moment he continued: 'There's another comin' down them other stairs; he's a natty lookin' fellow; light skin, blue eyes, light brown hair, younger'n any of the rest. He's lookin' inter that room that big feller come out of, right there by the stairs. Why, he looks as if he'd seen somethin.' Now he's goin' in. Now he's comin' out again, puttin' somethin' in his pocket—looks kinder scared like.

"I directed him to keep his eye on this man, and follow him wherever he went. We followed him down the stairs and into the street. 'Here comes another feller. He's a speakin' to him. He looks an awful lot like him, only older. They are whisperin' together. He's goin' with him. Now we are goin' by the Methodist meetin' house. There's Judge Clark comin.' Why didn't you speak to him?' 'Go on. Go on. You will lose sight of those men,' said I. Judge Clark, whom everybody had known and loved, had been dead three years. 'They are goin' inter that old lumber yard. They are doin' somethin' in that corner. As sure's you live they're a buryin' that little yeller bundle tied with a pink string. He got that outer that feller's room this mornin.' He's a tellin' how he seen it stickin' out under his piller when he went by the door.' My subject had now been under influence as long as I thought it safe to keep him there for that day. So I placed the notes my friend had made in the drawer, unbandaged his eyes, and brought him back to his normal condition by a quick upward motion of my hand. As he opened his eyes the dazed, troubled expression seen in the eyes of a somnambulist on first regaining consciousness came into them for a second, but he was utterly unconscious of anything which had occurred, supposing it to have been one of our usual experiments, and was too dull and indifferent even to ask.

"At the same hour the next day we again met at my room, according to appointment, and took the same positions. Blindfolding my subject, I told him to go back and take up the clew. He soon found the man again. I told him that he must now condense time, counting every six hours as one, in order to catch up in the week. He readily comprehended, although in his normal condition it would have taken him a week to have understood me, and immediately passed over six hours. 'Now,' said he, 'it is night, and he is in bed. He feels bad, and can't sleep, turnin' and tossin' and gettin' up every few minutes, wishin' it was mornin'. Jumping over another six hours he described his getting up, his hurried breakfast, his worried and anxious manner, his departure from the tavern, his again meeting his brother, who seemed to be waiting for him. 'They are goin' down that street,' said he. 'Now they're climin' up them steps and goin' inter that door. Stand back,' said he, 'an' let me open the door. Come in. This is a carpenter shop. They're down by that chest. There they've got that little bundle agin. Now they're hidin' it in the chest. They hid it in the lumber yard once. Now they're hidin' it here an' whisperin' together. The young one's agoin' out.' As we followed he again startled me by calling my attention to meeting and being spoken to by a friend long since dead! We had a description of another anxious, restless night, and another day—my subject always leading me and we followed the clew. After dismissing our somnambulist my friend and myself as before went over every rod of the ground we had just been traveling mentally and visited the carpenter shop, where the subject said the money was hidden. We then understood why he requested me to stand back while he opened the door. We found that the stairs, which he climbed on the outside, led up to a small platform. The door opened outward, and a person entering must step aside to allow it room to swing.

"At our third sitting we had brought the time down to within two days of our present date. This time, in following our man around, he came across the bridge, and step by step we followed him to our hotel. 'Now he's goin' inter the stage office,' said he. 'He's givin' Mr. Walton, the stage agent, a paper. It looks like a bill. Mr. Walton is givin' him some money an' tells him to sign the paper. 'Read the name he signs,' said I. 'I can't,' said he, 'Mr. Walton has folded it up an' put it in the left-hand corner of his desk. There's a bundle of other papers just like it in there.' Without disturbing him in his comments I picked up a scrap of paper and penciled a note to Mr. Walton requesting him to send me a package of receipts in the right hand corner of his desk. Mr. Miller took it down and directly returned with the package, and some twenty or more, which I did not unfold, but spread around on the table within reach of our somnambulist's hand, which, as I have before said, he never removed from the table. He had been entirely unconscious of what we had done, but kept up his running comments, following the man back across the canal and to various places, when all at once he moved his hand towards the papers and exclaimed. 'Why, here's that paper now, the very one he gave Mr. Walton.' Without hesitating a second he picked up one of the folded papers, and without unfolding it, also without even turning his bandaged eyes toward it, he read:—

Received from Samuel Walton, June, 1847, one dollar and fifty cents in full of all accounts.

JAMES B. FREEMAN.

Here was the name of our man at last. We knew him by sight, Wells and I, and that he had a brother, a carpenter. They were considered honest and respectable. We were getting the facts down to a fine point, but the difficulty would be in the proof. How could a man be convicted on the testimony of a somnambulist? We were all greatly excited except our subject, unconscious of anything extraordinary having occurred. He took up his account precisely where he broke off to read the receipt. Condensing another six hours, it was evening. We followed Freeman into a livery stable, where his brother George joined him, and after a protracted conversation with the proprietor, a man by the name of Sykes, he said Freeman handed Sykes the parcel, and the brothers went away as if greatly relieved. Instead of following them he followed Sykes back into a remote part of the stable, where he described him as a slipping back the string on the package and taking out a bill. 'It is money said he, and that other chap stole it, and give it to this 'un, and now he's took one of them bills out, and tied it up so no one would know it had been opened.' Right here we were interrupted by a knock at the door, which our subject did not observe. Mr. Miller stepped out, but almost immediately returned with a radiant face, and, without speaking, held up a little yellow parcel tied with a pink string, which, though never having seen it, we recognized at a glance as the lost package of money. Our subject followed the livery stable man to Burns' tavern. Up the stairs he took us again, through the hall to the foot of the second flight, where, nearly opposite the same room from which the money was taken, he discovered a basket of clean linen, with a pile of towels on the top. 'Why he's a stickn' that package down under the towels. Now he's a hurryn' off.' Suddenly he exclaimed, 'The money is here. Right over there. That man has got it in his pocket. All but one bill. The livery man's got that.'

"We dismissed our subject and rested our case. Mr. Miller opened the package, which had been sent over to him by the landlord of the Burns House with a message that it had been found in a basket of linen, counted the money which was all in $100 bills, and found one bill missing. Eleven hundred dollars were returned out of the original $1200 which the package had contained. Later my friend Wells and myself sauntered into the bar-room of the Burns House. A good many men were standing about, and the one subject of discussion was the finding of the money. By this time everybody knew that the money had been lost and quite as mysteriously found, it was said, by a chambermaid among the linen. All sorts of surmises and suspicions were floating about. Many looked askance at us as we drew near, and whispered together, for somehow it had leaked out that Mr. Miller had been closeted a great deal with us. An uneasy feeling that some accusations might be made was evident. Soon after Mr. Miller came up to the bar, and while being congratulated on all sides, smilingly said that he never felt uneasy. He knew all the time that it would be returned. 'But,' said he, 'I'm $100 short; I don't worry about that.' Seating himself and elevating his legs comfortably to the back of a chair opposite, he said: "That $100 is all right," biting off the end of a cigar and lighting it: "I'll get it in a few days." Everybody looked curiously at his neighbor, but no one thought it best to ask for any explanation. Several went away soon afterward. As we passed out the elder of the Freeman brothers was just ahead of us. The next day Mr. Miller left on one of his boats for home, thirty miles distant. Two weeks later he called at my room again, and said he had just received the other one-hundred-dollar bill! Two young men drove up to his door one day the previous week, he said, strangers to him, and asked if he was Mr. Miller. They declined to enter the house; said they were from the town where the money was lost. Had heard that he had intimated that they were in some way connected with the loss of the money, or at least with the missing $100 bill. He said he had accused no one. One of them remarked it was hard to rest under a suspicion, and rather than have their names connected with it they would prefer to make good the deficiency, at the same time handing to Mr. Miller a $100 bill. He took it, bade them good day, and they drove away.

Cold and Heat Near the Poles.

We are accustomed to associate this geographical position with extreme cold (remarks the duke of Argyll in the April number of Good Words). But the rocks of Greenland tell us that, although this is the case now, it was not the case in former ages, and consequently that there is no necessary connection between an extremely low temperature and a position near the pole. They tell us in short, that this association is purely temporary and accidental. It is striking and curious enough to find, in the bleak headlands of the Isle of Mull, on our own coasts, the leaves of an abundant forest vegetation—the large leaves of the plane tree, the evergreen needles of the texodium, of the yew, and of the pine, and mixed with these the frondlike leaves of the tree called by botanists "Salisburia," which is now an inhabitant of Japan. But the curiosity of this contrast between the present and the past, as regards climatal conditions, is nothing to the still gerater contrast in this matter which is presented by finding the same fossil flora in the rocks of Greenland—rocks whose surfaces are now almost wholly bare of vegitation, and all the higher elevations of which are covered with eternal ice and snow. And yet even this contrast is not the contrast highest in degree which the rocks of Greenland present. The Miocene flora, to which these leaf-beds belong, is a very old flora now, but there was another flora much older, which we have never seen in life, and which, from its nearest living analogies, we are accustomed to think must have been associated with almost a tepid and steamy atmosphere. This is the flora of the coal measures. Yet this flora, too, in long ages before the Miocene, has certainly flourished on the area which is now occupied by Greenland. It is needless to point out what curious questions these facts raise.

The Prince of Wales Bored.

From the London Truth.

The Prince of Wales has not so much as gone to Royat for his health as to avoid being condoled with on the death of his lamented brother. He has been surfeited with conventional mourning in Germany, because, as one of the Prince Consort's sons he is Duke of Saxony. He could not traverse a village or get out at a railway station without being pounced upon by well-meaning functionaries of the locality and obliged to listen to a dull essay on the shortness of life and the irreparable loss the royal family has sustained. At Darmstadt everybody wore a long face. At Berlin the lugubrious ceremonial observed by every one who approached him became intolerable. The Prince was thankful to find himself after all this simulated woe in a republican city [illegible] senting him with an address

HOW TO BE BEAUTIFUL.

A Prescription the Ladies Should Generally Take.

Cincinnati Enquirer.

"Here comes a model," remarked a well-known physician while standing for a moment at the corner of Fourth and Race streets one afternoon last week. "Notice that young ladie's erect carriage, her firm and graceful walk; see the bloom of her complexion, such as can not possibly be imitated by artificial aids, and then when she comes nearer notice how calmly she will meet your gaze, without flinching, blushing or exhibiting the slightest awkwardness."

The writer was not in the habit of gazing at young ladies in the manner indicated, but he made an exception to his general rule in favor of the superb creature approaching.

"There is health and beauty worth looking at," whispered the doctor.

"One of your patients I suppose; a monument to your skill, and all that sort of thing. Let me congratulate you."

"Not at all, not at all. She has never been under my hands; but my delight in her appearance is professional all the same. She is a living embodiment of a course of treatment which I would like to see adopted by every lady in Cincinnati. One year ago she was like any one of these—"

He pointed out a group of ladies on the opposite pavement who were struggling along in tight shoes, taking short, mincing steps; bent forward at angles ranging from forty-five degrees, and without exception sallow or artificially blooming.

"She took a journey to England, to some point in Devonshire, I believe; stayed there for six months, and came back as you see her now."

"No doubt every lady in Cincinnati would like to adopt that course of treatment."

"But you do not understand me. The trip to England, in itself, was valueless. It was the knowledge which this young lady gained there that showed her the way to her present health and beauty. The whole secret is contained in two words; they are

JUDICIOUS EXERCISE.

The young woman in England rides, walks, rows, plays lawn tennis, botanizes, rides the tricycle, goes through a course of calisthenics, every morning; in short, is on the jump from morning till night, and the result is she is generally as healthy and hearty as her brothers. In the present state of society in this country, all these things cannot be indulged in by our girls without more or less inconvenience and expense; but no one is so circumstanced that she cannot take all the exercise that is required to give her a sound mind in a sound body.

"Suppose you tell me what you consider judicious exercise for a lady.

"I can do that in a few words. Round shoulders, a stooping gait, and a flat chest are the rule rather than the exception. They can be cured in a very short time by fifteen minutes' exercise night and morning in the open air or in a well ventilated room. The morning exercise had better be taken immediately after rising, before dressing for the day, as tight clothing will interfere with the free movements required.

"The first thing to be done is to stand erect, with the heels together, the head thrown back, the chest out and hands hanging loosely at the side. Then the lungs should be filled with air and slowly exhausted, perhaps half a dozen times. The arms should be thrown forward at full length in front, on a level with the shoulders, the palms of the hands in contact. Keeping the arms extended, the hands should be forcibly thrown backward until the backs of the hands touch behind the shoulders, while the palms come together before the chest. Let this motion be gone through with rapidly some thirty times.

"In the next move hold the arms straight above the head, with the palms of the hands forward; now, bending the hips, bring the arms down in front, keeping them straight all the time, until the fingers touch the toes; then return the arms to their original position above the head. This motion should be performed very slowly twenty or thirty times. At first it will almost be impossible to touch the floor with the finger tips without bending the knees, but in the course of time it will be performed readily.

GYMNASTICS.

"In the third movement the lady should hold her hand close to her sides, with the thumbs still forward. Bring the arms up from the sides, thumbs still forward; then return them to their first position. The arms must not be bent at the elbows. If persisted in, this movement will straighten out stooping shoulders. Are these directions perfectly plain?"

"Perfectly so."

"Any lady who will vigorously practice these movements twice a day for fifteen minutes will presently have a full chest, straight shoulders and sound lungs, unless her case is so far advanced as to be incurable.

"Of course these exercises will have the same effect on men as well; but, as a rule, men do not need them in anything like the same degree as women. The man who does his duty in the world is compelled to take a degree of exercise unknown to the other sex in this country. I am glad to hear, however, that the example of English women in this respect is having a good effect on the daughters in New York society. In fact, it is becoming a topic of conversation in the east as to whether or not the growing disposition to admit women to participation in many sports, and the education which they are receiving in matters which formerly it was a rule of modesty for them to appear to be ignorant of, is a good thing. I am emphatically of the opinion that it is good, and one argument against the admission of ladies into many sports is that the sexes will be brought to discussing together the points, beauties and defects of horses and dogs, and that they will soon come to talk too freely together about pedigree, points of breeding, etc. Of course, that is all rot. A modest woman may be just as modest in the hunting field as she is in the parlor.

"But to come back to the subject of home gymnastics. Every lady, is ambitious to be the possessor of and a full chest; and where she is not possessed of them she tries to dupe the public into believing that they are hers by means of pads; or else she resorts to quacks who advertise nostrums for the dvelopment of the figure.

"Take the biceps muscle of the arm, for instance, one of the most noticeable features of a woman in full dress. How much, in your judgment, will a few minutes' exercise each day for a year increase the girth of this muscle?"

"Give it up."

"Two inches. Enough to make all the difference between a thin arm and a plump one. And the same amount of exercise given to the chest will increase it how much? You have no idea? From four to six inches or more. In addition to the beauty given to the figure by the full chest the increase in lung power will serve to vitalize every organ in the body, and will bring with it a clear eye, good blood, and its attendant, a fair complexion, a springy step, high spirits and a capacity for enjoyment unknown before. An addition of three inches in the girth of the chest means an addition of fifty inches of surface in the air cells of the lungs. Just make a note of that fact, please, and remember that while no doctor living can furnish drugs that will beneficially enlarge the lungs, every man in Cincinnati can add fifty inches to their surface by a little regular exercise.

"The season is now here when outdoor exercise may be taken with comfort, and if I could impress the ladies of this one city alone with the importance which really attaches to the subject, I am confident that before winter again opens more good will have resulted than has been done by life-long efforts of the best doctor in the city.

"Of course, an exercise that will develop one set of muscles will not benefit another. By practice you must find out for yourself what movement affects each muscle, and direct your movements accordingly. But it is safe to say that the three exercises which I have given you may de followed with profit by everybody, as they tend to produce a full chest and an erect carriage, which are desiderata required by every man, woman and child.

A Costly Piece of Furniture.

The finest and most costly piece of furniture ever conceived was the famous "peacock throne" of Delhi. Tavernier, a skillful French jeweler, saw it, and made a computation of its intrinsic value. He calmly estimated that its economical worth, aside from its claims in an artistic way, was $30,000,000. It was but 6 feet high and 4 feet broad, but it was composed of solid gold inlaid with rare oriental gems. It received its name from the jeweled images of peacocks which adorned its canopy. This canopy was also of gold supported on twelve gold pillars, and hung all around with a fringe of pearls. On each side of the throne stood two chuttahs, or umbrellas, symbolical of royality. They were made of crimson velvet, embroidered with gold thread and pearls, and were equipped with solid gold handles and diamonds. This throne was constructed by Austin de Bordeaux, at the order of the Emperor Shah, the same enterprising monarch who had constructed the Taj, the pearl mosque of Agra and the other most remarkable monument of architecture in these parts. The peacock throne was carried away by the Persian Nadir Shah, while the jeweled ceiling was melted down by the Mahrattas at the time of their invasion in 1759. This ceiling was valued at about $850,000.

Pad-Pad-Padding.

There is a tendency nowadays toward padding in papers which readers can not too strongly repress, if they value their lives, or that which goes to make up their lives—their time. The New York Herald is responsible for this bed-quilt journalism. If the Herald has a five-word idea to say, it takes twenty-five to say it in, and then indulges in vain-glorious flapdoodle over its "enterprise." Its cable letter is simply maddening; the padding-pudding is so rich and so redundant that it is almost impossible to find the news plums. The Chicago papers have faithfully followed in the footsteps of the Herald; if a barn blows down they devote a page to it. There will be a diagram of the premises; view of the barn before being blown down; view of the barn while being blown down; view of the ruins; interview with the hired man, who said he always knowed it was a-going to blow down; interview with the owner, with his and other theories on barns blowing down; interview with Professor Mugwump, the distinguished Chicago savant, with his views as to the reason why barns blow down rather than up; comparative table of barn mortality in this and other States for the last forty years, showing percentage of barns blowing down compared with the illiterate vote; history of barns from the earliest times to the present; statement of loss—five hundred dollars. And does a suffering Chicago public read this? Great Scott, no! Nobody reads it but the proof-reader; not even the men who write it—they haven't time. It serves, however, as a peg to hang a boast upon concerning "enterprise."—San Francisco Argonaut.

Some Railway Salaries and Wages.

From the London Railway News.

The amount expended by the railway companies in managing, working, and upholding the lines for the past year was about £37,000,000, of which exactly one-half, or £18,500,000, was paid for salaries and wages alone. The ordinary shareholders received in the year £14,000,000 by way of dividends on their holdings, or between £4,000,000 and £5,000,000 less than paid their employes. The fact that the latter have thus a larger pecuniary interest in the railways, and absorb more than one-fourth of the gross earnings before payment of any interest or dividend whatsoever, makes the wages question the most important to be dealt with in the administration of the railways. From a social point of view the subject is, of course, one of great magnitude, for it would appear that the annual aggregate exceeds the sum voted for pay and allowances to the army and navy together, both for effective and non-effective services.

A burglar entered the house of Joseph Day in Helena, Mont., taking diamonds and jewelry to the amount of $500.

A Japanese Cremation.

H. W. Lucey, in the Pall Mall Gazette says: There is one nation, now the oldest empire in the world, where cremation is an established usage, and where the government, with a shrewd appreciation of the advantages of sanitary laws, have of late years carefully fostered it. This is Japan, where cremation establishments, under Government control, are to be found in all the chief cities. In Tokio, the principal place of cremation is situated at Shen-jo, a suburb. After an hour's drive through a lane of busy life we came to the silent house where the dead awaited the last service of the living. It stands a little apart from the main road, a building of a single story, with an innocent-looking tall chimney, and might be connected with a pottery or small iron foundry. The business is always conducted privately, and there are few in Tokio, except those who are professionally engaged, who have witnessed the process. But arrangements made by the omnipotent foreign minister opened the doors, and secured a respectful welcome for us. We first received in the house of the manager, where tea was served in priceless porcelain cups of Kutania ware. The furnace, if so imposing a name may be used for a process so simple, stood a few paces from the house. On entering it there was nothing to be seen but what appeared to be two butter tubs resting upon a few fagots of wood. There were several cavaties about two inches deep and a foot long in the stone floor, and these were filled with shavings. According to municipal law, no burning is to be done before half-past six in the evening. It still wanted ten minutes to that time, but in the circumstances the manager thought he would be safe in anticipating the hour, and the shavings were fired. One of the men, kneeling before the growing flame, fanned it with a piece of wood. It caught the dry faggots, greedily licked the sides of the tub, rose high in the air, and then, with a horrible thud, the head of the barrel burst outwards. Quick as thought, the man seized a large piece of wood, lying by in readiness, and hid from sight whatever may have protruded. It is the boast of the skillful cremator that under his supervision the contents of the barrel are never exposed to view. A heavy matting of wet straw is laid over the length of the barrel before the fire is ignited. As the barrel is burned away this falls in and covers the body. In three hours the work is done. Every particle of flesh is burned away, and there remains only the skeleton. The bones and the teeth the relatives collect and give them supulture. There are three classes of cremation at this establishment. In the first class each body is burned separately, a charge being made of 7 yen, equal to 28s, in our money. In the second class the charge is only 10s., the difference being that two or more, according to the briskness of trade, are burned at the same time. The third class pay 6s. 6d., the semblance of a coffin provided by the tub being dispensed with. It will be seen that, as compared with the most moderate scale of ordinary burial charges, cremation is cheap. As far as I could gather, it is this which recommends itself to the class of Japanese, generally the least wealthy, who avail themselves of the resources at the establishment at Shen-jo and kindred institutions.

A Woman of Nerve.

In these days the epithet "nervous" is frequently applied to woman, but rarely is one spoken of as a "woman of nerve," Physiologists say the sex has physically degenerated since the days when our grandmothers did their own work and brought up large families. But we heard an anecdote which exhibits one New England woman as inheriting the firm nerves of ancestors, who never fainted and seldom trembled.

One night, a lady living in a town near Boston was sitting up alone for her husband, who was expected to arrive by a late train. Feeling a little unwell, she went to the closet and selected a bottle which she supposed to contain tincture of rhubarb.

Pouring out a table-spoonful, she drank it. Its peculiar taste causedher to look again at the bottle's label. It read "Tincture of Aconitic," and then she remembered that a strong decoction of that poisonous plant had been prepared for the horse.

Though knowing that her life was in danger, she neither fainted nor screamed for help, but went into the kitchen and made herself a cup of very strong coffee. After drinking it, she walked up and down, fearing to sit down lest she might fall to sleep.

At five o'clock in the morning, one of the household, on coming down stairs, found her pacing the floor, but as calm as if walking for exercise. A physician was sent for. He quickly came, and said that the coffee had saved her life. Lest some injurious effects might follow, he prescribed another antidote.

Only those who have been in a similar situation can enter into the feelings of that woman as she read correctly the bottle's label. But few, even of this class, can do no more than admire her strength of will and nerves of steel.

The anecdote warms against the too prevalent habit of putting a bottle containing poison among bottles of medicine. It also reminds every reader that it is expedient to read a bottle's label before imbibing its contents.

The marriage of Princess Elizabeth of Hesse and the Grand Duke Sergius of Russia was solemnized in the Winter palace with customary pomp. Two services were performed, the first in accordance with the orthodox ritual, and the second according to the Lutheran rites. At the conclusion of the services a salute of 101 guns was fired in honor of the newly-wedded couple. A state banquet was given in the afternoon, at which toasts were offered in honor of the czar and czarina, bride and bridegroom, and the Grand Duke of Hesse. In the evening there was a grand ball. All the festivities were on a scale of unusual magnificence.

M. Pasteur is being overwhelmed with letters from persons offering their services as subjects for his experiments in inoculating human beings against rabies. The experiments are to be made before a government commission, and among the persons who offer to submit their persons to the interest of science, are no less than four medical students who beg to be given the preference, as they are willing if it need be, to die in what they all pronounce "the cause of humanity."

There is very little doubt expressed among members of congress that adjournment will have to be postponed until the last of July or the first of August.

SHARON'S SCRAPE.

The Pro Tem. Husband of Miss Hill Expresses an Opinion of Himself—His love of Poetry.

In person Mr. Sharon's inches and avoirdupois are at strange variance with the list of his bonds or the record of his loves. He is, to use a home phrase, "a runt," says the Chicago Herald, whose reporter interviewed him last week. But if one peeps into his hat it will be seen that it numbers 7¼. His legs, too, are stalwart, and his frame compact. But Mr. Sharon's chief charm is his Mark Tapley-like jollity is the face of adversity that some would think even $20,000,000 could not offset. Parlor S held a jolly little party the day the senator left for Washington. The senator sat in his shirt-sleeves on the side of the bed, swinging his short legs and smoking a cigar. M. C. Budd, an old San Francisco acquaintance, but now a Chicagoan, sat in a big arm chair. Morrow, of the Pacific coast delegation, sat in another big chair. With the frankness or his kind and the training of a Pacific coaster the laughing "defendant" exclaimed: "Boys, it was a scrape and a bad one; but, thank God, I'm getting out of it. You fellows may laugh, but what is it the poet Pope says:

"Virtue she finds too painful an endeavor.
Content to dwell in decencies forever.

"I admit it; I've been indecent. But I'd like to know what you fellows would have done under the same circumstances."

There was a painful silence, and Mr. Budd reached for the ebony stand.

"Yes," said Mr. Sharon, "it was pretty tough to go on the stand admit that I had been such a fool; but what are you going to do—be blackmailed? Not much."

Somebody here suggested that perhaps a couple of thousand dollars would have fixed the thing up.

"Oh, no; you don't know that crowd," said Mr. Sharon. "In the first place the woman was bad and reckless. I treated her honorably, as the world would call it. I gave her a splendid income. But she wanted more. She invaded my rooms; she pried into my business secrets; she rummaged my papers; she stole my shirt-tail and buried it in the ground, with some wild 'spook' idea of getting me to marry her. Of course that would disgust any man. I saw I was in a box, and resolved to fly—

"Fly like a youthful hart or roe,
Over the hills where the spices grow.

I gave her $7,500 to call it square. That was right, wasn't it, Jones?"

Senator Jones nodded.

"Well," continued the "defendant," "it wasn't enough, and then she got that scoundrel Neilson from Australia to egg on her suit. I could have settled it at any time for $20,000—$10,000 to her and $10,000 to Neilson. But not one cent! Millions for defense—not a cent for tribute."

"But Senator," said Mr. Budd, "economy. You surely have spent more than that."

"To date, yes, I should say so, and twice that. But I will not be blackmailed out of a cent. I paid that woman well. I gave her a small fortune. I mean now not only to beat her blackmail suit, but I will land her in the penitentiary. I shall have both her and Neilson indicted for conspiracy, and send them to state prison if I can. And I am not sure but I'll catch Tyler, too, her counsel."

"But senator," said one of the party, an old California stager, how did you ever get into such a snap?"

"And you ask that!" said the senator, as he reached for the ebony stand. "What is it the poet Thompson says?"

"He saw her charming, but he saw not half
The charms her downcast modesty concealed.

"Who could resist it? I read the 'Maid of Athens' to her. She melted; then 'the kiss, snatched hasty from the sidelong maid,' did the business. What ever might have been lacking, '$500 a month supplied.'" The object now is to expose the conspiracy and get the leaders in jail. I sent two men to Australia to hunt up Neilson's record, the fellow who got Miss Hill into the litigation. I found he had been convicted of forgery there and sentenced to seven years penal servitude. I have detectives traveling over the country hunting up Miss Hill's earlier antecedents. I don't care to crush the woman any more than necessary, but if it were necessary we would show her to have been an adventuress from her twentieth year. That's enough to say. Oh, I've been ready for her at every turn. What is it Pope says in the Wife of Bath?"

"The mouse that trusts to one poor hole
Can never be a mouse of any soul."

And as Mr. Sharon quoted this gem his eyes shone with delight, and he invited his friends to the ebony stand.

Spare That Tree.

The waste of forest wood on this continent has been shamefully extravagant. Forty years ago wood was very plenty, and to the farmer every tree was an enemy. Now that the hills and plains are denuded, men are planting trees and patiently waiting until they attain growth enough to be cut for their timber.

According to the Indianapolis News, a farmer in Indiana is calling himself hard names because he didn't leave the hundreds of black walnut trees standing on his farm just as he had found them when he settled on it thirty years ago.

Like all the others, he went to work with might and main cutting them down, piling them in vast heaps and burning them. It was heavy work, and his two boys died from the sprains received while tugging at the big logs, and the old man is broken in health, from the same cause. For all this labor he has a farm worth at most eight thousand dollars, whereas if he had left the timber standing, it would have been worth a million dollars at least.

Agents for English and French companies are scouring the state, buying up all old logs, stumps and odd trees that are to be found. The reason of this is that no other wood is so well suited for veneering as walnut.

There were four services last Sunday in Temple Gardens, London. Mr. Moody preached at the first service on the subject "The Good Samaritan." The sermon was intently listened to and produced a marked effect. The celebrities present included Gen. Lord Wolseley and many other officers of the army. During the day the earl and countess of Aberdeen, duke of Abercorn, earl of Jersey, several members of the Rothschild family, and a number of members of parliament attended.

CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

Severe frosts all through New England, killing the garden products, are reported. The northwest has been exempted from such a visitation and everything looks well.

The population of the German Empire December 1, 1880, was 45,238,820; that of the United States same year, 49,869,785. By the ratio of increase Germany should now have nearly 50,000,000 and the United States 56,000,000.

The long, cigarshaped steamers have been eclipsed by the America which made the shortest passage, and is broad in the beam, and has engines of only half the power of the Oregon and others, and only uses half as much coal. The runs of the America may be exceptional, but they show that the race is not always with the long, narrow boat.

In almost every section of the northwest the rains have been frequent and abundant. Some localities think they have had too much, but in general all are satisfied. The growing crops, vegetation and foliage of all kinds, never looked better. Corn is a little late but the next sixty days will do wonders in the way of forcing things.

In the popular estimate of slander and slanderers London is evidently very different from New York. In the former city a broker circulated a false report concerning a prominent banking house, and afterwards publicly apologized and retracted all that had been said, but he is not forgiven, and was hissed on entering the London Stock Exchange.

Des Moines Special: A destructive wind storm swept through the Boyer valley last week. The large red brick house of Samuel Dunham, in Crawford county was wrecked, one corner being torn out. A large barn near Woodbine, belonging to James Cromie, was also destroyed entirely. Considerable damage was done to crops along the Boyer valley and in the hills adjoining.

Amateur observers in astronomy turn from the moon in the east to observe the fine crescent of Venus in the west. Both Jupiter and Venus are in the west, far beyond the sun and receding from us, and the other approaching that portion of its orbit lying between us and the sun. After this month there will be an end of favorable observation of these planet. Astronomers say look out for meteors in the summer months, especially in August.

A new Babylonian exploring expedition has been projected at the instance of the Rev. John P. Peters a young Episcopal clergyman, who was for some time a member of the Yale College faculty, and a Hebrew scholar of unusual attainments. He writes to the New York Evening Post that one person has provided the money necessary, and the party will start this summer or in the autumn. It is supposed that Dr. William Hayes Ward, the learned editor of the Independent, will have charge of the expedition. Its results will be awaited with great interest by scholars, archæologists, and students of the Bible.

The lack of guideboards on country roads is a great source of annoyance to everybody not familiar with their routes of travel. It is a simple thing to make a turn at a corner when we know which road to take, but not so simple to go many miles or more and find we are on the wrong road. All roads are liable to be traveled by strangers, and every place where two roads meet should be furnished with a guideboard. Strangers traveling on the prairies of the Northwest, even in sections long settled, especially where there are no fences, suffer a good deal from the lack of guides. Every town and county should remedy this grievance, and by doing so will benefit themselves as well as the public. Guideboards are necessary in summer, and in winter when landmarks are obscured, are imperatively required. Let everybody help to "guide the traveler on his way."

The new civil service statute of Massachusetts, just enacted by the legislature, regulates the minutest details of appointment, promotion and conduct in the service of the state and in all city governments, and applies to clerkships, police appointments, and all appointive positions. One of its provisions is as follows: "No person habitually using intoxicating beverage to excess shall be appointed to or retained in any office, appointment or employment to which the provision of this act are applicable; nor shall any vender of intoxicating liquor be appointed or retained." Section five provides that no recommendation of an applicant for office from any member of the legislature, alderman or councilman, except as to character and residence, shall be received or considered. No councilor, member of the legislature, alderman or councilman, or any officer or employe of said bodies, and no executive or judicial officer and no clerk and employe of any sort shall solicit or receive, or be in any way concerned in, any political assessment or contribution for any purpose whatever. These provisions are pretty strict and far in advance of any other civil service rules of the country.

Secretary Teller has ordered an investigation of all the disbursing officers of the interior department, and will discharge any of them who are found to have been engaged in speculation. He has no suspicions, but wants to be assured that the government money is in safe keeping.

Gen. Sheridan was on the floor of the senate Wednesday, and was received with great cordiality. It was Sheridan's first appearance in the senate since he assumed the command of the army, and he was there to consult with Senator Plumb and other members of the appropriation committee about the new posts at Fort Snelling and San Antonio.

Secretary Folgar has written Representative Warner, chairman of the subcommittee of the house committee on claims, a long letter, expressing his approval of the house bill now pending to relieve from further liability on account of the direct tax of 1861 those states that have not paid their proportionate part thereof, and to refund to the states that have paid the sums received from them respectively.

Secretary Frelinghuysen Thursday, the 19th, communicated to the house committee on appropriations and foreign affairs, at a joint meeting, details of the plans of the administration in respect to the Nicaragua water-way. He said the unusual methods adopted for making these matters known to congress were taken for "real reasons and asked that his communications might be received under the restrictions of official secrecy. The committee, after hearing the secretary, adjourned without action.

Indictments have also been returned against the keepers of a few gambling houses. Marshal Gutherie has resigned.

The house of William H. Avery of Winona was entered by a thief on June 4, and a lady's gold watch and a breastpin valued at $42 were stolen. The articles belonged to Mrs. Avery and were taken from her bureau. Marshal Miller of Winona received word from Sheriff Carl of Hudson, Wis., recently that he had arrested a man whom he believed to be the guilty party, as he had found the breastpin upon him. Thereupon Marshal Miller went to Hudson, and on making a closer search of the prisoner found the watch secreted in his boot. He brought the thief to Winona, who turnes out to be Dick Rogers, a well-known prison bird, who has just completed a term of two years and a half in the Wisconsin state prison at Waupun, for robbing a hardware store at Amherst, Wis.

A treaty embodying the foregoing has been concluded, subject to ratification by President Grevy.

In the house of commons, the marquis of Hartington said: The government believes that the British and Egyptian force now in Egypt is sufficient to defend upper Egypt. After the defeat of Gen. Hicks last autumn, British and Egyptian military officials united informing a common plan for defending upper Egypt. The command and dis position of the khedive's army, however, are distinct from those of the British troops. The government, therefore, is ignorant of the forces, and is now negotiating with a view to placing British officers in supreme command over all the troops in Egypt.

England's Great Preacher.

A jubilee in honor of the fiftieth birthday of Rev Mr. Charles H. Spurgeon, was given at Holborn tabernacle London, on the 18th. The building was crowded, over 5,000 persons being present. Mr. Spurgeon and various members of the Spurgeon family were grouped on the platform, and were greeted with prolonged cheering and waving of handkerchiefs. The applause continued several minutes after the opening hymn was sung. The people then united in prayer, after which Mr. Spurgeon addressed the meeting. He spoke at some length and with great feeling, almost moving the audience to tears. He thanked his hearers in the warmest terms for their cordial reception. He said:

> Our American friends are generally very cute judges. I have often their opinions of me. The have repeatedly asserted "Spurgeon is no orator. We have scores of better preachers in America, but it is evident that Spurgeon preaches the gospel, and very celebrated men do not."

Spurgeon continued in his characteristic style to urge preachers to preach more simply and plainly the pure gospel of the grace of God. The dry, dead gospel of some preachers never evoked sympathy in men's hearts.

Failure of Commodore Garrison.

Commodore Cornelius K. Garrison on Friday last filed an assignment in the county clerk's office at New York to John T. Terry, of E. D. Morgan & Co.; preferences, $631,890. Garrison well known as formerly deeply interested in the Pacific Mail, New Orleans and West India steamship lines. He is, also known to be the largest stockholder in profitable gas companies of New York and St. Louis and New Orleans. He was the principal owner of Missouri Pacific, but sold out a few years ago to Jay Gould. He has been interested lately in numerous railway schemes. He was formerly a resident of St. Louis, and made the bulk of his fortune prior to the rebellion.

The amount involved by the failure is supposed to be $5,000,000. The preferences amount to $631,000. Assignee Terry said it was impossible yet to state the figures. The effect on Wall street was to still more unsettle things, though to not so great an extent as feared. Melville C. Day, counsel for Garrison, says:

> The assignment is made because of financial embarrassment. It was forced upon Garrison by the protest of notes under his endorsement. He is a heavy holder of securities, and so much of his wealth was tied up in these, which are almost unmarketable at present, that he could not meet his liabilities. He has a large number of Ohio railroad securities which have shrunk, but which are not now on the market, the value of which cannt be estimated. The assignment is simply for the benefit of creditors.

Catholic Temperance Convention.

The Catholic Temperance societies of Minnesota had their annual session in Minneapolis last week. There were a very large number of socities represented, some six hundred men being in the procession. At the church of the Immaculate Conception, where high mass was celebrated conducted by Rev. Father Shanley, St. Paul, celebrated; Rev. Father R. P. Dennely, dean; Rev. Father Hand, Corcoran, subdeacon, and Rev. Father Burnes, of the Immaculate Conception, master of services. A very large number of the clergy were in attendance. Bishop Ireland in the evening delivered an eloquent address, and in the following paragraph foreshadowed the action of the convention: "At the next legislature we will bring in a bill for a state high license law, and I want you delegates to go home and see to it that representatives are elected to the legislature favorable to high license. The total abstinence societies hold the balance of political power in this state and can accomplish the desired result."

A letter from Bishop Spaulding was read. He said: "The more I reflect the more I am persuaded that here in these United States prohibitory legislation will do more to promote temperance than all other means."

A summary of the membership of the different societies was given, showing a total of 2,820, against 2,290 the previous year. The total collections of the year foot up $438.79, of which $95.05 was on account of the literary tax, and the balance in the general fund. There are bills outstanding amounting to $237, to meet which there is $155 in the treasury.

The tacasurer reported that he had received $198.88 from his predecessor, and $455.09 from the secretary, making a total of $646.97. The disbursements amount to $405.38, leaving in the treasury $241.59.

Messrs. J. F. Carrere of St. Paul, P. J. Morgan of Minneapolis, and John O'Brien of Stillwater acted delegates to the national convention.

The resolutions follow in substance, the remark of Bishop Ireland, quoted above. It was voted to hold the next meeting in Stillwater. The following officers were elected: President—T. D. O'Brien, St. Paul, Vice President—William Dowlan. Secretary—M. J. Moran, St. Paul. Treasurer—Dennis Doyle, St. Paul. Sergeant-at-Arms—William Foley, Stillwater. County Presidents—Hennepin, Barney Mousso Freeborn, T. J. O'Leary; Anoka, Michael Tierney; Big Stone, M. J. McDonald; Goodhue, P. D. Kelly; Mower, James Furlong; Washington, Thomas Nolan; Waseca, D. McDaughlin; Le Sueur, J. H. Gildean; Dakota, John Shields; Winona, John Czeszinski; Scott, D. Kernan. The officers were then installed and the convention adjourned.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS

In the senate Monday Mr. Ingalls called attention to language personally offensive to himself, which he said Mr. Brown of Georgia had interpolated into a speech of his after it had been delivered on the floor of the senate Mr. Ingalls proceeded to read the offensive language, saying:

> I want to call attention to the fact that by such practice as this, the senator from Georgia commits a forgery and a fraud upon the public records.

This remark produced a great sensation in the senate chamber. Vice President Edmunds called Mr. Ingalls to order. Amid the excitement the chairman again called the senator from Kansas to order, but Mr. Ingalls, with bitter sarcasm, continued, ending in a motion that the language to which he had referred be stricken from the record. Mr. Gorman objected to the motion, but after a while Brown calming himself, arose and said that the motion being objected to, he would not reply then. "I do not intend that this shall go unchallenged," he added, "but will reply to the accusations. The question of investigating the recent bank failures in New York was discussed without action. The senate insisted on its three amendments to the postoffice bill to which the house continued to disagree. The Utah bill was debated and an amendment permitting divorce only for one cause in places where the United States has exclusive jurisdiction was rejected —4 to 42.

On Monday, in the House, bills were introduced granting 160 acres of land to every honorably-discharged Union soldier or sailor of the late war and against the prosecution of fraudulent claims against foreign goverments. The election committee reported in favor of the contestant in the Campbell-Morey case, Ohio. On a test vote, the house decided—156 to 52—to go on with the appropriation bills with a view to effecting an early adjournment, and the deficiency bill was taken up. Mr Strait presented to the house the petition of the chamber of commerce of St. Paul, requesting an appropriation for the construction of a lighthouse at the Grand Marias. Mr. Washburn introduced in the house a bill providing for holding a term of the United States circuit court once every year in Minneapolis, Minn. The bill was introduced in accordance with a memorial of the attorneys of Minneapolis who practice before the court, which was presented by Mr. Washburn to the house.

In the house Mr. Slocum presented a conference report on the Fitz John Porter bill. The effect is to strike out of the bill the words, "together with all rights, titles and privileges," and to insert the words "provided that said Fitz John Porter shall receive no compensation or allowance whatsoever prior to his appointment under this act," instead of the following words in the bill: "But this act shall not be construed as authorizing pay, compensation or allowance prior to his appointment under it." The conference report was agreed to—158 to 81.

Mr. Cook introduced in the house a bill changing the place of holding the courts in the Northern district of Iowa and Fort Dodge to Algona.

In the deficiency bill which passed the house is an item to pay ex-Indian Agent Hooper of Brown's Valley, Minn., the balance due him as salary and clerk hire, and other expenses amounting in the aggregate to $800 or $900.

In the Senate, Tuesday, the Brown-Ingalls controversy was resumed. Senator Brown called the attention of the senate to the insulting and opprobrious language used by the senator from Kansas (Ingalls) toward a member of the senate who could not repel such insults without violating the rules which all senators were in honor bound to obey. He did not wish to glaze over the matter. The charge of the senator from Kansas was that of falsifying the record and committing forgery upon the records of the senate. This language was deliberately planned to insult, and uttered not only in violation of the the rules of the senate but in defiance of the authority of the presiding officer. Ingalls replied, and took a suppositious senator from Alaska for a target and described old Brown as the "Sniveling Pecksniff of Politics," referring to his habit of rubbing his hands as if washing them in invisible water with imperceptible soap. There was a good deal of suppressed excitement during Ingalls' remarks, particularly when he notified the senator from Georgia that he meant every word he said and that the senator was at liberty to take it in any sense he chose.

The house on the 19th passed a bill to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and others under contract to perform labor in the United States or territories and the district of Columbia. Mr. Foran, who was chairman of the subcommittee who had charge of the bill, made a long speech in favor of the measure. The bill provides that it shall be unlawful for any person or corporation to contract with foreigners or aliens to perform labor or service of any kind in the United States, or to prepay transportation, or assist in the importation of foreigners or aliens into this country; that such contracts, if made, shall be void and of no effect. For any violation of these provisions a fine of $1,000 is imposed. The master of any vessel who shall bring into this country any foreigner or alien with whom an agreement as indicated has previously been made, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not less than $500, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months.

In the senate, on Thursday, the 19th, Mr. Ingalls submitted a modification of the arrears of pension provision, the modification providing that so far as arrearages are concerned there shall be no discrimination between the rate allowed to a private soldier and an officer. After some preliminary discussion as to the probable addition to the annual cost of the pension list by the adoption and amendments proposed to the bill, Mr. Bock said the commissioner of pensions had estimated the amount at about $246,000,000. It seemed to be tacking on about $246,000,000 to a bill that originally called for $5,000,000. He presumed the intention in making this addition was to kill the bill. No vote was taken.

In executive session the senate confirmed Patrick B. Sinnott, Oregon, agent of Indians at Grand Rande agency; Theodore F. Willsley, California agent of Indians at Round Valley agency; Cala.; H. W. Rothert, Iowa, register of the land office at Cheyenne, Wyoming.

The congressional business of Friday was very light. The senate discussed the Mexican pension bill. In the house the following bills were passed: Reducing from 50 and 25 to 10 cents clearance fees levied upon vessels engaged in domestic commerce. The senate bill authorizing the construction of bridges across the river at St. Paul. Several amendments were adopted which necessitate the return of the bill to the senate. Forfeiting the unearned land grant to the Sioux City & St. Paul railroad. Mr. Cook, committee on elections, reported a resolution declaring J. R. Chalmers elected to congress from the Second Mississippi district. Laid over. The house resumed consideration of the Campbell-Morey contested election case. The majority resolution seating Campbell was agreed to, and that gentleman appeared at the bar of the house and took the oath of office.

Captured a Heavy Defaulter.

A Pinkerton detective from Chicago, an Detective O'Connor of St. Paul, on Saturday arrested a man named John Lowry, about eight miles from Moorhead, Minn., on the charge of embezzling $46,800 two years ago from the Calumet & Hecla Mining company, at Calumet, Mich. Lowry was the confidential clerk of the company, and about two years ago decided to leave them and go west. An investigation was then made of Lowry's accounts, resulting in the discovery that he had forged seven other receipts in a similar manner, the smallest amount being for $3,000, and the aggregate $46,000. Lowry was found at his Moorhead farm, which contains 2,000 acres of land, improved with fine buildings, fences, an elegant private office, and well stocked, the whole worth about $30,000. After his arrest he made to the detectives a full confession, and said he was expecting the matter to came to light and was only waiting for it. James Haley, sheriff of Houghton county, Mich., started with him on a requisition for Houghton, the county seat that county.

Seventeen persons were seriously poisoned at Pennsylvania recently by eating ice-cream. The can in which the cream was frozen was carefully examined and found perfectly clean. There seemed to be no opportunity for any poison to find its way into the cream, either through the ingredients used or process of manufacture. An analysis by a competent chemist disclosed the fact that a partial decomposition of the milk or cream had occurred, producing an irritant similar to that found in spoiled meats, which was the poison in the present instance.

Sunday evening W. A. Cooper, a well-known banker of Montrose, Pa., was shot at three times by Joseph Drinker also, a well known citizen. Two of the three shots took effect. Cooper may survive. Drinker immediately killed himself.

POLITICAL INTELLIGENCE.

The New York state democratic convention was held at Syracuse on the 18th, for the election of delegates to the National convention and the nomination of presidential electors. There was no trial of strength between Cleveland and Flower delegates, but the delegation to Chicago was intructed to vote as a unit, and it is believed that Cleveland will win. As near as can be ascertained, there are 41 Cleveland delegates, 17 distinctively anti-Cleveland without avowed preferences, 5 anti-Cleveland for Flower, and 9 unpledged. The amicable arrangement between the New York city factions was disclosed when Col. Fellows arose and proposed that without submitting to the credentials committee the convention should give thirty-one seats to the county, thiry-one to Tammany and ten to Irving Hall. Grady, he was satisfied on behalf of Tammany, and so a Tammany bolt which seemed inevitable was averted. There was a similar conciliatory deal in the appointment of delegates and electors from New York city. As to platforms the convention reaffirmed the resolutions of the conventions of the party in 1874, 1876 and 1882, recognizes the duty of the legislature to respect the popular vote in 1883 for the abolition of the contract system of labor in prisons, and heartily commends anew the administration of Gov. Cleveland.

The Michigan Democratic state convention to choose delegates to the national convention at Chicago was held at Detroit. The overwhelming sentiment of all the delegates to the convention, and the unanimous sentiment of all the delegates to Chicago is in favor of Cleveland. No other names though several were mentioned, seemed to have power to stir the convention in the least. A resolution that Cleveland was the first choice was talked after debate. While the preponderating sentiment of the convention was accurately reflected by the resolution, it was argued that the New York convention was divided upon the subject, and that this might seem like officious meddling with other people's business. The tariff was the principal matter of the platform. It endorsed the democratic majority in congress, and denounced the present tariff levied upon over two thousand articles as a masterpiece of injustico iniquity false pretence, etc.

The Georgia democratic convention elected the following delegates at large. Gen. A. R. Lawton of Savannah, Maj. A. O. Bacon of Macon, Hon. E. P. Howell of the Atlantic Constitution, and Hon. Patrick Walsh of the Augusta Chronicle. The delegation is entirely uninstructed, but is almost a unit for Cleveland.

At the Vermont State Republican convention. Samuel E. Pingree was nominated for governor by acclamation, E. J. Ormsbee for lieutenant-governor, and W. H. Dubois for treasurer. First district elected George T. Childs for presidential elector. E. H. Powell was renominated as auditor; for secretary of state, C. W. Porter. The resolutions adopted declare allegiance to Republican principles as enunciated in the national convention platform and pledge support to the nominees of that convention. Samuel Everett Pingree was born in Sailsbury, N. H., Aug. 5, 1832. He graduated from Dartmouth college in 1857. At the outbreak of the war he enlisted as a private in Company F, Third regiment, Vermont volunteers, was chosen first lieutenant and successively promoted to captain, major and lieutenant colonel. He behaved with distinguished gallantry in the battle of Lee's Mills and was wounded in the fight. Mr. Pingree has been state's attorney, and was a delegate at large to the Republican national convention in 1868. He was elected lieutenant governor in 1882. He is an able lawyer, a deep scholar and a very popular man.

The Louisiana State Democratic convention elected delegates to the Chicago Convention. The delegation is led by E. A. Burke, of the Times-Democrat. Senator Jonas is also a delegate at large, and Congressman Lewis one from the Sixth district. The onty matter over which there was any contest was the tariff. The committee on resolutions, however, reported the tariff plank of the Ohio platform, which was adopted by an immense majority. The only other resolution of importance called on the federal government to improve the water ways of the country, and requesting the delegates to support Tilden, notwithstanding his letter of declination.

The Colorado Democratic convention elected as delegates to Chicago, Gov. Grant, M. T. Faller, M. D. Crow, J. D. McGilvary, Dennis Sullivan, J. R. Letchin. The delegation is uninstructed, but Cleveland is the probable choice.

The Ohio prohibition convention nominated for secretary of state E. J. Morris, Cincinnati; supreme judge, J. W. Roseborough, Fulton county; member of the board of public works, W. J. Kirkendal, Jackson; electors at large, Z. C. Payne of Franklin, and Ferdinand Schumacker.

At a meeting of independent republicans in New York city, they declared in speech and resolution that they would oppose the nominations of the Chicago convention with might and main. They declared that if the democratic convention nominated such men as Cleveland and Bayard the ticket would receive their support. Cleveland's name was received with cheers. The meeting was called to order by Stephen P. Nash. George William Curtis was made chairman, and George W. Greene of New York and S. W. Grierson of Brooklyn, secretaries.

Senator Logan, during his visit to Maine to consult with Mr. Blaine, had quite an ovation at different points. He was accompanied by Mr. Blaine. The speeches were of a general character. Mr. Blaine remarked, facetiously at Bangor, that "no man can play the hero among his own familiar friends, and that that must be reserved to him if he went to other states. [Laughter and applause."]

Besides his regular clerk and private secretary, Senator Logan has been compelled, since his nomination, to employ two stenographers. All of them are kept busy answering his voluminous correspondence, and similar reports come from Mr. Blaine.

J. Campbell Shorb and J. C. Martin, elected presidential electors by the Democratic state convention, lately held at Stockton, California have resigned. They refuse to endorse the platform adopted.

The Democrats of the Fourth Maine district nominated John F. Lynch for congress; delegates to the Chicago convention, A. J. Chase and John Sonworth.

The Democrats of the Thirteenth Illinois district renominated, by acclamation, Congressman William M. Springer. This is his sixth nomination.

W. C. Cooper was nominated for congress by the Republicans of the Ninth Ohio congressional district, by acclamation.

The Utah bill passed the senate on Wednesday the 19th. The following voted against it. Senators Bayard, Brown, Coke, George, Hampton, Jonas, Kenna, Lamar, Maxey, Morgan, Pendleton, Ransom, Vest, Vest, Walker.

The Indiana republican convention, held at Indianapolis, Hon. W. H. Calkings of Laporte, Col. W. W. Wayne and Gen. John P. C. Shanks of Joy were named governor. Mr. Calkins was nominated on the first ballot, receiving 594 votes; Dudley, 512; Shanks 48. The state ticket was completed as follows: Lieutenant governor, Eugene Bundy of Henry county; secretary of state, Robert Mitchell of Gibson; auditor, Bruce Carr of Orange; treasurer, R. R. Shiel of Marion; attorney general, W. C. Wilson of Tippecanoe; superintendent of public instruction, B. C. Hobbs of Parke; reporter of the supreme court, W. M. Haggatt of Warrick; judge of the supreme court, Fifth district, E. P. Hammond of Jasper. At Large—Milo S. Haxall, John M. Butler. Districts—First, James Neach; Second, William B. Roberts; Third, John G. Berkshire; Fourth, W. D. Ward; Fifth, Marshal Hacker, Sixth, Josiah E. Millett; Seventh, T. S. Rollins; Eighth, E. S. Halliday; Ninth, J. M. Reynolds; Tenth, Freeman F. Palmer; Eleventh, James F. Elliot; twelfth, J. B. Terrell; Thirthtenth, John Reynolds.

The feeling is very strong among the democrats in the senate and house that Cleveland will be the nominee of their party for president. The result in the New York convention is claimed by his opponents to place him at the head of the list of candidates, and the ticket is expected to be Cleveland and McDonald.

DISGRUNTLED MILITIA.

Awarding Prizes at the Dubuque Encampment—An Inspiring and Realistic Sham Battle.

Dubuque Iowa was the scene last week of interesting military work by companies of U. S. regulars and volunteer organizations from various parts of the country. Saturday was the closing and great day, and the doings are thus described:

The first feature of the day was a grand dress parade, in which twelve companies participated. They were commanded by Col. Butler, Lieut. Col. Meyer and Capt. Choatand, all of the Third Missouri regiment, and the best drilled officers in Camp Henderson. This was followed by a brigade drill, in which many companies took part. They ranked as follows: Third Missouri regiment, Col. Meyer commanding; Mobile rifles; Iowa National guards of Muscatine, Iowa; Company D of St. Paul, Capt. Dean commanding. This, although it did not take first prize, is an excellently drilled company, and did some very fine drilling, much better than when it drilled for the prize. Two companies of Washington, District of Columbia, and the Washington Artillery of New Orleans, formed as infantry. They presented a magnificent appearance and received tremendous applause at the finish. Next on the programme was the artillery drill, in which the Washington Artillery of New Orleans was the only contestant. The drill was faultless in every particular, and the battery was commanded by Capt. May. At the order to dismount piece No. 1. Crane was struck on the knee by it and badly hurt, but he being a soldier in the truest sense of the word, he proved himself to be a man of nerve, and in deserving of the highest praise for the manner in which he assisted in completing the drill. The time of mounting and dismounting the piece, and also the time of removing and replacing one cartridge, was two minutes and twenty-three seconds. They received twenty-nine one-hundredths out of a possible thirty. The judges were Maj. F. G. Smith, of the Fourth United States; Lieut. Lomia, of the Fifth United States; and Lieut. Phillips of the Fourth artillery. They all pronounced the drill the best they ever had witnessed. In the afternoon there were several exhibition drills and concerts, which were participated in by several companies, including the Third Missouri regimental drum corps and the Dubuque drum corps. At the close of this exhibition, and amid great cheering and an immense crowd, which could not find standing room on the great amphitheater, and took up their quarters on the campus ground, Gen. Bentley rode up on his steed and announced that the prizes for the infantry would be awarded. This caused great excitement and a terrible jam swayed to and fro amid wild cheering to learn the winner of the prize. The Mobile Rifles, in response to a command by their captain, came up and were greeted with tremendous applause. Gen. Bentley then awarded the first prize to the above company. It is needless to say they were complimented by thunders of applause, hats were thrown into the air and handkerchiefs waved by many of their lady admirers.

Next in order was the Treadway Rifles of St. Louis, who were awarded the second prize.

The Brach Guards of St. Louis received the third prize. Their applause was a complete repetition of the former.

COMPANY D OF ST. PAUL

was next called, and, amid the wildest enthusiasm, marched up to the front, where they were presented with the fourth prize. Next in order was the National Rifles of Washington, D. C., who received the fifth prize; and last came the Iowa National Guards, of Muscatine, Iowa. The Milwaukee Light Horse Squadron was presented with a magnificent prize.

THE SHAM BATTLE.

The troops, after they had marched about the campus ground, were brought up in line. The attacking army was sighted in the valley, or within the enclosure, while the opposing arm was sighted upon the bluffs overlooking the grounds, behind a line of earthworks. The breastworks were three in number, each twenty-four feet long and four feet high, behind which and upon the bluff was situated Fort Dubuque, 100 feet square and 6 feet high, with surrounding ramparts, three in number. This was the objective point of attack. The plan of the battle was arranged by Gen. Gibbon, commander of the department of the Platte, United States army. It consisted of an attack from the troops in the valley upon the fortifications on the hill, a circuitous march to the rear of the fortifications by the troops in the valley and final capture and explosion of Fort Dubuque. The fortifications were commanded by Maj. Powell. The earthworks on the extreme right were held by a battery of four guns, manned by the Washington Artillery of New Orleans, under Maj. Hero. The Emmett of St. Paul and also the Lawler batteries, with five guns, occupied the center line. The redoubt was guarded by the Benton battery with two guns. Fort Dubuque was occupied by the Danville, McGregor and Muscatine batteries, consisting of five guns. The National Rifles, Busch Zouaves, and the Rockford Grays were deployed as a line of skirmishers for the defense, and were stationed at the crest of the bluff, behind the vast rock and trees near the Milwaukee and St. Louis cavalry companies and Batteries D and F of the Fifth and Fourth United States artillery companies respectively. The infantry troops were drawn up on the right and left of the artillery, with the cavalry company stationed in the rear; while a detachment of the Washington Artillery battery, under command of Capt. May, assisted the troops in the valley, and fired blank bombshells from a six-pound howitzer situated on the extreme left. The monster consolidated band just before the battle played "Rally 'Round the Flag," when the attack upon the fortifications was commenced by a skirmish line. The regulars climbed the steep, rocky bluffs, firing as they mounted. Then the battle opened in earnest.

The roar of the heavy cannon upon the bluffs and the sharp report of musketry reverberated through the hills, and was followed by the cheers of the appreciative multitude. The guns of the United States batteries in the valley did excellent work, the horses moved at a gallop, the bugles sang shrill and loud, and the limbers were detached, while the guns were in motion. They were wheeled into line, the cannoneers were at their posts, the word was given, and the guns thundered repeatedly. First the booming salute flashed to the north, and then to the south. Either side of the field was shrouded in the dun canopy of war. Col. Meier, of the Third Missouri, with a brigade, marched in a circuitous route, and attacked Fort Dubuque in the rear. The Milwaukee Light Horse Squadron were also detailed for a similiar purpose. Another force brigade under Capt. Bean, of Company D. of St. Paul, were ordered to the left, to reconnoiter and force their way up the side of the bluff. During this time the regulars had a lively skirmish with Maj. Powell's skirmishers and drove them into the fort, where they were in turn repulsed, and cleared the way down the hill. By this time Col. Meier's force had marched to the rear and engaged the army on the bluff. The firing was rapid, and fully depicted the scenes of an actual engagement. It finally culminated with the capture and explosion of Fort Dubuque. It was a grand sight to witness the several charges made, and the roars of twenty-four heavy field pieces, the firing of 1,200 musketry, and the roar and shouts of the soldiers as they gained a point. One of the most thrilling scenes was the grand cavalry charge made by both companies on the retreating infantry. The infantry were fast retreating, when the squadron of cavalry shut them off, and then commenced a grand revolver charge, by the cavalry, to which the infantry returned a platoon fire. It was exciting in the extreme, and depicted many realistic scenes of war. Two soldiers were shot during the battle, but not seriously.

An Officer Kills a Desperado.

Officer Ernest M. Parcell of Flint, Mich., shot and killed Lorenzo D. Pickle, a desperado aged sixty, who resisted arrest at Richfield Center. Pickle, who was wanted at Flushing for disorderly conduct, fired several shots at Deputy Sheriff Carton of that place, who attempted to arrest him last week. Since that time Pickle has been armed with two revolvers, making threats against that officer when he would attempt his arrest. Recently Parcell received a warrant with orders to arrest Pickle, and started in search of the man, whom he found at Richfield Center. Pickle attempted to shoot the officer on sight, but his revolver caught in the lining of his coat, and the officer, who had vainly requested him to submit to arrest, fired at him three times while he was attempting to extricate his revolver. One shot struck Pickle in the breast, killing him.

When Bill Norris, Polk Wells' old pard, was arrested in Sioux City a couple of weeks ago, the fellow who was with him skipped out. It was afterwards ascertained that this pard of Norris' was wanted down in Kansas for being implicated in cracking a bank, and for other high crimes and misdemeanors. Accordingly, Sheriff Dickson took up his trail and rounded him up at Huron. He is now safe in the county jail in Sioux City, subject to the orders of the Kansas authorities.

Personal Notes.

The doorkeeper of the New York Stock Exchange, named Tom Faye, who had, by hook and by crook, accumulated a property valued at over $100,000, died last week. He was actually wealthier than many of the pretended millionaires of the board.

Mr. John Mussey, of Portland, Me., who was graduated from Bowdoin College in 1809, is the oldest alumnus of that college now living. He is now 64 years of age and in excellent health.

The only wheeled vehicle that Colonel Fred Grant now owns is a baby carriage, and this he may be seen trundling through the streets of Morristown any pleasant Sunday afternoon.

Ex-Governor Prescott, of New Hampshire, has secured 170 portraits of distinguished men for the State House, Dartmouth College, his alma mater, and Exeter Academy, where he received his earlier education. Among those at Exeter are portraits of Daniel Webster, Edward Everett, Lewis Cass. Jared Sparks and George Bancroft.

The family of Mr. Joel L. Phillips, Keowee, S. C., has a remarkable record. He has been married twice, having born to him by his first wife twelve children, and by his second nine. He has now living eighteen children, the youngest three months and the oldest forty three-years old, and has in all about eighty-five lineal descendants living. He has lived on the same place forty-four years, and all the children were born there. The whole eighty-five of the lineal descendants live within twenty miles of the parental home and are doing well. Mr. Phillips is sixty-seven years old. Such a large family kept so near together for so great a length of time seldom happens in this life.

Dr. McCosh, of Princeton College, is a very handsome old gentleman, who was born seventy-three years ago. He was a pet of Sir William Hamilton, who was a great opponent of phrenology. As an old-time metaphysician Dr. McCosh has hardly an equal in this country. Recently, while the doctor was being complimented in a Pennsylvania Railway train for his ability to dissect Kant, the good old gentleman replied, with that little spice of conceit which comes from one's own knowledge of one's abilities, "It was perfectly easy to me."

If there is any virtue in ancestry, says the Philadelphia Times, Dr. William Barton Hopkins, who has just been elected to the vacancy in the medical staff of the Episcopal Hospital in Philadelphia, should enjoy great professional advantages. He is a great-grand-nephew of David Rittenhouse, the astronomer, and a great-grand-nephew also of Dr. Benjamin Barton, the naturalist and physician who was professor of botany and natural history, and afterward of materia medica in the University of Pennsylvania. His great uncles were Dr. William P. C. Barton, Chief Medical Director of the United States navy, and also eminent as a botanist—"Barton's Flora" being still a standard work—and Dr. John Rhea Barton, one of the most eminent of American surgeons.

Funny Fancies.

"Yes," said Biggs, "I enjoy a glass now and then; but I deny myself, fearing that I might take too much and say something foolish." "Nonsense!" exclaimed Fogg; "drink, if you like it. Say what you will, nobody will ever suspect that you have been drinking—that is nobody who knows you, you know."

"So you think your son smokes, Mrs. Jones?" "I'm sure of it, Mrs. Brown. I've found pieces of tobacco in his pockets." "Dear me, dear me! I'm sorry. My son has no bad habits. I never find anything in his pockets but cloves and coffee beans."—Somerville Journal.

Mrs. Jones—'Ah, and good morning to you, Mrs. Smith. Did you like the cream I sent you?" Mrs. Smith—"O, very much, thank you." Mrs. Jones—"Yes; and if you could let me have the pot I sent it in you'd oblige me, 'cos you see, it's my old man's shaving mug, and he don't like no other."—Fun.

The director of the bureau of Statistics at Vienna finds that out of 102,831 individuals who have passed the age of 90 years, 60,303 are women and only 52,528 are men. In Italy there are 241 alleged centenarian women, and but 141 men of that age. The fact that of children who reach the age of 10 years there are more females than males seems to be well established, and that the disproportion in numbers grows greater as the years of their life advance is equally certain.

A citizen of Hamlet in Kidder went to the cars in White Haven one day to see his favorite daughter off. Securing her a seat he passed out of the cars and went round to her window to say a parting word, as is frequently done on such occasions. While he was passing out the daughter left the seat to speak to a friend, and at the same time a prim old maid from Wilkesbarre took the seat and moved up to the window. Unaware of the important change inside, he hastily put his face up to the window and hurriedly exclaimed: "One more kiss sweet pet." In another instant the point of a blue cotton umbrella caught his seductive lip, followed by the passionate injunction: "Scat, you gray-headed wretch!" and he scatted.

Canada as a Resort for Rogues.

It is certainly time to have done with this trifling. Canada lies temptingly near. It ought not to be possible for a New York bank officer to make way with $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 of other people's money and then step into a sleeping-car and awake on soil where he is beyond the reach of justice. The present laxity of treaty relations works in the interest of criminals, large classes of whom can put themselves out of harm's way by crossing the line. Of late years we have very materially enlarged our extradition relations with countries with which our dealings are much less important than they are with Great Britian. There is every reason to suppose that the English Government would meet cordially an effort in the same direction. Negotiations to that end should be opened without unnecessary delay.—Boston Journal.

When we heard of the criticisms made by the Public Examiner on the Board of County Commissioners and County Auditor, our reporter sought Mr. P. J. McGuire and found that gentleman busy at his desk, attending to his correspondence. He cast his eye on the reporter and after the usual "good morning" was said, turned his attention to his work, and from the volume of business on his desk our reporter concluded he had called at a rather inopportune time for an interview. However, with his usual grace our reporter moved a chair near where the Auditor sat and proceeded thus:

REP. Have you seen yesterday's St. Paul papers and noticed the comments on the report of the Public Examiner?

MAC. I have, Sir.

REP. I would like to obtain an interview with you on the subject matter of that report, if you have leisure.

MAC. Well, sir, I would be glad to tell you the length, width and thickness of all criticisms so very industriously circulated this morning, but I will demand a full investigation by the Grand Jury, who are now in session, and they will give the public the investigation you desire.

REP. But, Mr. McGuire, the report of the Grand Jury may not be ready when we go to press and we would like some authentic information from some source for our readers.

MAC. Well, Mr. Reporter, I am pretty busy this morning, but since you insist, I will touch on a few points. For example: The Board of Commissioners allowed $540 for extra clerk hire for the Auditor's office for this year. Now, the question is, is this necessary? It is a well known fact, in this town at least, that I have worked in this office from 7 o'clock in the morning till 10 to 12 at night, and sometimes, when the work is greatest, till 2 or 3 o'clock in the morning. I have done this since I assumed the duties of the office, and had to do it, and the clerks in my employ always put in full time, and no loafing. But it is not because of the extraordinary amount of work, alone, that this extra allowance for clerk hire was asked or made. I have long felt the want of a proper system of keeping the delinquent lists of real estate taxes, and I shall get complete abstracts of these compiled this year, which will be a source of great benefit to the office and the public who depend on it for reliable information. This work cannot be done for a less figure, and one unacquainted with the work would not do it for less than $750, and then the work would not be reliable. This much I think may be said relative to the item of clerk hire, and now a word about our salary. It is $1,250, for this, my fourth year in the office. I receive my pay in orders. Orders are usually worth from 85 to 90 cents on the dollar. The custom has been to draw the orders for such salary about on the same basis as County Treasurer's salaries are drawn. For example, the County Treasurer's collections to July 28th entitle him to probably three-fourths his salary, and he receives the balance by the end of May. This is so with almost every county in the State. By this system the Auditor received a little interest that might accrue, but not half enough to compensate him for the loss occasioned by the discount on the orders. When the Examiner visited our office he suggested a change in this respect, to monthly payments, which are now adopted.

REP. How did the Examiner find your system of general accounting?

MAC. Perfectly correct, sir. There is not an error to be found in our books. By the system adopted both by Mr. Lucken and myself relative to the cash accounting, no error can possibly creep in except through carelessness. But the cash accounts are but a very small item in this office when compared with the tax and assessment registers, &c., but you must excuse me, Mr. Reporter, at present, as the time fleeeth, and my morning's work is yet unfinished.

REP. Well, Mac, what have you to say relative to the present Board of County Commissioners? I called to hear of them rather than yourself.

MAC. Nothing but this, that as far as my observation goes, they have endeavored to discharge their trust faithfully and in a straightforward manner. They may have erred in overstepping the limit contemplated by the statute, but it really does seem to me that these expenditures, such, for instance, as aiding East Grand Forks to build a lockup to assist the citizens in keeping quiet and good order in their village; appropriating $500 to build a bridge in the towns of Hubbard and Vineland, and similar appropriations of this nature, are almost a necessity, and as I look on it, the county is merely loaning its credit for a short time to these localities. Just as a bank loans on its stock, so may the county with equal certainty of payment loan its credit to, and aid the town, and thereby add to the comfort and happiness of people; and mind you, sir, a moderately liberal policy on the part of the Board as herein indicated does not necessarily increase the rate of taxation, as the increase in valuation, the result of such policy, brings with it additional revenue, far in excess of the original expenditure.

REP. It has been stated that the county ditch and road running from a point a few miles north of here, westwardly to Fisher, was built at the county's expense. Is this so?

MAC. Well, now, that caps the climax, beats the electioneering stories of two years ago, all hollow—except one—which I haven't time to tell you of to-day. No sir. That ditch was not built at the expense of the county. The county had the line of ditch viewed by three gentlemen who received the very liberal salary of $2 per day. The viewers were assisted by the County Surveyor, and the cost incurred amounted to about $200—probably $224.—I would not be positive without looking up the books.

REP. Well, Mac, it is also stated—

MAC. (Interrupting) Hold, on boy. Have business to attend to this morning. If I took time to make a reply to every criticism made on public officials in this community, I could employ every moment of my time. With a knowledge of this I pay no attention, not even a thought, to such things, believing that each do their best in their own sphere, as my endeavor is in mine.

And, with this finis our reporter bid Mac good day and glided up to the court room after other items.

ED. JOURNAL.

Believing that some of the readers of THE JOURNAL would like to hear something of the Red Lake country and vicinity, I will give you a few of the particular features of the lake and surrounding country. On Tuesday morning June 3d we left Crookston for St. Hilaire where we put our boat on a wagon and went up the Red Lake River about 18 miles above the mouth of Thief River. There is an Indian trail or road running back from the river keeping about three or four miles from the stream, the land is low and flat but is well adapted to the raising of stock. The prairie being dotted over with groves of poplar and oak. Putting our boat in the river at the place where the trail strikes it, about one-third of the distance between the Thief River and the lake, the distance on a straight line from this landing to the lake I should judge is about twenty-two miles or sixty miles by the river. We left this landing at 2 o'clock Wednesday, and arrived at the lake at 7 o'clock on Thursday evening. The river is very crooked, with low banks and very strong current. It is what may be justly called a beautiful river, and in time, when navigation by steamers, will be called the paradise of the Northwest. On nearing the lake the land is low and marshy but those marshes are dotted over with groves of timber that gives it a pleasing appearance. The stream abounds with fish, such as pike, pickerel, perch, cat-fish and others too numerous to mention. There is no waiting for them to bite, they seem to be always ready for the hook. The lake is divided in two parts by what is known as the narrows, which narrows are about 15 miles northeast from the outlet of the river, and about one and a half miles wide. The water being very shallow the deepest channel being about three and a half feet deep. Both parts of the lake are longest from east to west, the southern portion being about thirty miles long and from twelve to twenty miles wide and about the shape of an Early Rose potato. The upper portion of the lake is about thirty miles long and from ten to twenty miles wide, the long way of this part of the lake is northeast and southwest. The point or peninsula between the two portions of the lake, commencing about half a mile from the shore is one solid body of pine for about seventeen miles long and can be seen from either side of the lake, the width of this strip of timber varies in width from one mile to four or five. The bank on the upper lake is low and on the northwest shore is one continued tamarack swamp for fifty miles along the shore of the lake about eighteen miles from the narrows you loose sight of the pine for about eight miles. The Indians say there is pine about four or five miles back from the shore but it can not be seen from the lake. There is an averaged sized stream empties into the lake at this point but not large enough to run logs. About twenty-six miles from the narrows the pine again comes in sight, standing in clusters of probably three or four hundred acres each. At the northeast end of the lake there is quite a large river empties into the lake that is capable of floating logs for twenty miles from its outlet in to the lake. This river runs within three miles of the big forks and the and the Indians carry their canoes from one stream to the other. There is large quantities of good pine on this stream and will be one of the best lumber points on the lake, besides being the only harbor on the north part of the lake, on the northwest shore of the lake there is no banks but one continued tamarack swamp the whole length of the lake, with but one exception, about fifteen miles from the northeast end a very fine creek runs in to the lake, the stream is full of fish. The land is flat, but seemingly dry, and would be a good place for a settlement. It is at this point that the Indians cross over to rapid river, a distance of about twenty miles, and down that stream to the Lake of the Woods. The Indians make this their great camping ground for hunting and fishing in fall and spring. The point on the west side of the lake is a narrow strip of land made by the action of the water on the sand and runs out in the lake about two miles, a quarter of a mile in width, and tapering off to nothing, there is some low scrub timber growing on it, it is rather a beautiful, but worthless piece of territory. On the opposite point, or about half a mile from the extreme end of the point is situated an Indian village of about twenty-five lodges. It is situated on high ground, the banks of the lake are about twenty-five feet high at this place, giving you a good view of the lake, and I do say (and defy successful contradiction,) that it is one of the handsomest places in Minnesata. Along the north shore of the south part of the lake the Indians have planted corn; it looked fair but was poorly planted. The Indians are settled along that shore of the lake quite thickly. The banks in some places are from fifty to sixty feet high. The agency is located on the south shore of the lake about fifteen miles from the outlet of Red Lake River. The banks of the lake are about thirty feet high at the agency, and is a very nice location. There are large quantities of pine on this side, and several streams that are large enough for log running, which stream empties in to the lake, while millions upon millions of good pine are tributary to them. The logs will have to be rafted across the lake, and in order to do this successfully it would be necessary to have a steamboat to tow them. A boat could be built that could navigate the lake and river down the Red Lake River to within three miles of the mouth of the Thief River. The pine timber around Red Lake and vicinity is rapidly decaying and the sooner it comes into market the better, for the Indians and this whole northwestern country. Having been in the lumber business for over twenty years in Michigan, and have had considerable experience in looking up, and estimating pine. I feel as if I can safely say to the people of the Red River Ralley, that the God of nature has given you timber enough and some to spare, if the land nabobs will give you the privilege to cut and use it.

The new brick building put up by the Crookston Brewery Co., is one of the best built blocks in the valley. The building is 42 feet wide, 75 feet long, and 2 stories high. There is a basement under the entire building. The basement wall is 24, the 1st story wall 20, and the 2d story wall is 16 inches thick. The building is braced throughout with the heaviest kind of timbers. The basement of this building has two apartments. The 1st one in the west end of the building is 16x20, and 24 feet high with a ventilator which runs to the top of the building. The balance of the basement is reserved for a malt room, the floor of which is solid cement. The first story there is also to be two apartments. In the front of the building is the office and sitting room which is 16x40 feet. The balance of this floor will be for malt and barley. The second floor all in one room will be entirely used for the storage of grain. On the top of the building is an observatory where persons may view to advantage the country in every direction, this with five large flag staffs complete the building. This company have had good success in this country which they most certainly deserve, and they are now better prepared to supply the demand than ever before since the completion of their new malt building, and the capacity of this brewery now is 60000 barrels per annum and guaranteed to be as good as the best.

Two of our young merchants went down to the river last week to go in bathing. One of these young men was quite a good swimmer, the other one was a land shark. They finally got into the water and sported around in high glee, and then came out and proceeded to put on their clothing. The land shark was feeling so good after a bathe in the cool water that he became quite playful, and concluded that he would show his friend how easy it was to ride a log, so he walked on a log that was near by all right and so elated over his success that he almost screamed for joy and started for another log further out in the river, where the water was about 20 feet deep but missed his calculation and was hurled into the raging Red Lake River. His voice sounded like the big whistle at T. B. Walker's saw mill, as he cried good by Adolph sell 11 pounds of A sugar for one dollar, try and buy some eggs somewhere if you can, there are none in the city, remember me to Braley and Tom Morris, put my little shoes away, you will miss me now I'm gone, never tamper with cold water for it will surely get you, it is only a little matter of time, and just as his friend seized him and was taking him to shore, with his last breath, he says, don't give it away to the JOURNAL reporter, Dunc says, oh, no I guess not. Now we don't blame this land shark for making the queer expressions; for under the circumstances, we presume, that his mind was wandering. In conclusion we are happy to say that he (the land shark) is so far recovered that he was able to attend business last Monday.

THE NEW WHEAT.

Grand Forks Herald: G. J. Longfellow, who is a bonanza farmer at Buxton, called on the Herald this morning. Last year he raised from 50 acres, 1383 bushels his farm. He says the Saskatchewan wheat which he raised last year is without doubt the coming wheat for this region. He says that it is good and clean, fresh and nice, and produces wonderfully. A bushel and a peck of seed is sufficient to the acre. The heads are long and the growth is about 15 to 20 stalks to the kernel. He counted as high as 32 on one root all having matured heads.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred and seventy-eight and 25-100 dollars ($378.25-100,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by John B. Derosier, a single man, mortgagor, to Joseph L. Daoust, mortgagee, bearing date the twelfth day of April A. D. 1883, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 2d day of November A. D. 1883, at 9:50 o'clock a. m., in book "A" of mortgages, on page 328. The said mortgage was duly assigned, by an instrument in writing duly executed and delivered by the said Joseph L. Daoust to Arthur Yvernault, dated the 29th day of May 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds on the tenth day of June, 1884, at 3:35 o'clock p. m. in book "B" of mortgages, on page 148, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter (nw¼) of Section six (6,) Township one hundred and fifty (150,) Range forty four, according to the government survey thereof in Polk County, and State of Minnesota with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the first day of August A. D. 1884, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated June 12th, A. D. 1884.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication June 5th, 1884.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of sixty and 65-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Ferdinand Laplante and Amanda Laplante, his wife, to The America Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London, (Limited,) bearing date the 8th day of October A. D. 1881, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 8th day of October A. D. 1881, at 4:00 o'clock p. m., in book "E" of mortgages, on pages 837, 838 and 839, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for eight hundred and twenty-five dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage, and due the 8th day of October 1886, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, payable annually on the first day of January in each year, according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Ferdinand Laplante and Amanda Laplante, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum until it becomes due, and default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, the said mortgagee therefore elected, that all of said sums described in said note should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note, and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The southeast quarter of Section four (4,) Township one hundred and fifty (150,) Range forty-seven (47,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

D. 1881, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 22d day of February A. D. 1881, at 4 o'clock p. m., in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 161, 162, 163 and 164, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note of two hundred and fifty dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage, and due January 29th 1886, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January in each year, according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Halvor Peterson and Anna Peterson, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the time it became due, and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st, 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, the said mortgagee therefor elected that all of said sums described in said note, should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note, and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter of Section eighteen (18,) Township one hundred and forty-eight (148,) Range forty-eight (48,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

County Commissioners Meeting, June 27th, 1884.

The board of County Commissioners met in special session at their office at 9 a. m. All members present. Commissioner Brown in the chair.

The minutes of last meeting were read and approved.

The bridge committee reported that the bridges built in Sullivan and Huntsville townships were completed according to plans and specifications.

On motion the report was accepted, and the said bridges accepted, and the Chairman was authorized to issue his order on the County Treasurer for $1800 in favor of the contractor (C. P. Jones) in full payment for same.

On motion the Auditor was instructed to advertise for bids, for steel cells for jail. Also for bids for building vault. On motion the N. ½, S. 22, T. 153, R. 47 was attached to school Dist., No 71. Commissioner Bradish recomended that the county furnish free transportation to Even Rasmunssen (a pauper residing in the 2d Dist) to Norway, and on motion the Chairman was authorized to issue his order on the County Treasury for $100 in payment for such expense.

The Chairman was authorized to send a pauper family residing in Crookston to Davenport Iowa. On recommendation of commissioner Bradish the sum of $10 per month for the period of six months was allowed Mrs. Goodric of Fisher as poor aid. On recommendation of Commissioner Nelson the sum of $10 per month for the period of three months was allowed John King as poor aid.

The claim of Dr. C. E. Teel was refered to Messrs. Sullivan and Bradish. On motion H. C. Misner of Euclid was appointed agent for the sale of text books at Euclid. The claim of Chas. Hoiner for boarding prisoner amounting to $125.44 was audited and allowed in full. Dr. A Nelson of Garfield township was appointed County Physician for the 1st Commissioner's District (except the 13 towns) at an annual salary of $250 payable quarterly on the warrant of the County Auditor.

On motion the board adjourned.

Clerk of the Board.

OUR CANDIDATES.

What Some of the Leading Papers say of Them.

Boston Journal: Of the election of Mr. Blaine there is very little question. The campaign thus far has shown his wonderful strength with the people. We confess that the spontaneous movement for Mr. Blaine at the West is something unprecedented. No effort on his part was made to secure delegates. They flocked to his banner as soon as it was raised at Chicago, and his supporters not political adventurers of the element which is found in every part.

Baltimore American: Twice had the popular voice called him to the nomination, and twice had the politicians thwarted its will. But now the voters rose with a power not to be withstood and they made him their candidate. His nomination unites the party as none other could. There now need be no longer any two wings. The third-term party defeated four years ago now disappears. Its leaders are now Blaine men. Not since Grant's first term has the Republican party been so united as now. Not since Lincoln's second term has any leader been so beloved.

Augusta Ga, Chronical: The merciless cartoons of a comic paper did Blaine and Logan no harm. They may have helped to nominate him though not so intended. Mr. Blaine is a brilliant man of genius, a dazzling politician, an audacious diplomatist, a splendid orator and a popular and magnetic strategist. He has, as the event demonstrated, hosts of fervid friends, but even in his own camp his enemies are powerful and numerous.

Brooklyn Times: We need not say that we are satisfied, and more than satisfied with the nomination. It is better than we dared to hope for. At last the crowd of commonplace men have been compelled to stand aside and the crown of the people's choice has been placed on the brow where it properly belongs. The people will endorse this nomination, as we endorse it, heartily, with enthusiasm from end to end of this broad Union. If the people of this Union do not overwhelmingly elect James G. Blaine to be Garfield's first elected successor, they will be unworthy of the memories, the deeds and the heroic and manly death of that second martyred Chief Magistrate of these United States.

Wheeling Intelligencer: After years of hopeless combat with an opponent physically our superior, West Virginia stands at the threshold of a new era. The nomination of James G. Blaine for president will complete the work so happily begun within our own borders, and the Mountain State will be wrested from Bourbon domination and placed where she rightly belongs—in the ranks of the Republican States. The Democrats affect to ridicule the idea of Republican victory in West Virginia. So did they affect to ridicule Goff to congress, but he was elected, and just as easily, just as surely, can we redeem the whole state with the prestige Blaine and Logan will give us.

Albany Journal: The Republican party, invincible as an exponent of progressive ideas and courageous action, will be worthily led by the man whom it has honored with its approval this day.

Chicago Inter-Ocean: As the convention is the highest constitutional party authority, we bow to its decision, and, as a soldier in the great Republican army, fall into line to catch step with the advancing column. Let the causes, however, be what they may, the convention, in passing by the man who has given the people the best national administration for a generation, has taken up the greatest party hero since the days of Henry Clay.

St. Louis Globe Democrat: Mr. Blaine owes his nomination to a convention representing the best thought and feeling, aspiration and conscience of the American people, and the verdict of such a body, rendered in tones so emphatic and enthusiastic, is not to be criticised or sulked over or appealed from. The obligation of all Republicans, whatever may have been their views in the contest just closed, is plain and definite, and that is to accept the action of the convention in a cheerful spirit and with hearty and determined purpose to carry the old flag again to victory over the obstinate and pestilent influences of the party that lies eagerly in wait for a chance to change, undermine and dishonor as far as possible the wonderful story of the last twenty-five years of national progress.

New York Tribune: For a quarter of a century no other candidate has been more clearly preferred by voters. Even in the hour of their defeat his opponents did not attribute his success to any unworthy influence. By them it was admitted, as it must be admitted by all, that the people desired the nomination of Mr. Blaine. The national convention wisely preferred him to any other representative of his ideas. Having deliberately adopted these ideas in its platform, the convention has selected Mr. Blaine to present them. Mr. Blaine has been nominated as an advocate of protection. His opinions on the tariff question need no explanation, and his nomination will be hailed with the utmost enthusiasm by the friends of the protective tariff in every part of the land. Mr. Blaine is the strongest candidate the Republicans could have nominated, because he best represents its convictions. The name of Mr. Blaine has been so identified with the economic policy which the Republican party holds so dear that the popular preference for him at a time when that policy was threatened by a Democratic majority in congress was exceedingly natural. On this account Mr. Blaine's friends believe he will receive more votes than could have been secured by any other candidate in the Pacific states, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York.

The nomination of General Logan for Vice President was also especially fortunate. He has great strength in the west and with the soldiers everywhere, and his name will kindle the enthusiasm of Republicans in the south. The ticket cannot be beaten. Blaine and Logan will carry every Northern state and probably more than one of the Southern states besides. Once more the Republican party has proven its right to rule by the wisdom of its choice.

Philadelphia Ledger: His party, considering it as the lineal successor of the old Whig organization, has had no such brilliant, forcible and popular champion since the days of Henry Clay. His nomination must be accepted everywhere abroad as well as at home as that of one of the foremost among living American statesmen; and if he should be elected no one can reproach the people of the United States as having gone to the subordinate ranks of their public men for the chief executive of their country.

Philadelphia Times: He will be the master spirit, the leaders of leaders in his own campaign. The party will follow him with the devotion and enthusiasm of the army that bore the eagle of france when apoleon Nmarched for Moscow, and even in defeat he would be worshipped by the rank and file as was the man of destiny after Russia and Elba. He will start the contest of 1884 with spontaneous energy in every secton of the country. He will carry Ohio in October, even with German prejudices strongly against him. He will disturb Democratic confidence in West Virginia, the other important October state, and he will be likely to recall California and Nevada from their Democratic diversion of 1880 to join Oregon in a solid Republican electoral vote on the golden slope of the Pacific

'ROUND HOME.

E. Miller is having the inside of his store painted.

Matrasses, Wire bed springs, at Paul Bataglia's.

Buchanan's is the place to buy your teas and coffees.

Pools will be sold on the fair grounds, on July 4th and 5th.

Try the New York Store for dress goods.

C. George is the happy father of a bouncing baby girl.

E. K. Overland of Garfield was in the city last Tuesday.

The Warren Base Ball Club will be in Crookston on July 4th.

Have you seen the handsome line of crockery and glassware at Buchanan's.

J. P. Lundin, of Stephen, was in the city on business on Tuesday.

Sofas, rockers, camp chairs. The very latest at Paul Bataglia's.

There will be a glass ball shoot here on July 4th. The Warran team will be here.

Easy Chairs of all descriptions at Bataglia's.

Thirteen pounds of the purest and brightest sugar in the city for $1.00, at Buchanan's.

Tom Harris is moving the old school building to a new site on Sletten & Cromb's Addition.

A general invitation extended to all the farmers to call at Moser & Moeckel's and see the Pennock ditcher and grader.

M. R. Brown is putting up a store building three doors north of the Merchants Bank.

Carpenters are at work finishing up the front of S. L. Dobson's store buildings on Broadway.

The Grand Forks Fire Company will not be in our city on July 4th to compete for the silver trumpet.

Brackets, picture frames, looking glasses etc. at Bataglia's.

They all give the same verdict. That they can buy the most goods for the least money at the New York Store.

G. W. Tice, of Grove Park, brought to the JOURNAL office some pie plant, four stalks of which weighed 3¾ pounds.

G. W. Tice, of Grove Park, brought in samples of wheat, barley and oats that were as fine as any we have seen as yet.

Moser & Moeckel still have a few of those celebrated machines, The Pennock Ditcher and Grader.

White vests and dog skin gloves lined with red flannel are getting to be very fashionable among the Red River dudes.

Try the New York Store for boots and shoes.

There are six or eight men and boys standing on the sidewalk in front of the Excelsior Clothing House with their new clothes on all the time.

Hard times is the time to invest, because you can buy it cheap. Crookston Improvement Co. suits the prices of their city property to the times.

Esthy & Anderson are building a snug little hotel in South Crookston. It is already enclosed and under roof. Many more buildings are expected shortly, to be built in South Crookston.

Parasols, white goods and embroideries at reduced prices, at the New York Store.

One of Tom Harris' men was severely injured on Tuesday while moving the old school building. He was struck by a plank which cut a severe gash over his eye. Dr. Farley did some tailor work and left the patient more presentable.

Moser & Moeckel guarantee the work done by the Pennock ditcher and grader to be as good as the best. No work, no sale.

On the 4th of July do not fail to call and examine the immense stock of dry goods, notions, etc. at the New York Store where you will find every thing as represented.

Everybody that passes the Red Star grocery on Broadway stops to gaze in the show window to see the musical ship. A wonderful piece of mechanism. A ship riding on the waves, mill and water wheel turning round, bridges with people and vehicles passing over. Everybody call and [illegible].

Prof. Dusso returned to the city last Friday.

Frank Jerome's new meat marke will open, Saturday, July 5th. Give him a call.

The skating rink is open every evening, and is generally pretty well patronized.

Mr. J. P. Nelson, Clerk of the Court for Marshall Co., was in the city last Wednesday.

C. Olson brought in a fine sample of wheat on Friday last, that was 3 feet high and heading.

Call at Jerome's new meat market on Broadway where there is a good stock at all times.

The G. A. R. ball on the evening of July 4th will be a grand affair. A large attendance is expected.

The 2:50 race for the 4th will be one of the most interesting as there will be about eight or nine entries.

Conductor Pete Nolan stopped off on sick leave on Tuesday and will remain at home over the fourth.

Mr. P. W. Horton, of Garfield, has a field of rye which is 5 feet 8 inches high. So says D. W. Horton.

Wanted, hungry men, women and children, for the 4th, festival building next door to Medical Hall.

D. Buchannan has got a fine new wagon with a nice horse to draw it, to deliver groceries to any part of the city.

For a good summer drink call a the New England Restaurant and try the root beer manufactured at that place.

Paul C. Sletten is confined to the house by one of Job's comforters which is as big as a hornet's nest and twice as festive.

Andrew Steenerson, formerly of this city and now located at the thirteen towns, is in the city to remain until after the 4th.

John Crawford & Son have their ice cream parlors now ready, and are prepared to furnished ice cream in any quantity. Give them a call.

Open House! What's that? why, call and the ladies will show you to-day, it's ice cream, strawberries, lemonade, coffee, sandwiches, baked beans etc., etc.

There has been some good work done on the race track, men and teams have been at work for several days and by the 4th the track will be in good condition.

F. W. Benedict will have charge of the Central house in the temporary absence of S. P. Norton, while away to the farm. Mr. Benedict is a genial gentleman, and will entertain the guests in good shape.

Fred Moeckel, son of Mrs. Moeckel of this city, arrived in the city last Wednesday. He will remain until after the 4th. Fred has been in Fargo for some time, learning the jewelry business.

Hurrah; strawcream and ice berries, no, strawberries and ice cream, no, that isn't just it, but is something of that sort. It's good, anyhow, call and try it, at Presbyterian Open House, below Medical Hall.

Mr. and Mrs. William Rostron are visiting their son in the city this week. They have been living in Minneapolis for several years and were very much suprised and pleased at the great changes wrought in our city since their departure. They return home on Saturday.

Wm. Dawley, who has been head salesman in the dry goods department of Fontaine & Anglin for the past three or four years, has resigned and accepted a position as traveling salesman, with the firm of Auerbauch, Finch & Van Slyck, St. Paul. He has left with his family for that city.

The word gall, used in some instances is proper. This is one instance. A man goes into a real estate office in this city to buy a farm. The agent flies around, gets the sectional plat of the county and goes on to tell the supposed purchaser all about the different lands etc., etc., and takes up about two hours of his valuable time. The man finally decides to take a certain farm, the agent's heart leaps for joy as he thinks of the one hundred dollar bill (his commission) that he will soon have in his pocket, when all at once the man says to him, I have got $40 in cash which of course I shall want to build me a shanty. Do you know of anybody who has got a yoke of oxen that they want to sell on time? The features of the agent about this time were enough to make anybody tired [illegible] as he takes the man by the arm and leads him to the door and points to the next real estate office and tells him that he thinks [illegible]. This is only one of the many trials that a real estate agent has to bear.

J. W. Kelley was in from the thirteen towns last Wednesday. He says that he has a hen that layed an egg that measured 8 inches one way an 6½ inches the other way.

It is reported that the crops are looking fine out towards the thirteen towns. Wheat heading out, lots of settlers coming in, lots of breaking being done, and a good deal of stock being taken there. This speaks well for that section.

A lively runaway occured on Main Street to-day. The wagon was loaded with lumber, the driver held to the lines until the wagon struck the sidewalk in front of Bjoin's livery stable when he was thrown off. The team team was then loose from the wagon and kept on until they ran against a telephone pole on Broadway. Luckily nobody hurt.

I wish to say to the people of Crookston and vicinity, that I shall open a first class meat market on Broadway at the old stand formerly occupied by my brother. I shall keep a good stock at all times, and I shall endeavor to treat you all alike, and merit a share of your generous patronage.

FRANK JEROME.

Notice of Mortgage Sale by Advertisement.

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Theopolis C. Patnode and Cordelia Patnode, his wife, mortgagors, to John Cromb, mortgagee, dated the fourth day of September A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the 4th day of September A. D. 1882, at 1:45 o'clock p. m., in book "H" of mortgages, on page 248 on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the amount of fifty-six and 17-100 dollars, and there is yet to become due thereon four hundred and twenty-five dollars and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction by the Sheriff of said County, on Saturday the 16th day of August A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-four, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage, and so to be sold, are the lots, pieces or parcels of land situated in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: Lots number four (4) eleven (11) and twelve (12), and the southeast quarter (se¼) of the southeast quarter (se¼,) all in Section number eighteen (18,) in Township number one hundred and fifty-one (151) north, of Range number forty-three west, of fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and seventeen (117) acres more or less according to the United States survey thereof.

Dated July 2d, 1884.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Arthur Perras, mortgagor, to John Cromb, mortgagee, dated the 31st day of October A. D. 1882, and recorded as a mortgage together with the power of sale therein contained in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the 31st day of October A. D. 1882 at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m., in book "H" of mortgages on page 352 which said mortgage authorized the holder thereof in case of such default to declare due and foreclose the same for the whole amount secured to be paid thereby, and whereas, there is claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the amount of four hundred and sixty-six and 66-100 dollars, being the whole amount secured to be paid thereby, and still unpaid and seven and 55-100 dollars taxes paid by mortgagee, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, and whereas by such default the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of such power of sale contained in, and recorded with said mortgage and of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the west front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction, by the Sheriff of said County or by his Deputy of said County, on Saturday the 16th day of August A. D. 1884, at ten o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amount that shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon and costs and expenses of sale, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure. The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are the lot piece or parcel of land situated in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The east half (e½,) of the northwest quarter (nw¼,) and the west half (w½,) of the northeast quarter (ne¼,) of Section number fourteen (14,) in Township number one hundred and fifty (150) north, of Range number forty-two (42) west, of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres more or less according to the United States government survey thereof.

Dated Crookston, July 3d, 1884.

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS

On Monday the house considered and passed the sundry civil appropriations bill, which ordinarily occupies two or three days. The bill, which is often filled with jobs, is apparently free from any schemes to rob the government, and contains no features likely to provoke discussion. Only one important amendment was adopted, and that was in the nature of a section making appropriations for the United States courts. It was offered by Mr. Springer, and very carefully drawn. The bill provides for the usual fees and balances to United States marshals and other persons connected with the United States courts. The substitute abolishes the fees system, so far as it applies to United States marshals, and pays them fixed salaries. Under the bill as amended—

The United States marshals shall receive annually for their services the following salaries, payable monthly: Southern district of New York, $6,000; Northern New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, District of Columbia, Southern Ohio and California $5,000 each; Maryland, Eastern Missouri Kentucky, Northern Ohio, Northern and Southern Illinois Eastern Louisiana, Kansas and Eastern Texas, $4,000 each; New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Deleware, Nevada, Southern Florida, Connecticut, Northern Mississippi, $2,000 each, and all other marshals shall be paid a salary of $2,000 a year.

The Senate has passed the house bill to authorize the president to appoint two additional justices of the supreme court of Dakota and one additional justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Washington, with the Collom bill pensioning invalid three months volunteers in the war of the rebellion, with their widows and dependent parents, as an amendment.

The house on Tuesday passed the bill to repeal the pre-emption and timber culture laws and to amend the homestead law. With reference to the pre-emption law the bill provides that:

All persons entitled to pre-empt any land under existing laws, who before the law have in good faith filed their claims, or, who having the legal right to pre-empt, have located on any of the surveyed public lands with the intention of entering the same when surveyed shall have the right to complete their entries and receive a patent as though the repeal had not passed. It also provides that the repeal of the timber culture law shall not prejudice the rights of those who have in good faith made entries under the law and complied with the requirements thereof. The second, third and fourth sections of the bill provide for amendments to the homestead law. The first amendment applies to cases where a person has entered upon land in good faith, intending to homestead and perfect his title thereto, but is prevented from doing so by a grant previously made by the government, or by the shifting of the channel or bed of any river whereby his lands may be lost, or from any cause over which he has no control, without fault on his part, he may, by making satisfactory proof of the fact, enter another homestead upon any of the public lands of the United States subject to homestead. The third section provides that every homesteader shall make final proof by two credible witnesses that he resided upon, cultivated and permanently improved his or her homestead for four consecutive years next succeeding such entry. The proof is to be made in duplicate, and one set is required to be filed in the local land office and one in the general land office for one year, and if no contest is filed or notice given charging and specifying fraud in the entry or proof before the expiration of that time, then the patent shall issue.

This, it will be seen, gives the time between the filing of the proof and the issuing of the patent to detect fraud, if any on the part of applicant. The law as it now stands only requires notice to be published in a newspaper of intention to make this proof. Section 4 of the substitute amends section 2,301, to require thirty calendar months to expire after the party files his pre-emption claim before he is entitled to his patent. It also requires the proof of settlement and cultivation to be filed at least six months. This amendment, it is believed will tend largely to prevent fraud:

The house on Tuesday, after a protracted discussion, passed the Eaton substitute for the senate bill fixing the day for the meeting of the electors of president and vice president, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for president and vice president and the decision of questions arising thereon. The senate bill provided that the electors of each state shall meet and give their votes on the second Monday in January next following their appointment, at such place in each state as the legislature thereof shall direct. The house bill fixes the second Monday in December. It is not expected that it will pass the Senate.

On Tuesday the senate concluded its consideration of the Mexican pension bill, and it passed by a vote of 37 to 27. The so-called Mexican pension bill as originally introduced early in the session, provided for the pensioning of the surviving officers, soldiers and sailors (or their surviving widows) who served fourteen days in the various Indian wars between 1790 and 1812, in the war of 1812, and in the war with Mexico; and those who served thirty days in the Greek war of 1835-1836; in the Florida war of 1835-1838; or in the Black Hawk war of 1842. This measure passed the house on the 3d of March last. In the senate an amendment was adopted comprising the substance of Senator Cullom's bill, providing pensions for invalid soldiers and sailors who have been discharged from the army or navy of the United States after three months services in the war of the Rebellion, and for the widows and dependent parents of deceased pensioners. Another amendment which was adopted provides that no person shall be entitled to more than one pension at one time under the laws of the United States, unless that fact be specially stated in the law.

In the senate, an amendment was adopted that reports in the Congressional Record shall be an accurate transcript of the proceedings and debates of congress, and that no speech shall be published therein which was not spoken in congress, and such speeches shall be printed as they were actually delivered, except verbal corrections made by authors of the speeches, and by no other person; and that when speeches are reserved by their authors for correction, they shall be returned to the reporter of the house in which they were delivered, within one week, and if not so delivered, they shall be printed in the Congressional Record from notes reported.

The house, by a large majority, defeated the bill to forfeit the land grant of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge & Vicksburg, or what is known as the "Backbone" railroad company. The bill was discussed at length by Mr. Lewis of Louisiana, who favored it, Mr. Payson of Illinois and Mr. Ellis of Louisianna, who opposed, and several other members. Substantially the same principle involved in the land grant to the "Backbone" Railroad company, is also involved in the grant to the Northern Pacific company. The Northern Pacific bill is pending, and judging from the action of the house, it is very likely that it will not pass.

Gilbert A. Pierce of Illinois, governor of Dakota; John H. Kinkead of Nevada, governor of Alaska; Andrew Rolson of Minnesota, receiver of the public moneys, Redwood Falls, Minn.; James M. Armstrong of Washington Territory, register of the land office, Spokane Falls, Wash.; Charles A. Witherell, Nevada, register of the land office, Carson City, Nevada; Carrington G. Belknap, California, agent for Indians at Tulle River Agency, Cal.; John F. Kinney, Nebraska, agent for Indians at the Yankton Agency.

Postmasters—E. O. Braune, Tracy, Minn.; Henry O. Basford, Austin, Minn.; Jacob Rycord, Iowa City, Iowa; Charles G. Perkins, Onawa, Iowa; W. F. Scott, Mapleton, Iowa; F. B. Southmaid, Alexandria, Dak.; Samuel H. Elrod, Clark, Dak.; John R. James, Columbia, Dak.; John H. Carroll, Desmet, Dak.; N. E. Westoon, Blunt, Dak.; D. G. Grippen, Kimball, Dak.; Henry F. Rising, Redfield, Dak.; David R. Mead, Glendive, Mont.

Conference report in the house on Friday the pension and army bills were agreed to. An unsuccessful attempt was made to consider the Northern Pacific land grant forfeiture bill. The bill to forfeit the Backbone railroad land grant was finally killed by a vote of 114 to 124. The bills to relieve certain soldiers of the charge of desertion and for the relief of Myra Clark Gaines passed.

In both houses Friday some campaign talk was indulged in, friends of Logan in the senate and house, and Logan himself in the former body, denying that the republican candidate for vice president owned 80,000 acres of land, as charged in a recent publication. Mr. Hawley called the attention to the senate to a statement in the Record that Senator Logan owned 80,000 acres of land. This statement, he said, was untrue. The gentleman referred to is only owner of the land on which his father died and to which he had added a little, in his own state of Illinois. Alluding to the same matter, Mr. Logan said: The statement is utterly false. I do not propose to give a schedule of my property to anybody, but property I do own is in the state of Illinois. I do own some two or three tracts of land, but all put together would not make one-hundredth part of what they charge.

Henry Gillig of London gave a banquet Tuesday evening in honor of A. A. Sargent, ex-United States minister to Berlin. Ex-Senator Ferry of Michigan, Justin McCarthy, E. A. Merritt, consul general to London, Bronson Howard, Gen. Noyes, ex-United States minister to Paris, Puleston, the banker, and others were present. Gillig proposed a toast to Sargent, who replied avoiding reference to Berlin, but expressed admiration for England. Senator Ferry, in a speech, said American sympathy for Gordon was equal to English sympathy for Garfield. Ex-United States Attorney Tenny of Brooklyn said Sargent had done his duty, and was sure of a hearty welcome home. Sargent sailed for America on Saturday.

Albertina Anderson was shot at San Francisco by William C. Milton, who then blew his own brains out. The cause was her refusal to marry him.

James A. Winston, of the clerk's office at Springfield, who assisted Special Agent Bowman, of the department of justice, in the examination of ex-Marshal Wheeler's accounts, testified before the Springer committee, but presented no new facts. He places the amount of fraudulent charges made by Wheeler at something more than $2,000.

The president holds that the legislative power of congress should not be interfered with except for constitutional reasons and to protect the treasury. It has been his inclination to veto the Porter bill, as he feels that its passage is a reflection upon the official act of his predecessor, who was a member of the court, but he does not think he should use the veto for this reason alone.

There was great excitement in oil circles at Pittsburg, Pa., occasioned by the failure of Tomas J. Watson, the heaviest dealer on the floor of the exchange. He has been heavily short for some weeks and this forenoon was unable to fulfill a contract for the delivery of 77,000 barrels. His shortage was $11,000.

Andrew J. O'Dell of East Troy, Wis., was arrested at Geneva Lake, Wis., on Monday, the 23d, charged with an attempted outrage on Miss Susie Ingalls of that village. The allegations are that Miss Ingalls was staying with Mr. O'Dell's people, near East Troy, and that Sunday night young O'Dell attempted the base deed. The girl's cries were heard by Andrew O'Dell's father. The latter armed himself with an ax-helve and went to the room. The son took the helve from his father and beat him over the head. The elder O'Dell died Tuesday the 24th. The son is now in jail at Elkhorn.

Sunday morning the 22d, two Italians, giving the names of Marco and Palidino, were arrested at La Crosse on suspicion. An officer came and took them to Chicago. They are suspected of having robbed a countryman in Baltimore of $5,500 in money and property.

Intelligence received from Nizhne, Novgorod confirms the reports of a conflict between Christians and Jews at that place last Thursday. A rumor was circulated to the effect that a Jew had kidnapped a Christian child and taken it to the synagogue. A mob attacked the synagogue, and killed ninety-six Jews, while many others were roughly handled. Much damage was done to houses of Jews, many being plundered. The police and a few detachments of Cossack infantry succeeded in restoring order and 150 arrests were made.

Moody says his revival campaign in London has been eminently successful. Something like 400 meetings were held in eleven districts, at which a million and a half persons were present. All classes of society were reached and influenced. The number of persons converted will reach into the thousands, among them several pronounced sceptics. Two large halls are now in process of building at Stratford and Wadsworth to continue the work begun there. The cost of the mission is £15,000. Moody expects to sail with his family and Pentecost and Stebbins for New York on the steamship Oregon, which leaves Liverpool July 12.

The president received the resignation of Judge Drummond, of the Seventh judicial circuit, and directed Attorney General Brewster to accept it. Judge Drummond writes that having reached the age of seventy-five, and being enfeebled by his years, he desires to avail himself of the privilege of the law which entitles him to retirement from the bench, and asks the president to nominate his successor at his earliest convenience. There is very little doubt of the appointment of Postmaster General Gresham as Drummond's successor.

The Ohio democratic state convention elected as delegates to Chicago Gen. Durbiss Ward, Allen G. Thurman, John R. McLean and Jacob Mueller. The following were elected as alternates at large, by acclamation; G. D. Marsh, Dave Flanagan, W. W. Howard and Thomas Wetzler. Gen. A. V. Rice and T. E. Powell were selected by acclamation as electors. A state ticket was named as follows: Secretary of state, James W. Newman, Portsmouth, (re-nominated); supreme judge, C. D. Martin; member of the board of public works, John H. Benfer. The platform reaffirmed the resolutions of Ohio of 1880, 1881 and 1882, and of the democratic national conventions of 1872, 1876 and 1880.

The prince of Orange's illness was chiefly induced by the vitiated atmosphere in which he lived. Sixty parrots were kept in his bedroom.

Fifty-two oil portraits, some not finished, others well finished, of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, were purchased in Philadelphia last week at $1 apiece. Several of these heads have the character of the elder Peale's portraits. That of Robert Morris is remarkably good. They are little smaller than life size. The bookseller who had them said that they were brought to him by a respectable-looking man, who conveyed the impression that he represented some family compelled to sacrifice them.

Postmasters Confirmed—Julius H. Hale, Spencer, Iowa; George W. Hopp, Brookings, Dak.; Nathan S. Gilbert, Central City, Dak.

Land-Scrip Carpenter Convicted.

Yankton, Special:—After a trial of nearly one month, the jury in the fraudulent scrip case rendered a verdict against E. E. Carpenter, of guilty of conspiracy to defraud the United States in issuing fraudulent scrip. Defendant's counsel gave notice of a motion for a stay of judgment and a new trial. The defendant could not get all the witnesses he desired, and did not make a very vigorous defense, intending to make this motion. He will also argue that as the New Orleans subtreasury was not established by congress, no conspiracy against the United States could be committed by making bogus scrip. It is thought that the motion for a new trial may be granted. If not the sentence must be pronounced, and W. D. Russell, convicted two years ago and now on bail, must also receive a sentence. Cameron's trial will be postponed. About a month ago it will be remembered, Carpenter escaped from custody and went to Iowa, where he was rearrested and taken back to Yankton without the usual formalities of law. D. J. Spaulding of La Crosse, charged with complicity in the scrip frauds, was tried and acquitted on the 11th inst.

Great Storm in Ohio and Pennsylvania.

A terrific thunder storm passed over a portion of Western Pennsylvania and Eastern Ohio last Thursday, damaging property and killing several persons and a large amount of live stock. At Murrayville, Pa., a boy named Wolf and four horses were struck by lightning and killed. A young brother of the boy was badly burned. At Waynesburg, Pa., Miss Josie Keenes and William Rader were seriously injured by a lightning bolt and three horses killed. At Corry, Pa., several head of blooded stock belonging to Henry Case were killed. At Salem, Ohio, Miss Minnie Westpoor, aged sixteen, was standing in the doorway when lightning struck the veranda, killing her instantly. At Youngstown Ohio, lightning struck the house of Abner Meadsknor, killing his daughter and severely injuring others of the family. Three barns were destroyed. At Newcomerstown, Ohio, the storm was accompanied by a furious tornado. Trees were uprooted, fences blown down, and great damage done to crops.

Boiler Disaster at Wausau, Wis.

The boiler of Smith's planing mill in Wausau, Wis., exploded Wednesday morning with terrible force. It was bedded in brick, which fell in a shower for blocks around. It shook the whole city. Four persons were killed outright, and many badly hurt. The killed are: Mary Crocker, George Brown, foreman and engineer, August Stricke, foreman, blown to pieces. William Buchanan, shipper for M. B. Atwater & Co., badly hurt, and will die. Many others are more or less injured. Adjacent houses were badly shattered. A piece of boiler weighing nearly a ton was blown over a woodshed and against the side of a building ten yards distant, with a shower of brick that shattered every window in the house. Eight persons were in the room where the piece struck, but escaped with but slight injuries.

The discussion of the Mexican pension bill in the senate brought out some queer statistics about the pensioners of the war of 1812. That war was ended nearly seventy years ago, and the number of troops engaged in it was not remarkable, yet to-day there are actually 21,000 pensioners on the roll, as widows of that war. They drew last year $1,882,000, or five and a half times as much as the few old soldiers surviving. Of course, the explanation is that some of the widows were married to the veteran warriors half a century or so after the war was over and they became entitled to their pensions in due time, when their husbands died. Thus it is not impossible that in the twentieth century a greater part of the 21,000 widows will still be drawing pensions on account the war of 1812.

The house has passed a bill providing for the retirement, upon three-fourths pay, of private and non-commissioned officers of the army who have served thirty years. There are fifty privates in the army who can take advantage of this law. The statistics show that 25 per cent. of enlisted men in the army desert every year. It is believed that the passage of this bill, giving, as it does, assurance that aged veterans will be taken care of, when they are incapacitated for service, will go far to prevent the desertions.

Mrs. Langtry has wrestled another $15,000 in New York real estate.

Off Days.

Thousands and thousands men and women have their off days—they are not sick enough to give up, relinquish their duties and go to bed, but as one describes it:

"I feel so drowsy and weary—my headaches."

"I never did have a meaner feeling in my life."

"My stomach does not feel right."

"Don't know what is the matter with me, but do not feel well."

"I have a half feeling of nausea."

"Too cold one minute and too warm the next."

"To use a slang phrase, 'I'm all broke up.'"

The above and hundreds of similar expressions are heard daily, with some there is a different cause, others cannot account for the feeling. It may originate from different reasons, but from whatever cause, nature requires assistance and you can immediately render the assistance and dispel all these unpleasant symptoms. By using Burdock Blood Bitters take them immediately on the appearance of the unpleasant feeling.

You will feel better in half-an-hour.
Take it any time before or after meals.
If before you will enjoy your meal better.
If after it will aid digestion.

It is a medicine you can take at any time with good results, can be taken by the prattling child, or the feeble and tottering old man or woman. Composed of roots and herbs there is nothing in its composition that will injure the most delicate constitution, pleasant in taste and effects, will do you good.

Mormons Still Coming.

Twenty-five Mormon missionaries, with 501 converts—401 Scandinavians and 100 English—arrived at New York by the steamship Arizona en route to Salt Lake City, under charge of Chief Elder C. H. Nye. As the steamer reached the dock, a roll call was held, and each elder was detailed to his respective post. The young women looked listless as the elders rushed in among them, giving orders. Elder Nye said:

The converts I bring are not all recent accessions, some having been members of the church over thirty years, who through lack of means or other causes have been unable to come here. I am now going back to Utah to remain there, and within a short time of our arrival a further relay of elders will be sent to Europe to keep up the work. I consider that I have been very successful.

Referring to the arrest of Mormon missionaries in Vienna, Mr. Nye says: "I do not contemplate any serious outcome from it."

The Wedding of He-Haw Wilde.

London Truth remarks that Nellie went to see Oscar Wilde's wedding, and was immensely amused, on arriving at the church (St. Jamse's, Sussex Gardens), to find that the bridegroom had given orders thae none should be admitted unless they had his card. Of course, it was quite right that a certain portion of the church should be set apart at weddings for the friends of the bride and bridegroom: but for a man to issue his commands as to who shall and who shall not, be admitted to a public place of worship is a little too ridiculous. Nellie got in, however, notwithstanding her being unprovided with Mr. Oscar Wilde's visiting card. She says the bride's dress was pretty, chiefly on account of its perfect simplicity, Her veil was peculiar, being of gauze or open-meshed spun silk, or something unusual. The bridesmaids' harmonies of terracotta and primrose were spoiled by white hats and feathers. Nellie says it was the funniest thing in the world to see the contracting parties and the best man posing in studied attitudes during the ceremony. Fancy a man being married with his head on one side, like a "tired" lily, his hand on his hip and his legs disposed according to a preconcerted arrangement. The bridesmaids carried lovely lilies. Lady Wilde "snatched" her new daughter to her heart with some effusion, and the bridegroom kissed the bride.

Midsummer fest was celebrated at Red Wing by the Scandinavians of this city and vicinity in true old-country style. Speeches were made by Judge N. O. Werner on "The Day," going back to the old heathen times in Scandinavia, when this day was observed at a feast to the god Balda. One custom was to light fires on every hilltop at sunset, as an offering to the god of light. Many pleasant reminiscences were alluded to of old times in Norway and Sweden. B. B. Herbut and Hon. T. G. Pierson followed, with remarks which kept the crowd in good humor until the May pole games and dances took the attention of all. A bountiful feast was spread by the ladies, to which all were invited. Songs were sung, toasts drank in lemonade, speeches made, until sunset, when all went home, well pleased.

The St. Louis, Mo., Post-Dispatch says, that Mrs. Phoebe Rice, 1208 Madison street, a sister of Hon. H. Clay Sexton, Chief, St. Louis Fire Depart., had been a sufferer from inflammatory rheumatism for seven years; the muscles of her hands and limbs were contracted and she used crutches. By a single application of St. Jacobs Oil she was benefited instantaneously, and finally completely cured.

After commencement exercises at Hamilton college at Clinton, N. Y., Wednesday afternoon, Prof. Best gave a reception in the evening. The students, while the reception was going on, entered Prof. Best's residence and endeavored to steal the ice cream and cake. They broke open the cellar door and ransacked the house to find it. During the reception they threw mud at the windows, lifted off the shutters, and hooted and howled until Prof. Best was obliged to go out on the stoop and draw his revolver. The solitary policeman was called and arrested one Zimmerman and took him to jail. At about midnight sixty of the students went to the jail armed with axes, clubs and iron bars. The fire bells were rung and the citizens turned out to prevent the rescue of the prisoner. Zimmerman was taken to court next day and discharged for lack of evidence.

"A Severe Case of Catarrh Cured."

Mr. Asa B. Rowley of the firm of Pierce & Rowley, Druggist and Apothecaries, cor. 35th and Indiana Ave., says: "I was afflicted with a very aggravated form of Catarrh, several physicians predicted that it would soon end in consumption. We have sold the Papillon Catarrh Cure for nearly two years and heard such good reports from our customers, that I was induced to use the remedy for my own case; the result was unprecedented. I commenced to get well after using it the first time, I continued using the remedy for several weeks, and am now entirely cured. I will be glad to give any one calling upon me further particulars. Papillon Catarrh Cure, we are confident is the only sure cure for Catarrh—acute or chronic, Hay Fever or Rose Cold."

The senate passed the bill allowing Dakota two additional judges.

Blaine's Knabe Piano.

Hon. James G. Blaine, the republican candidate for the presidency, is one of the many celebrities of national fame who have chosen Knabe pianos. The plumed knight selected a cabinet grand rosewood upright. President Arthur purchased a Knabe grand for the White House not long since. The Knabe pianos should thus play an important part in restoring harmony among the factions of the grand old party.—American Art Journal.

"A Single Fact is Worth a Ship-Load of Argument."

Mr. W. B. Lathrop, of South Easton, Mass., under date of Jan. 7, 1884, says: "My father had for years an eating cancer on his under lip, which had been gradually growing worse until it had eaten away his under lip down to the gums, and was feeding itself on the inside of his cheek, and the surgeons said a horrible death was soon to come. We gave him nine bottles of Swift's Specific and he has been entirely cured. It has created great excitement in this section.

Hay-Fever is a type of catarrh having peculiar symptoms. It is attended by an inflamed condition of the lining membrane of the nostrils, tear-ducts and throat, affecting the lungs. How to Save Money, and we might also say—time and pain as well, in our advice to good housekeepers and ladies generally. The great necessity existing always to have a perfectly safe remedy convenient for the relief and prompt cure of the ailments peculiar to woman—functional irregularity, constant pains, and all the symptoms attendant upon uterine disorders—induces us to recommend strongly and unqualifiedly Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription"—woman's best friend. It will save money.

Loss of Flesh and Strength, with poor appetite, and perhaps slight cough in the morning, or on first lying down at night, should be looked to in time. Persons afflicted with consumption are proverbially unconscious of their real state. Most cases commence with disordered liver, leading to bad digestion and imperfect assimilation of food—hence the emaciation, or wasting of the flesh. It is a form of scrofulous disease, and is curable by the use of that greatest of all blood-cleansing, anti-bilious and invigorating compounds, known as Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery".

A HAPPY FAMILY.

BY MRS. M. L. RAYNE.

It was Sunday. Mr. Skinner was tired, and thought he would lie down on the sofa in the back parlor and rest. People never learn by experience, and he was no exception to the common rule.

He lay down, and crossed his feet with a parade hardly justifiable under the circumstances. His wife came in and saw him.

"Why, Lot Skinner!" she exclaimed. "If I ever heard of the like! Lying down on that new sofa with your boots on, and oh, my goodness! your head on that lace tidy I had done up only last week. You are the most inconsiderate man I ever saw in my life!"

Mr. Skinner got up and his wife smoothed out the tidy and rearranged it.

"The idea of anybody putting a head on that tidy," said Mrs. Skinner, who had no intention of using slang. "I did suppose you had more sense."

"I used to have," said Mr. Skinner good-naturedly, "Ya-a-a-h. I could take a nap if I could find a place to drop down. Y-a-a-h."

"You had better read your Bible," said Mrs. Skinner. She was a good, uncomfortable woman, so clean and neat and orderly that she made her family wretched with her domestic drill.

Something called Mrs. Shinner off then, and when she came back Mr. Skinner was gone. She sat down and took a book, when a thought struck her, and she bounded from her chair as if it had been a cannon ball.

Yes, it was just as she had feared; her husband had gone up stairs, and she found him stretched out on the bed, on top of a white counterpane, his grizzly-gray head sunk deep into a white, starched pillow-sham, with these words embroidered in the center:

"Sleep sweet, beloved!"

He was not asleep, but snored, with a look of sweet content on his wide-open mouth.

"L-o-t Sk-i-n-n-e-r!"

He got up in a manner that would have done credit to a gymnast, and stood staring at the fearful hollow in the bed and the wrinkled dent in the pillow-sham.

"I declare I forgot," he said, looking very foolish. "Alice, haven't I a place where I can lay my head?"

"Don't talk nonsense," said his wife sharply. "The idea of a sober man going to bed with his boots on."

"Would you rather I'd get——"

"I'd rather you'd get some common sense," she said. "If you must sleep in the day-time why there's an old lounge down in the kitchen; no one will disturb you there. Or I suppose"—ungraciously—"I can take off the quilt, and the shams, and let you have your nap here, though its wicked, that's what it is, to sleep Sunday. It's a bad example to set to the children, Lot, and you know it."

"But I am so sleepy," answered her husband; "my head is as heavy as lead, and I cannot keep my eyes open."

"Laziness! sheer laziness!" said his wife sharply.

Mr. Skinner went down stairs and disappeared. The last words his wife heard him say were that there was rest for the weary, but she was picking up the embroidery on the mis used sham with a pin, and did not heed him. When she went down stairs he was not in sight and she busied herself with getting dinner, which on Sunday took the place of supper, and thought no more about him.

She was a distinguished woman; distinguished in the town where she lived, as being the cleanest housekeeper in it. No girl could be found neat enough to live with her; all the mottoes in her house were to the effect that cleanliness is akin to goodliness. She dusted every article of furniture in the house several times every day; she scrubbed so often that the children had chronic diphtheria; she scrubbed so clean that at last she scrubbed through her kitchen floor into the cellar, and was nearly lost to the community. It was a perptual warfare between her and dirt. The front parlor was never opened to the family, and although Mr. Skinner had furnished it he had never sat down in it a moment since. Its air was that of a tcmb. After it had been opened to company for an afternoon, the children went around with flannels about their throats and drank ginger tea. It was the handsomest parlor in the community, too, and had the family pictures and their marriage certificate framed and hung up there.

When dinner was ready—and it was a good dinner, too, for Mrs. Skinner was a notable cook—she asked the children where their father was.

They did not know.

This seemed strange; she questioned them closely, but they had not seen which way he went when he passed through the room.

"Didn't he say where he was going?" she asked, wonderingly, for Mr. Skinner never went out on Sunday without his family.

"He said he was going where he'd have more peace," said little Harry Skinner.

"Well, we won't wait dinner for him," said his wife; and they sat down to eat.

But a spell seemed to have fallen upon them, and when the dinner was over and cleared away, and they were in the sitting-room with their books, there was a sense of dreary loss, and Mrs. Skinner sat with the Bible open on her lap, and wondered why he had gone out and remembered that he had looked queer.

It was in consonance with her habits of living that she got up in the middle of these speculations to catch a wander[illegible] belated fly and induce him to [illegible]ihilated.

"[illegible]ange!" she said, as if grew dark. "[illegible]e the children and go down to [illegible]her's and see if he is there, and [illegible] I'll just give him a piece of my mind."

But he was not there, and his mother said Lot had looked badly the last time she saw him, and she thought he seemed worried—hoped it wasn't business troubles.

No, it wasn't business troubles, Mrs. Skinner knew that, and began to wonder if she had cleaned her husband out of his mind. It came over her with sudden force that she had been in the habit of driving him from pillar to post at railroad speed, and at the end of a broom or dust-brush. He actually found no rest for the sole of his foot in his own house. It might have worked upon his nervous system until he had become suddenly insane. Horrible thought! He might have committed suicide.

She hurried home with the children. All was gloom. She went to his bureau to look for his razor. It was the only fire arms he possessed—it was gone!

Then Mrs. Skinner broke down and cried, and it was indeed a scene of desolation, when suddenly the door of that horrible parlor opened, and an apparition—no, it was Mr. Skinner himself—stood before them looking very sheepish.

"I overslept myself," he said in a meek, apologetic tone, looking at the clock.

"I should say you did," answered his wife, "and the dinner is all eaten up, but I'll fix you up something nice," and she went out taking the children with her.

How much of it Mr. Skinner ever knew it is impossible to say, but there was an immediate and satisfactory change that at first amazed and then delighted him. He could lay down anywhere when he was tired and his wife would throw a shawl over him, and leave him in peace. He has even been seen to lie down on the sofa in the parlor where he took his Rip Van Winkle sleep and nobody disturbed him. Mrs. Skinner was at heart a woman of sense, and when she relized that one hair of that grizzly-gray head was worth more than all the pillow shams in the world to her, she put the last one away in the company of a demented assortment of superfluous tidies. And they are really and truly, and not in any zoological sense, a "happy family" now.

The Dazed Miner.

It is difficult for one who has been cradled in wealth to conceive of the mental and moral shock given to a poor man by the sudden acquisition of riches. The almost instantaneous transition from the struggle to keep the wolf from the door, to a life which is free from both labor and care, dazes him. He becomes as eccentric in his actions as one who dreams is in his thoughts.

A correspondent of an English paper, writing from Australia, illustrates this fact by the following story:

A friend of mine came into Sydney a month ago who had struck a fortune in the mines, and from being a poor miserable tramp with just enough money to keep him from starving, he had become the owner of thousands of pounds in ready gold.

He rushed into the first store he happened to see, which was a drug-store.

"Just let me have a hundred dollars worth of those bottles there, will you?" he shouted to the proprietor.

"Certainly," replied the polite druggist. "What kind of drugs do you want?"

"Drugs! I don't want your drugs! Just send couple shelves full of those bottles up to the Hotel——to me. Tom Randall. Here's your pay," and he threw a handful of gold on the counter, and rushed out, and into the next store, which was hardware.

"Is that a good stove?" said he, kicking the nearest one.

"Yes sir," said the hardware man coming forward, smiling, "that stove will,"—

"Never mind what it'll do. Just send it up to Hotel——to Tom Randall, will you? How much is it? Never mind the change!" and he had paid for it, and was gone, before the store-keeper had recovered from his wonder.

He then went into a dozen different stores, ordering countless things which happened to strike his fancy or please his whim, and, at last, returned to his hotel.

I found him there two hours later, sitting on the edge of a trunk surrounded by his different purchases, which with the promptness of the Sydney tradesmen had been sent according to his order.

My friend sat with his face in his hands as I came in, and did not stir. Finally, the tears began to trickle through his fingers, and at last he looked up at me with a comical smile.

"Bob," said, he "it's the first time I ever had any money in my life. Just think! Here I am a rich man? Why I had to do something to prove it to myself. I should have gone crazy if I hadn't." Then after a pause, he added, "And I've proved it pretty well, I guess." With a pensive air he glanced over the room, and for the first time seemed to take in its contents.

Then he burst into a laugh in which I joined. From laughing he passed into crying, then quieted down, and asked me to help him dispose of his numerous purchases.

Most of them were sent to his old comrades in the mines, and a week after, he sailed for America. But I believe those absurd purchases were the indirect means of preserving his reason at the critical period of his life.

Killed by a Hog.

From the Philadelphia Times.

Henry Ward who lived at the corner of Moyamensing and Snyder avenues met his death in a horrible form recently. For some months past he had had in his possession a large hog, which was, during the day-time, allowed to run in the back yard. During the night it was kept in a pen in the northeastern corner of the yard. Some days ago the hog developed an ugly disposition, and protested by vicious grunts its aversion to confinement. Several times it turned on its owner while being driven to its pen, and had to be subdued with a club. Yesterday the animal became unusually vicious and attacked every one who came near. A dog that was set on the brute in the hope that he would drive it to the pen was routed and narrowly escaped death by scaling a five-foot picket fence.

Mr. Ward returned home at 2 o'clock and undertook to drive the hog into his pen. The beast trotted sullenly ahead until within a few feet of the gate, when it turned, and, with a vicious snort, charged on its owner. The man tried to beat it off with a stick, but was overpowered in an instant. The hog reared itself off its hind feet, and, throwing its weight against the man, bore him to the earth. It then sprang on him, and with its front hoofs drawn closely together and before the prostrate man could recover his footing the hog had made a ghastly wound in his abdomen with its teeth. The wounded man was soon rescued by some neighbors, but bled to death before medical assistance arrived. The hog was killed with an ax.

UNCLE CUTHBERT.

"Hush! It is Clarence Hy[illegible]step!" And Rosa Eldon sprang to [illegible] feet, rosy and smiling, with the [illegible]ly-plucked helitrope trembling among her glossy brown braids, and her pretty blue dress floating around her like an azure cloud.

Only 18, and very fair and lovely was our little Rosa—a trifle spoiled and wilful, perhaps, but what else could one expect? Every one petted and made much of her—every one smiled at her pretty, kittenish way—and Clarence Hyde thought her the fairest specimen of feminine humanity that ever the sun shone on.

Lizzy Eldon made room for her sister—Lizzie, just one year younger and scarcely less fair yet very different in character. Lizzie was quite, and sage and demure, while Rosa rattled away like a merry mountain stream flowing over its mossy stones. Lizzy thought her sister perfection, while Rosa was lecturing Lizzy in a capricious fashion, and laying down the law to her after the most approved manner of elderly sisters.

"How nice it must be to be engaged!" said Lizzy, with a half-encouraging smile, as Rosa paused at the glass to adjust her hair. "I wish I was engaged!"

"You? Oh, you are nothing but a child," Rosa said, patronizingly. "There—give me my pocket handkerchief."

And away she went, light and lithe as a butterfly.

Clarence Hyde was in the parlor anxiously awaiting her coming, but Clarence had rather a disturbed face. He was a well-made, handsome young fellow, with laughing, wine-brown eyes, straight features, and brown hair thrown back from a broad, frank brow.

"Why, what makes you look so sober?" was Rosa's first question, when the ceremonials of greeting were gone through with, and she had had time to take a good look into his face.

"Sober? do I?"

He was playing rather restlessly with the crimson cord that looped back the white muslin draperies of the pretty bay window that made Mrs. Eldon's cottage look like one of the lovely rustic habitations you see in old English engravings.

"Exactly as if you had the toothache or a bad conscience."

Clarence laughed in spite of himself.

"You are wrong, then, my little riddle-guesser; I am afflicted with neither the one or the other."

"Well, what is it, then?"

"Rosa, what should you say if it were to become necessary to defer our marriage for some time?"

A shadow came over the infantile bloom and freshness of Rosa's face.

"To defer our marriage, Clarence? I can't imagine what you mean."

"Listen, Rosa, and I will tell you. My uncle has just come from California, very poor and a confirmed invalid. I am his only surviving relative, and to me he naturally appealed for protection and companionship. I must give him a home, Rosa. You know I had laid up just enough to begin housekeeping in a quiet, economical sort of way, but the new plan will necessarily alter all my arrangements."

"I never heard of any uncle before."

"No, dearest; I knew little of him—nothing personally, as he never visited my father's during his life-time."

Rosa's face was turned away from Clarence Hyde's; she was silently twisting a piece of paper round and round her slender forefinger.

"Rosa," he said, after waiting a minute or two for her to make some remark, "tell me honestly, dear one, which you prefer—to begin housekeeping on this new scale—one more frugal and humble than I had originally hoped and intended—or to defer our marriage until I can earn enough to carry out those original arrangements?"

She was silent for a moment, then she answered in a voice which seemed to chill Clarence's buoyant young heart:

"Neither!"

"Rosa," he exclaimed, "I do not understand you."

"I spoke plainly enough. "Neither!"

"Do you mean that—"

I mean that you must either give up your uncle or me. After all that has been said and known of our engagement after its publicity and length, I certainly can not consent to a further postponement. And we shall be poor enough if we marry immediately, without filling our house with needy relatives."

Clarence Hyde looked at his fair fiancee in perfect amazement. Never in the whole course of their acquaintance had he seen this phase of character. He had fancied her all that was sweet, pure and womanly. Could it be possible that she was cold-hearted, selfish, and dead to all the sweet ties of nature?

"Rosa," he said, mournfully, "is this to part us?"

"It is for you to say."

"Do you wish me to give up my poor, dependent uncle?"

"Either him or me," Rosa answered, indifferently.

"It will be hard—very hard, for me to lay aside the brightest wishes of my life," he said, earnestly, "but, Rosa, duty is my first object. I can not leave my uncle to wear out his remaining days in poverty and solitude."

"Very well," answered Rosa carelessly stooping to pick up the odorous purple blossoms which had fallen from her hair, "then we shall consider our engagement dissolved."

"And can you give me up so readily, Rosa?"

"Oh," said Rosa, a little impatiently, "where's the use of being romantic about it? You have chosen your part, I have chosen mine. So let it be."

Clarence Hyde took his leave, dejected enough. It is not pleasant to set up a fair idol and worship it with all the strength and tenderness of your nature, only to find, after all, that it is dust and ashes—hollow-hearted and false!

Cuthbert Hyde sat smoking his brierwood meerschaum by the open window as Clarence entered—a square, shrewd-looking old man, with deeply seamed wrinkles on his brow, and restless, sparkling eyes, gleaming like live coals beneath his shaggy brows.

"Clarence, my boy, something has gone wrong," he said, brusquely, after he had regarded his nephew in silence for a while. "Tell the old uncle what it is."

"I have told you about Rose Eldon, sir; well, she and I are—in fact, it is all over between us."

"Engagement broken, eh? Past the power of patching up!"

"Yes, uncle."

"And it was on my account? Nay; boy, don't turn away—I can read the truth in your eyes. So she played you false?"

"We are parted uncle—is not that enough?"

"Well, perhaps so—perhaps so. It was well you found her out in time, Clarence. It's for the best, my boy."

Clarence Hyde was passing down the village street a day or two, subsequently, toward dusk on a mellow August evening, when a slight form glided up to him and a tremulous hand was laid upon his own. He started at first, but quickly recognized the face and figure.

"Lizzie Eldon!"

"Oh, Clarence, I could not rest without telling you how very, very wrong I thought Rosa, and how sorry I am for you."

"Thanks, Lizzy, I do not think she has treated me exactly right."

Lizzie burst into tears.

"How could she be so cruel, so unwomanly? You are right, Clarence—you acted nobly. I think Rosa will one day live to repent it."

As Clarence stood there listening to Lizzy Eldon's impetuous words and holding her little soft hand in his own, he wondered that he had never before noticed how very, very pretty she was—a softer, more subdued style of beauty than Rosa's, yet not less bewitching in its way.

They haunted him all night long, that oval, earnest face, those simming blue eyes.

Day by day Rosa's image waxed fainter and more faint in his memory, and Lizzy's shy, gentle looks grew more than ever present in his heart.

"I do believe I've fallen in love with the girl," he thought. "I wonder what she would say if I was to propose to her?"

Next to wonder came realization. One fine October day, when they had strayed a little way from the gay, nutting party, whose voices made the old yellow-leaved woods musical, Mr. Hyde asked Lizzy Eldon if she would accept the love her sister had slighted, and Lizzy, smiling and trembling answered him, yes.

"You see, Uncle Cuthbert," said Clarence, eagerly, as he explained the new position of affairs to his uncle that evening, after he had safely escorted Lizzie home, with her basket of nuts only half filled (and no wonder, all things considered), "it will be so pleasant! We shall all live together, and Lizzie says she will love you dearly. Lizzie is such a famous little housekeeper. She thinks it will be so pleasant to have you sitting by our hearthstone! And, Uncle, you will go and see her tomorrow, won't you?"

"Yes," said Uncle Cuthbert, briefly, "I'll go."

And the next day Lizzie was surprised at her sewing by a brown-faced, little, old man, who abruptly took both her hands in his and imprinted a kiss upon her crimsoning forehead, just as if he was the oldest acquaintance in the world!

"So you're going to marry my nephew, Lizzy, are you?" said uncle Cuthbert.

"Yes, sir," Lizzie made answer, timidly.

"And you love him Lizzy?"

"Oh, yes, sir."

And you won't object to having the old man lumbering 'round the house, helpless and feeble though he be?"

"I shall be so glad to have you live with us, sir, for I never remember my father—and—you will be like one to me, I am sure."

Uncle Cuthbert kissed her again, and walked away as abruptly as he had come.

"He's a very funny old gentleman," thought Lizzy, "but I know I shall like him."

Rosa contemplated the present state of affairs very coolly—a little contemptuously, in fact.

"If you choose to adopt all Clarence Hyde's poor relations, why, I can only wonder at your taste," she said, loftily.

But Lizzie only smiled, and doubted to herself whether Rosa could really ever have loved Clarence.

"No, no, no!" echoed her heart.

The day of the wedding drew near. Lizzy's white dress was nearly finished, and modest little presents were beginning to be sent in from friends and neighbors.

"Here's my present," said Uncle Cuthbert, walking in one day and tossing a little box of carved wood into Lizzy's lap. "I cut out those wooden flowers myself, when I was in California."

"Well, but open it; it's lined beautifully," said the old man.

Lizzy obeyed.

"Why, there's a parchment chart in it, Uncle," cried the astonished Clarence, who was leaning over Lizzy's shoulder.

"Of course there is—a deed making over $50,000 to Lizzy Eldon the day of her marriage," answered Uncle Cuthbert, dryly, "and I've got just another one for you at home, Clarence, my boy! Aha! The old uncle was not so poverty stricken after all. You mustn't think my young lady," he added, turning abruptly to Rosa, "that gold isn't gold because it's a trifle tarnished and rusty. Appearances aren't anything in this world!"

And so Clarence and Lizzy began the world with the fairest of prospects, and true love enough to float the barque of life into the sweetest haven.

Rosa Eldon was some what chagrinned in her secret soul, but she wisely kept her feelings to herself, and Old Uncle Cuthbert was quite satisfied with the choice his nephew had made.

"She's worth twice a hundred thousand dollars in her own sweet self, Clarence," he said, confidentially, to Mr. Hyde, junior.

The coming cotton-picking season is to witness the test of a newly perfected machine which is intended to do the work of many hands in gathering the fully opened bolls without injury to other parts of the plant. Many of the machines are now in progress of manufacture, and by next month a number of them will be completed and ready for trial. This ingenious mechanism is drawn by horse-power, and runs along between the plants, plucking the perfected bolls as it goes. Friction has been reduced in it to a minimum, and its 186 picking stems are oiled from a single cup.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Household Scraps.

Hold the finger in very cold water to remove a close ring.

To purify the air of the cellar the following is recommended by a German writer: "Put some roll brimstone into a pan, set fire to it, close the doors and windows as tight as possible for two or three hours; repeat this inexpensive operation every three months."

Kid shoes may be kept soft and free from cracks by rubbing them once a week with a little pure glycerine or castor oil.

Experience proves that earthen dishes will crack when placed upon a hot stove, yet many cooks persist in using the stove for a table.

Good sized feet usually accompany well developed bodies, and the woman who has sense enough to wear a shoe suited to the foot has sense enough for other concerns of importance.

Unalterable Paste. Take one tablespoonful of flour, add gradually one pint of cold water; boil slowly and stir well to prevent burning until it thickens; keep boiling till it becomes thin, add one teaspoonful of nitro-muriatic acid, and boil till it again thickens, when it is ready for use. This paste is harmless, cheap and will neither turn sour nor mould.—Scientific American.

Sir James Paget and other English medical authorities are pointing out the great importance of not over feeding infants with starchy food, such as bread, farina, gruel, etc., as the warm season approaches. They claim that such overfeeding is a fruitful cause of the large infant mortality in warm weather. The one article, it is urged, most necessary to the life of the child at all times is water.

More Sunlight and Air Needed for Health and Comfort.

One cause of the extreme nervousness of American women is living too much in the darkness when indoors, says the Herald of Health. The rooms are kept dark to save the carpets and keep out the flies, and as a consequence both the house and the occupants lack the benefits of fresh air and sunshine. Houses from which the sun is excluded are not wholesome. There is always a damp, depressing condition in them that makes itself evident at once to a sensitive temperament. The minds and bodies of all who live in such houses are affected by it. Both health and spirits are depressed. Their occupants have not only the depressing effects of the lack of light and sun to contend against, but the reaction consequent upon living in unwholesome conditions. All the rooms in the house should have both light and sunshine freely admitted at all times, whether they are in daily use or not. They are thus kept sweet, and are in good condition when they are wanted.

Nelson Sizer once said, when making a phrenological examination: "Be as much as possible in the sunshine. People who live in dark rooms and wear black are pale all through." You cannot have too much of light either in your lives or in your houses, for good health. You may live; but it is not all of life to live. Merely to exist is but a small part of our work in this world. We should so live that body and mind are at all times in their best condition. We are then ready and able to do whatever duty may be required of us in such a way that the doing merely shall be pleasurable, and the reaction on ourselves and others beneficial. It should be, in fact, the religious duty of every one so to live.

Many a woman and child have been sacrificed to save the carpets and keep out the flies. Many a fit of illness has resulted from the same cause. Many a disappointed, cheerless life can be traced back to sunless rooms as a beginning. Multitudes of women and children are only half living to-day because only half-fed. Sunshine and light and air are as much food for body and soul as the fruits and grains and vegetables that we take into our stomachs; and we cannot get a surfeit of them as food. The more we have the better.

Sheep for Mutton.

The profit from sheep should be made as large as possible, and the addition of a few more pounds of wool to the clip will not compensate for the lack of size and quality in the carcass. In England they find the profit in mutton so great as to make sheep a necessary adjunct to the farm, which would not be the case if they bred for wool. With the increase of population of this country comes a greater demand for good mutton, for we have but little of it, and that demand is sure to increase. As it increases, the field for breeding sheep is also widened, and if we are to compete with Australia and demand a tariff to protect us we will at least be safe and sure against foreign competition in the mutton supply. Of course we find mutton in our markets, but such meat could not be easily sold in England. The usual flocks that come to our markets are very inferior. The people are anxious for mutton—good mutton—and it will be profitable to the one who sends it to market.—Farm, Field and Frieside.

Three Ways of Using Rhubarb.

Delicious rhubarb jam—To six pounds of rhubarb add six pounds of lump sugar and six large lemons; cut the rhubarb into small pieces about the size of a walnut; then the lemons should be sliced and the peel cut very fine. Put the fruit (taking out the pips from the lemons) all into a large bowl, cover it with the sugar broken small; let it stand twenty-four hours, after which boil it slowly for about three-quarters of an hour, taking care it does not stick to the pan, also not to stir much so as to break the pieces of rhubarb, as the beauty of it is in being whole. Rhubarb mould for dessert—Take one quart of red rhubarb and cut it in pieces; put it in a saucepan with a lid, and let it boil till quite a pulp; melt one-half ounce of gelatine in hot water; when dissolved put it with one pound of powdered, white sugar to the rhubarb, and boil for fifteen minutes; add a few drops lemon juice; pour the rhubarb into a mould. Next day dip the mould in hot water, turn out into a glass dish, pour round it some custard made as follows: The yolk of two eggs, a tumbler of milk, four lumps of sugar; simmer till thick; add a few drops of essence of vanilla. Rhubarb jelly—Take some rhubarb, wipe it with a clean wet cloth, peel it, and cut it into pieces an inch long. To each pound of rhubarb add three-fourths pound of white sugar. Put it to boil for about ten minutes, or until the juice is well drawn. Strain it into a preserving-pan, let it boil quickly until it clings to the spoon, skim it, and put it into jam pots or moulds. The quickest way to know if it will set is to drop a little on to a plate to cool.

Farm Items.

A member of the Elmira Farmer's Club opposes the use of breast collars on driving horses for the reason that it is injurious, by drawing the shoulders of the animals together, thereby preventing a development and expansion of the breast, especially of colts.

A French authority states that carrots give horses new blood, which seems to restore them, and they may be justly claimed as the regenerator of wornout horses.

Farmers should enjoy, above all others, the luxuries of the garden, and yet, strange to say, but few farms have complete gardens, and many farmers buy vegetables.

Dogs do not always kill sheep for the purpose of procuring food. The best fed dogs, when once they begin the practice, will continue it until they are caught in the act.

Feed the little chicks often—five times a day will not be too often—with hard-boiled egg, bread crumbs, boiled potatoes, little scraps of meat. Supply them with fresh water twice a day. All this, if you want fine healthy birds.

All French draught horses are Norman horses, from whatever province in France they may come. There are different tribes or families in the different provinces, all tracing in their origin to the ancient Norman war horse. The Percheron, the Boulonnais and other tribes have their admirers, and are there called by their local names, but the National Normon Horse Association, comprising nine-tenths of all the importers of French draught horses in America, recognizes them all as Norman.

Growing strawberry plants need a generous supply of water, says the American Garden. From the day when the first blossoms appear until the well-developed fruit is ready to be plucked, the soil where strawberry vines stand should be kept very moist. The crop of fruit is often damaged seriously by one or two days of hot and dry weather when the plants are in blossom, or soon after the berries begin to grow. Those who succeed in producing mammoth berries use manure unstinted and keep the soil moist.

A correspondent of the Pacific Rural Press gives the following "bill of fare" for poultry: Feed soft feed in the morning, cornmeal and bran half and half; now and then boil up some potatoes, mixing bran and meal with them, and feed before cold; stale bread is also good for little chicks. At noon, more soft feed with a little soaked wheat or other grain. At night feed grain. A mixture that I like for grown fowls is one-fourth wheat, one-fourth oats and one-fourth barley; for the other one-fourth mix buckwheat and corn equally. Feed but little corn.

Oleomargarine, under the microscope, is seen to be made up largely of feathery crystals. These are the fatty substances from which it is made, and the appearance is very similar to that of lard. Pure butter presents a cloudy appearance showing no crystals, the fat being in homogeneous state and not crystalized. When pure butter is adulterated by mixing with oleomargarine the crystals will not be too thick, but can be plainly seen under the microscope. But terine has no crystals, because they are dissolved by the oils which it is largely composed, but it melts much more easily than butter. If melted pure butter at once makes known its presence by its odor.

Ginseng is grown, to some extent, about Murphy, Cherokee, County, North Carolina, where, by last reports, it fetched from 25 to 27 cents per pound, green and unwashed. That grown in the United States is of interest only as an article of export to China, where it is supposed to possess remarkable virtues in nearly all diseases. Its merits are supposed to be imaginary. It is chewed by some people here, but is not used in medicine except as a demulcent. In China the price of the prepared root varies from $6 to $12 an ounce, and some kinds are reported to have been sold for the enormous sum of $300 to $400 an ounce.

The appearance of the farm buildings adds much to the attractions and value of a farm. Whitwash covers many imperfections and gives an air of neatness. System, cleanliness and every part of the building kept in repair makes an old farm look new.

The Country Gentleman prints a list of fifty-two Holstein cows which have milk records of 70 pounds per day, and 10,000 pounds or over in a year, and also gives the names of eighteen that have records of 80 pounds per day, or 15,000 pounds in a year. This does not pretend to include all which might be comprised in the list.

A wholesome cellar is at the bottom of healthy living. One reason is that the air and floating germs of the cellar find their way to every room in the house. Many of our most destructive diseases are supposed to be caused by minute germs floating in the air and finding lodgment and congenial home in the animal system, their development causing disease. Mildewed cellars and mouldy closets are nurseries of disease. Even in their dry form the spores of these low forms of life often cause serious sickness. The worst attack of catarrh I ever had was caused by inhaling the dust arising from overhauling a pile of mouldy rubbish.

Cutting Timothy.

New York Herald.—The following method is that of an educated Indiana farmer: Timothy unquestionably makes much the best hay for all classes of stock when well cured, which is more easily accomplished than with any other grass, but which is not always done by any means, and yet is as worthless as need be when cut at an unseasonable time or handled in an unintelligent manner. My rule for cutting timothy is, when it is in its very best state, if possible, and that is when the major part of the field is in bloom. Some of the seeds were then in milk, and most of them, perhaps, before I was through, for I never cut my grass, wet or dry, before I was ready, as some do. But my rule is to begin the first fair day after I think the gluten, starch and sugar are most abundant in the stalks and leaves, and hurry on the work as fast as possible during the dry weather, and while there is plenty of sunshine. I neve cut grass for hay when it is wet from much dew or even a very little rain. Only a careful observation of the weather is needed generally to secure the crop in good condition. During the summer season two or three days of cloudy or rainy weather usually followed by about the same number of good, or fairly good, hay-curing weather, alternating in that manner through the season, except in seasons of severe drought or excessive rains. I never pay attention to the signs in the moon or the weather prophets. I once bought a barometer, but it was too slow and uncertain in coming to conclusions to suit me. They are poor property for the average farmer, and scarcely as reliable as the rheumatic is. All things being ready and the weather favorable, I start the mower as soon as the dew is off in the morning and push it for all that is in it for five or six hours, if the weather continues favorable, or until the rake starts, which must be in time to take up all that is cut, with men following the windrows with forks, cocking up in good shape as fast as raked, leaving no uncocked hay at sundown in the meadow.

Savings Banks.

A wise man shows his wisdom by saving the money he has made. Young men are often tempted to ignore the fact that "many a little makes a mickle," and that the best way to accumulate small sums is to put them as fast as they come along, into the savings-bank. The editor of the New York Christian Advocate gives this excellent advice to young men:

As fast as five dollars accumulated for which you have no immediate use, put the amount into the savings-bank. If an unexpected necessity for money arises, make every possible effort to economize to meet it without drawing anything out of the bank. Keep yourself poor by the promptitude of your deposits of what you get in a savings-bank.

It is true the interest on five dollars at five per cent. is only a quarter of a dollar a year. But the interest on ten deposits of five dollars each is two dollars and fifty cents; and the interest on a hundred deposits of five dollars is twenty-five dollars.

As for the savings-banks select the oldest and best when the oldest is confessedly the best. Do not jeopard your money by depositing it in a bank which undertakes to pay more than the oldest and safest of banks.

That you may, without the trouble of calculating, form some idea of how money will accumulate in a savings-bank, let me state that $1,000 (which is taken for convenience) at five per cent., will, in ten years, amount to $1,628 89; in twenty years to $2,653 29; in thirty years to $4,321 94; and even at four per cent., $1,000 will, in twenty years, double itself and $191 12 more.

But after you have reached a thousand dollars, which may take you some years or some months, according to your station, a new opportunity comes to you.

You can loan upon bond or mortgage at five or six, or, in some of the states, at seven per cent., under circumstances which will secure you as absolutely as any bank, or as certainly as anything in the world can.

When the security is ample, the title perfect, the documents properly drawn, let the young man proceed again to deposit the interest, as promptly as it is paid to him, in the savings-bank.

In process of time he will accumulate a similar sum, which, if he may consolidate with the first amount, and take a larger mortage, or, if he prefer, may take a small mortgage again upon similar property.

I knew a book-keeper in Philadelphia, who lived well, never had a salary of more than $2,500 per annum, married when he was thirty-three, never went into business for himself, and by the time he was fifty-five years of age was worth more than $50,000, the accumulations of interest and savings.

It is necessary for me to say that without care—great and painstaking care—money may be loaned where there is a defective title, hidden mortgages, unproductive property, disproportionate security, and where the interest will not be promptly paid.

It would be well to leave the money in the savings-bank until what the business man calls a "gilt-edged" opportunity to invest the funds appears.

Dairy Hints.

Some milk producers object to turnips and other roots as a ration for dairy cows on the ground that they taint the butter. This is true, if fed in large quantities. But these same men will allow their cows to drink all summer out of filthy, slow-running brooks or muddy sloughs, or clay-laden streams. No one likes a turnip flavor in butter, but it is not as bad as that of the stable or of a foul brook. As 87 per cent of milk is water, and that no water is taken into the system of the cow with her food and drink, it is apparent that pure drinking water is as desirable as good food. Next to plenty of good pasturage during the next three months is plenty of pure fresh water, and every dairy farmer who has no spring which supplies his pasture should provide a well, and if possible a wind-mill, if the well is deep. It is not advisable to give grain during the flush grass period, but as soon as drought and dry pastures begin to lessen the flow of milk, supply fodder corn or grain. The flow of milk once lost is not easily restored. It is generally understood that if turnips are fed only directly after or soon after during the milking, they will little affect the flavor of the next milking. Beets seldom affect the milk except favorably.—Chicago Prairie Farmer.

The improvement of the understanding is for two ends. First our own increase of knowledge; secondly, to enable us to deliver and make out that knowledge to others.—Locke.

A CONSOLATION.

A certain man, to dissipate
The heat and other cares,
Essayed to draw some cider kept
Beneath his cellar stairs.

Before he started down, his wife
To him a pitcher handed;
But tripping up he tumbled down,
And at the bottom landed.

"My dear, the pitcher did you break?"
Came down stairs sharp and shrill;
Then crushing down his wrath, he cried:
"No,——it, but I will!"

The pitcher which, indeed, escaped
Uninjured by the fall,
He hurled with all his strength and smashed
Against the cellar wall.

WANTED A WIFE.

A College Tale.

Jack Hornby, of Brazenface College, Oxford, had just finished his usual after-breakfast pipe, on the last day of the summer term, 1880, when his attention was arrested by a sharp rap at his door, immediately followed by the entrance of the well-dressed person of his college friend, Methven.

"Come along in," said Hornby, "and light yourself a pipe."

"No, thank ye, can't stop," replied Methven, "as I have a lot to do this morning; but I thought I would run across and tell you a bit of news. I have just arranged a glorious hoax, at the expense, I need hardly say, of old Crofton; he has become to 'cute' lately to be caught by our old time-honored jokes, and so I have arranged the following plan: A week ago I inserted in the agony column of the Morning Advertiser a glowing matrimonial advertisement, in which I stated that the advertiser, who was handsome and rich, and all that sort of thing, desired to meet with a pretty and accomplished girl with a view to matrimony. All applicants were to send their photographs; the replies to be sent to H. C., No, 151 St. Giles', Oxford—that's the house where my scout lives, and so, of course I told him to bring me any letters thus addressed. I got no reply for a day or so, but four days ago I received a letter from a certain damsel who described herself as young, handsome and accomplished, inclosed me the photograph of a very pretty girl, ended by asking me when and where I should meet her in town, and signed herself Miss L. Bernard, Piccadilly Circus Postoffice; she also expressed a desire to have the advertisers photograph, so I promptly sent her that of old Crofton, which he had lately given me, and said I would write to-night when and where I should meet her; so my scheme is, to somehow induce Crofton to meet this girl; she will of course recognize him by the photograph I have sent, will probably rush into his arms, and the kangaroo will be utterly overpowered, and there will be an interesting denouement. Now, Hornby, don't you think that a magnificent piece of strategy?"

"No, indeed I don't," said Hornby, I think it an infernal shame; and, what's more, I have half a mind to go and tell the kangaroo of the hoax."

"Oh, come now," said Methven, "you'd never do that, Jack, I know. Well, I can't stay any longer, so good-by for the present."

There is not the very slightest doubt that if the fates had not intervened, Horndy would have gone straight to Crofton and warned him of the impending hoax, and this story would never have been written; but, as it happened no sooner had Methven gone out of Horney's rooms than in rushed the secretary of the College Cricket Club in a state of breathless anxiety; there was a match at 11.30, it was now 11 o'clock, and he could only get together eight men. So Hornby was promptly enlisted, and by the time the match was over Methven and his scheme had entirely faded from his not to retentive memory. Methven, in the meantime, had gone straight to Crofton's rooms. Now this Crofton, who was about to fall a victim to Methven's wiles, was the son of a large Australian sheep farmer, and had come up to Brazenface the previous October. Like most colonists who have not been to school in England, he was very simple and unsophisticated; and though the kangaroo, as he was generally called, was very popular, he was constantly being made the victim of some practical jokes, most of which were originated by Methven, who was the professional hoaxer of Brazenface. He always forgave them heartily, and joined in the laugh himself. However, his one year's residence in college had opened his eyes a little, and, being naturally anything but a fool, his friends found it not quite so easy to take him in now as it used to be, and several attempts having lately failed, Methven, to sustain his dwindling reputation as a joker, had concocted the plan he had disclosed to Hornby. He found the genial giant busily packing his traps ready for going down the next day. After chatting a moment the tempter began:

As you are going to town to-morrow, I want you to do me a little favor. I promised to meet a girl, a cousin of mine, to-morrow. We had each got an order for the house of commons, and I was to have escorted her, and as we meant to have a little lunch together at Lucas' before we went in, we had arranged to meet at a quarter past 2 at the Westminister Bridge landing pier, that being a place where we couldn't possibly miss one another. Now, as bad luck will have it the man has sent for me to see him after collections, so that I can't get up to town in time. Unfortunately, I can't let the girl know, because she's away on a visit for a day or two, to some friends, whose address I have forgotten, and she won't return home till after she's been to the house. Now, I don't want the poor child to wait an hour for me, so would you mind going there about 2:15 and tell her I can't come because of that beastly Dean? And so that you can't mistake her, I've brought you her photograph. By-the-by, her name's Miss Bernard. Now, will this be too much trouble for you?"

"Oh, not a bit," said Crofton, "I shall be delighted."

"Well, remember, Westminster landing pier, at a quarter past 2. And now, good-by, [illegible]."

Methven, highly elated with the result of his scheme, immediately wrote a note to Miss L. Bernard that "H. C. would meet her at the Westminster bridge pier at a quarter past two punctually, and that she must come up and speak to him if she saw him first."

The next morning Crofton, having undergone that dread ordeal called "collections" [illegible] by the principal, the dean, the senior tutor, hurried off to the station and just managed to catch the midday express to town. On his arrival, leaving his traps at a hotel, he rushed off to Westminster bridge landing pier, and arrived there within a minute or two of the appointed time. There were but few people on it when he arrived, and certainly no one resembling in the slightest degree the photograph of Mr. Methven's cousin. He looked up and down, but no—there was only one young lady there; and she wasn't in the least like the photograph. She was standing close to the ticket office, holding the hand of a little boy of 10 or so, and she seemed to watch Crofton with an amused smile as he impatiently walked up and down, looking now at her watch and now at the Parliament clock tower. The little boy, in the meantime, getting tired of waiting, had slipped away under the protecting chains round the side and began to play with a little dog that was vaguely roaming about. The young lady did not miss him, and when Crofton happened to turn he saw the child, in trying to avoid a sudden bound of the dog, scramble and fall over the pier into the river. The child yelled, the girl shrieked, and the dog barked for sympathy, but Crofton, who fortunately had plenty of presence of mind and was a good, strong swimmer, dived quickly into the water, caught up the child in a couple of strokes, and in a very short time had restored his dripping burden to the young lady. She was of course most greatful to him for having saved the life of her little brother (for so the child turned out to be), and, as Crofton put them in a cab, she asked him to call on them at home and give her parents an opportunity of personally thanking him. Crofton at first pooh-poohed the idea of being thus made a hero of, but there was a pleading look in her pretty eyes which quite overcame his scruples; and having ascertained that her father was a Mr. West, and lived at No. 136 Cavendish square, he promised to call there the following afternoon. And as there was still no sign of Miss Barnard, and as he was dripping wet, he hailed a passing cab and returned to his hotel.

The next day according to his promise, he called at No. 136 Cavendish square, and was received most kindly by Miss West, his acquaintance of yesterday, and her mother, an old lady, who thanked him most volubly for having saved dear Bertie's life, who, she added, was none the worse for the ducking, and was at that moment in bed, with a mustard plaster on his chest and a basin of gruel by his side (probably thinking the drowning would have been infinitely preferable to the doctoring.)

Of course Crofton was invited to stay to dinner, so as to meet Mr. West, who did not return from business till after 6. About that time he arrived, and a fine cheery fellow he was, and right heartily did he welcome his new acquaintance. After dinner, as he and Harry were discussing a bottle of '34 port, Wr. West found out from the simple-hearted fellow that he was a native of Australia, and that, though he was happy enough during term-time with his college chums, he found it very dull during the vacation, having but few relations and friends in the old country; and so Mr. West, liking the honest, manly lad, and feeling, of course, intensely grateful to him for having saved his child from drowning, invited him to spend a month with him at his shooting in Scotland. Crofton, being passionately devoted to sport, snapped at the offer; and so it was arranged that he should go up to Mr. West's shooting lodge, in Cromarty, on the 11th of August. To this day he swears that the month he spent at Balbriggan Lodge was the happiest time of his life—good sport, nice men in the house, and, ah! far best of all, the society of Lilian West. At first it struck him that she looked upon him for some reason or other as rather a puppy, which considerably surprised him, for whatever his faults might be, conceit was certainly not one of them. But as time went on, and she had plenty of opportunity of seeing what a modest, sterling fellow he was (besides being the best shot of the party) the feeling seemed to pass away and soon gave place to a sincere regard. Sunday afternoon rambles through the heather, cozy chats in the gloaming after dinner, lessons; in the mysteries of "gobang" and chess have brought less susceptible hearts than those of Harry Grofton and Lilian West, and the day defore he was returning to England he plucked up courage, proposed, and to his delight was accepted. The next morning, however, just before starting home, Lilian came up to him and said:

"Harry, dear, before you go I want you to forgive me for the silly joke I played you about that advertisement."

"Advertisement!" said he, "what advertisement?"

"Why, the one, of course, you put in the Morning Advertiser."

Crofton looked very mystified, and again shook his head.

"Oh, come now, Harry," replied Lilian, "it is not a bit of use your trying to deceive me; do you mean to say you didn't put the advertisement in the Morning Advertiser?" and so saying she drew from her card-case a small newspaper cutting and handed it to Crofton. It ran as follows:

Wanted a Wife.—The advertiser who is strikingly handsome, very accomplished, and extremely rich, wishes to meet with a young lady with a view to matrimony. She must be good-looking, amiable, and accomplished. Applicants must forward their photograph and address.—H. O., 151 St. Giles,' Oxford.

"Never saw it before in my life," said Crofton.

"And you never wrote this?" continued Miss West, handing the letter from H. C. to Miss L. Bernard, appointing the place and time of meeting.

"Most certainly not; it's not a bit like my handwriting. Could'nt write so well if I tried for a month."

"Well, Harry, you must at least own that this is your photograph."

"Good gracious, yes!" replied Crofton; "that's mine, sure enough; but who on earth could have sent it, and why to you of all people!"

"Oh," said Lilian, "I'm afraid you will think me very silly, but when I [illegible] very curious, Harry, and you'll soon find out—to see the human being who could be so consummately conceited as to answer an advertisement like that; and so I replied to it [illegible] postoffice at Piccadilly Circus, and signing myself by a fictitious name. I also sent the photograph and letter [illegible] the photograph and letter you have just seen. So, with Bertie as my companion, I went [illegible] mistake me for the original of Parker's photograph, I went to the Westminister landing pier at the appointed time. Imagine my delight, then, when I saw you, the original of the photograph, stalking up and down the pier, apparently awaiting the faithless damsel. But, Harry dear, if you did not go to meet me, why in the world did you go to the pier at that very time?"

"I went on a commission," said he, "for a college friend named Methven."

"What! Mr. Methven, of Brazenface!" said she.

"Why, yes; is he a friend of yours?"

Oh, I only met him when staying in the country last Christmas; and I think, Harry, he liked me better than I did him."

"Well," continued Crofton, "I went there to meet a cousin of his, and to give her a message from him, but I have a shrewd idea this is one of his practical jokes he is always playing."

"But, tell me, how were you to know this young lady, Harry?" said Lilian.

"He showed me a photograph by which I was to recognize her."

"Was it that of a pretty girl with a large hat and feather, and a fan in her hand?" said Lilian, with a smile.

"The very same," said Crofton.

"Then, Harry, you are quite right, it was a practical joke, for that was Parker's photograph which I sent to the mysterious Mr. H. C. And, now Harry, dear, it's not a bit use getting angry, for we were both 'sold' a little, and it has ended very happily for you and me; and so we will make a promise not to chaff one another in the future for the parts we each played in the strange little 'Comedy of Errors.'"

I need hardly say Crofton sealed the bargain with a kiss.

When Harry next returned to Brazenface the October term had begun. Port Meadow was flooded, the elms outside St. John's were rapidly losing their leaves, and the creeper on St. Mary's porch was in all the glory of its autumn foliage. Crofton arrived, first day of term, just in time for "hall," and as he was finishing his dinner, the scout who waited on the third-year table handed him the following brief epistle, scrawled on the back of the dinner bill:

Dear Kangaroo: Come to my rooms directly after "hall." Yours ever, J. Hornby.

So after "hall," Crofton went straight to Hornby's rooms, and found him uncorking a bottle of college port; and over this bottle, soothed by the fragrant weed, Harry Crofton told Hornby the story of his love, the whole tale—how it happened, and what a very lucky dog he was. He had just finished his narrative, when a knock came at the door and in walked Methven, just arrived.

"How d'ye do, Jack? Hillo, Kangaroo, how are you old chap?" he began.

But, somehow, the look on Crofton's face Methvan had never seen before, and what's more, didn't like it.

However, he continued, "Well, did you meet my cousin, eh? Come, come, old chap, you must really forgive me, it was a beastly shame, I own,"

"Now, look here," said Crofton, quietly—and there was an ugly look in his eyes and a firmness in his jaw that made Methven unconsciously creep near the door—"I don't wan't to have a row with any man, much less in Jack Hornby's rooms. But I tell you plainly, I think it was awfuly low of you to take advantage of my good nature in the way you did—I strongly advise you for the future, if you like a whole skin, not to try the game on again. I may tell you, your scheme entirely failed, and it's entirely through your attempt at a hoax I have become engaged to the nicest little girl in England."

"Really," said Methven with a sneer, "then I think the least you can do is to introduce us, as she may possibly like to make the acquaintance of the unconscious author of her happiness."

"Perhaps she might," replied Crofton quietly, "if she hadn't unfortunately made it before. Good-night, Jack," and so saying he left the room.

"There, Methven!" said Hornby, "I knew quite well some row would come out of this hoax of yours!"

"Well, tell me what happened, Jack, if you know."

Thereupon Hornby told the whole story from beginning to end. When he had finished Methven said:

"I wonder who the girl was, and when and where she met me."

"Of course I can't tell you the latter," said Hornby, as he walked up to the chimney-piece to refill his pipe, "but her name, if I remember rightly, is Miss Lilian West."

Hornby heard a sharp groan, and on looking round, saw Methven as white as a sheet, with his head buried in his hands.

"Good God, man, what's up?" cried Hornby.

"Oh, Jack," said Methven, "that's the very girl I loved myself. I met her last Christmas in the country, and I would have sold my very soul for her. And now," he continued with a sob, "and now she's lost forever." With these words he walked out, leaving Hornby to ponder deeply on the strange irony of fate.

Two years have rolled on, Lilian West is now the wife of Henry Crofton, B. A., of Brazenface college, Oxford. And Methven has long since come to the conclusion that there are safer modes of playing practical jokes on one's friends than by inserting in the papers fictitious matrimonial advertisements.—J. Randall, in Time.

"What is a sage?" "A sage, my son is a wise man who knows exactly when to buy or sell stocks. We bury about a dozen per month in this country, but the supply still equals the demand." "What is a successful financier?" "Why, the man who scoops $3,000,000 out of the bank he runs, and drops the sugar in Wall street." "What is a philosopher?" "He is a chap who loses his wife's money in buying silver stock, but increases his own by taking a deal in pork." "What is a financial prophet?" "He is a gentleman who states to an interviewer on Wednesday that the times are prosperous and business solid, and on Thursday fails for $7,000,000 or $8,000,000."—Wall Street News.

A Prominent philadelphia insurance man said to a reporter: "It is surprising how few people would insure their lives unless induced to do so by agents or solicitors. [illegible] of the number of policies annually issued by life insurance companies are unsolicited. In consequence a large portion of the year's premiums have to go to [illegible] commissions to the agents—a very hard working body of men. By the way, it is strange that we cannot buy [illegible] or dabble in stocks, or insure our lives [illegible] to do it for us."

Another Railway King Gone.

From the Philadelphia Bulletin.

The cable brings the news of the death of Dr. Strousberg, the former German railway king. His career was a remarkable one, resembling that of many great speculators, both European and American, but still especially fitted to point a moral, if not to adorn a tale. It may be doubted, however, whether he was guilty of the dishonesty with which he was charged when, nearly 10 years ago, all the vast enterprises and schemes that he had been carrying on his shoulders collapsed. He was by birth an east Prussian Jew. But in his youth he left Neidenburg, his native town, and settled in England, where he was baptized as a Christian. Although occupied in business he found time for considerable literary work; he conducted the Merchant's magazine and Sharpe's London magazine, from both of which he made money, but the chief source of his wealth was his insurance agency. Having got a fortune and having presumably learned the more enterprising commercial methods of the English, he returned to Germany about 20 years ago, to apply both his fortune and his experience upon his countrymen, who are proverbially slow in business matters. He soon astonished the plodding Germans by the vastness of his projects. He undertook what seemed—and proved—two much for a single man to achieve; but for several years, as contractor, railway projector and financier his success was equal to his expectations. Not only in Germany but also in Russia, his power was felt.

Unfortunately, Dr. Strousberg did not count upon the effect which the political aspirations of Count Bismarck might produce upon his ventures; and when the Prussian statesman deftly succeeded in forcing a war upon France, whatever may have been the benefit Germany derived from that master-stroke of diplomacy and war, Dr. Strousberg was ruined. For some time he managed to keep his head above water, but the German victories caused a fever of financial speculation which, culminating in a panic in 1873, carried off all the unsteady stock gamblers and schemers. Dr. Strousberg had tried to recover his balance by throwing fresh capital after that which was lost; but, when the end came and his affairs were investigated, it was found that he had hypothecated his property several times, and that many of the corporations of which he had been the founder were only bubbles. Two years he staggered under his increasing burden, and then his Russian ventures collapsed also; he was tried for fraud and acquitted, at Moscow, and went into bankruptcy in 1875. Since that time, by small enterprises, he had attempted to wipe out his losses and once more to take a leading position among the daring speculators of Germany; but he has not; so far as is known, been more than moderately successful.

Dr. Strousberg's career suggests the equally dazzling and vicissitous career of George Hudson, the English railway king, who for three years literally held the balance of power in the speculative financial world of Great Britain. For 14 years he sat in parliament, but his bubble burst, and the last years of his life—he died in 1871—he lived upon an annuity derived from the charity of a few friends. But we need not go either to Germany or to England for examples of the ups and downs of the stock gambler's life. Within six months have we not seen Villard and Keene fall? Judging from past experience Jay Gould himself, the acknowledged railway king of the present time, is not free from danger similar to that which overcame Strausberg, Hudson and these others. Every speculator—no matter how gigantic he appears—has a vulnerable spot, which sooner or later is bound to be hit by evil fortune.

Grant's Unfailing Friendship.

Misfortunes, says the Cincinnati Commercial, are certainly crowding fast on Gen. Grant. Right on the head of his Wall street losses, come the sudden death of two old friends, Orville Babcock and Levi Luckey. The general was warmly attached to each of these men, despite the great difference in their traits, and he stuck to them with proverbial devotion, through thick and thin. No amount of calumny could shake his trust in Babcock any more than he would listen months ago to friendly warnings about Ferdinand Ward. Babcock during the halycon days of cash in the District of Columbia, made the most of his opportunities, and by keen collusion with the men uppermost, he became possessed of real estate which rapidly enhanced in value. Then, too, he was fortunate in other investments, and must have left a handsome provision for his poor wife and five interesting children. His friend Luckey, who went down with him in the waters of Mosquito Inlet, afforded a strong contract to the worldly shrewdness of Babcock. Naturally many opportunities for improving the size of his pocket-book must have happened his way during the long time Luckey held the prominent post of private secretary to Grant, but there never was any evidence that the aforesaid pocket-book was the least affected by its new surroundings. Luckey might easily have bettered himself by perfectly legitimate means, but he lacked the trained insight and foresight for the purpose. In all such matters he was literary nature's own, candid, honest, unselfish and utterly devoid of all talent for plot. Sniffin, who succeeded him, was much the same. When Grant was about to retire, and made his faithful secretary a paymaster in the army, with a fat life tenure, Sniffin told me that he had to sell $300 in government bonds all he had saved from his White House salary, to get a regimental outfit for his new position.

Gov. Glick of Kansas has pardoned six saloonkeepers who were convicted of violation of the prohibition law at Salina, who are serving sentences. He says, in his letter notifying the attorneys for the defendants, that the pardons have been issued that the evidence submitted to him points clearly that the juries were unfair and organized by the prohibition element, with the aid of the judge to prevent a fair, honest and impartial trial, and to secure conviction.

Cuba's entire sugar crop this year will not be sufficient to pay the government taxation [illegible]. The most liberal estimates place the crop at 450,000 tons, which would yield but $34,750,000, while the tax amount to $30,000,000.

FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE.

For the Cook.

COOKIES.—Two cups of sour cream, one teaspoonful of soda, three cups sugar, four eggs, one cup of butter. Very nice without eggs.

GOOD DOUHNUTS.—Four eggs, three cups of sour cream, one nutmeg, two teaspoonfuls of soda.

FRUIT CAKE.—Four eggs, five cups of flour, one and one-half cup of butter, two cups of sugar, one of molasses, one cup of sweet milk, one teaspoonful of soda. Spice and fruit to suit the taste.

NEW CARROTS.—Scrape and trim a quantity of new carrots and boil until tender, in salted water. Then drain add a piece of butter, a dash of pepper, some minced parsely and a cup of rich milk (thin cream if you have it.) Serve with pickles or slices of lemon.

STRAWBERRY JELLY. Crush the fruit and strain through a flannel bag. To each pint of juice, allow one pound of white sugar. Boil ten minutes, skim and strain into hot jelly glasses, stand in the sun, protected from insects, the sunny part of two days, then paste paper over the tops.

CANNED STRAWBERRIES. Fill glass cans full with fresh, whole strawberries, sprinkle with sugar, in the proportion of half a pound to each can. Put the tops on, and place in a boiler of cold water (something should be put on the bottom of the boiler to protect the glass), which should come within two inches of the top of the can. When the water boils, note the time and let boil 20 minutes. Take out the cans, stand on a piece of dry cloth, and screw down the tops. As they cool turn down until perfectly air-tight.

Farming Paragraphs.

The mountain ash, it is said, makes a good stock on which to bud the quince, for culture on very light, sandy soils. Raise from seed and bud when two years old.

Have you made any provision for giving the cows, during the droughts of August and September, a daily ration of some green food. It will add fifty per cent. to their yield of milk, and 100 per cent. to their comfort. Remember, a cow is but a machine; she can only manufacture, and cannot originate; so if you want butter and milk you must supply the raw material—good food. It is not too late to sow a piece of corn for this purpose.

There is not only comfort in having plenty of fruit, but there is health as well. The yearning of the system on these hot days for those juicy, refreshing fruits, is but the voice of Nature asking for a supply of the acids contained in them, to enable her to overcome the evil effects of last winter's severe cold, and no one can afford to disregard it. If you have not plenty of all kinds of fruit in its season, neglect the matter no longer; but set apart a generous plot of ground, and set about preparing it for next spring's planting.

Vaces, hanging baskets, and window boxes may have the plants set closely together without harm, because the air and light have free access to them. But when many plants are thus brought into a small space, the soil needs to be decidedly rich, or else it will soon become exhausted detrimentally.

The Norway and other spruces, firs, hemlocks and arbor vitæ, thrive under the free use of the pruning-knife and shears, and their shapes may often be much improved by the means. Now is a good time to prune, while the young growth may be clipped without fear at any time during the summer. To get a dense, pyramidal form, starting at the ground, the lower branches should be kept the longest. An evergreen pruned to have a bare trunk is a poor object.

Cucumbers.

This crop may be put in at any time, either in June or July, as the vines grow fast and bear early. The Long green varieties are best, but there is a kind called the Jersey pickle, which suits better for those that are intended for the salt barrel. The Gherkin should not be overlooked, as it is one of the best for pickling, though unsuitable for the table. The bugs are very destructive to the vines at times, but a solution of soap and water, with a small proportion of kerosene, will do much in the way of preventing their attacks. Sow the seed often, so as to have them coming in frequently, as they are worthless when ripe. As they are picked green it is an easy matter to have them continuously till fall.

Beautifying the Complexion.

Complexions differ very much with the climate. The English have, beyond a doubt, the most beautiful complexion's in the world. American girls possess more beauty of feature, perhaps, but their complexions are not nearly so fine. As one goes farther south, toward the equator, one sees darker skins and darker hair and eyes, for all these physical characteristics have reference to climate influences. Upon two things the condition of the skin depends—oil and coloring matter. The skin of a very old man or woman, for want of oil, becomes like wrinkled, dried-up parchment; an albino has scarcely any coloring matter in the hair, eyes or complexion. To finish I will give you a recipe for beautifying the complexion—the one used by the dames of ancient Rome. Probably it is familiar to many, but there may be others who have read of it. These ladies made a stiff paste of rye flour and covered their faces with it on retiring. In the morning they washed it off with milk (they never used water) and applied a little powder, if it was deemed necessary. This, we are told, [illegible] either in ancient or modern times. The rye flour is said to draw from the skin any marks that may have lingered on it. More [illegible] effect which the milk helps to produce. Several Parisian belles adopt this plan, and it is rumored that the Empress Eugenie tried it. At all events the ladies who are known to have followed the recipe of the Romans are [illegible] been celebrated for their lovely skins.

In spite of the opinion of the clover druggist, this is doubtless very efficacious in softening and bleaching the skin.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Some Points About the Management of Young Children in Hot Weather.

Philadelphia Times.

There are three sources from which harm to the children may be anticipated during the coming three months. These are the process of teething, indigestion and the heat. An account of the troubles incident to these circumstances would now be seasonable and possibly interesting to many. At all events, these matters are standard topics of conversation among mothers, evidence that they at least know of the gravity of the troubles in question.

Although the thermometer is not exactly indispensable where there are young children, yet it is a great convenience, for until the external temperature rises to about ninety degrees little trouble may be expected from the heat. Troubles due to the cause just named are best combated by frequent sponging of the face, arms, hands and feet with simple cool water. Children that are so treated will be much less liable to be affected injuriously by the heat and other matters now to be spoken of.

The liability to indigestion increases as the summer heat approaches the maximum point. In the treatment of this trouble the old rule about prevention will be especially useful. At this time the avoidance of fat and heated foods and of unwholesome bread and milk are very important points. The foods most valuable for summer use can be named in short order. Use the most nutritious and digestible substances that can be commanded. Meats baked or boiled use cold. Cold cup custard, rice pudding, cold, good ice-cream, milk and sponge cake are prime articles for summer diet for all, and especially for children who can use food other than milk.

The eruption of the teeth goes on most vigorously during the second year of the child's life, and makes unusual demands on its vital powers. This circumstance accounts for the more serious outlook of all the serious diseases that may occur at this period of the child's life. When a child is teething and appears in great general distress, with perhaps a hot and dry skin, much relief may be afforded allowing an abundance of cold water to drink and by a cool bath, followed by sharp rubbings of all parts of the child's body. But if, on the other hand, the child should be attacked by sudden vomiting and purging, with much apparent weakness and cool skin, medical advice should be had with all speed. while waiting for the coming of the doctor, a drop of the best brandy in hot, sweetened water, should be given by the mouth. Hot spice plasters applied to various parts of the body, notably the stomach, would also be useful.

Preserving Meat.

A correspondent of the Prairie Farmer gives the following method of preserving fresh meat: "In the first place we have as many lard or pork barrels as will be necessary to hold a supply of meat for the family. These barrels are clean, sweet, and tight, one end taken out. They are arranged on a bench in the cellar, one end up. The pigs are killed and cooled in the usual way. When the animal heat is all out, they are cut up, cutting off the sausage and the lard, the lard cut up ready to be rendered out. The shoulders and sides are then cut up into such sized pieces as may be convenient for table use. These pieces are washed cleanly, and boiled in large kettles, seasoned with salt and pepper to make palatable, and when sufficiently boiled for table use they are placed in a barrel closely together, but not pressed or mashed, thus leaving each piece as near in the shape cut as possible. When the barrel is filled within two inches of the top, we then pour in warm lard until all the crevices between the pieces of meat are filled up, covering the top with one or two inches of the warm lard. Next day we find that the lard has settled down; we fill up again to the top and keep filled until all has become a solid mass of meat and lard. This is the whole secret. You can fill any tight vessel, from a one-gallon jar to a forty-five gallon barrel in like manner, and if properly done, and kept in a cool place, the meat will keep fresh and sweet the year round."

Farming in the New Northwest.

Mr. J. W. Boxell, of Valley Creek, Washington county, Minnesota, who is an experienced and successful farmer, writes to the New York Tribune: The other day an honest Swede woman said to me: "This is a happy country; everybody has enough to eat." It is a happy country. This is the oldest and most thickly settled part of Minnesota. Society is mixed; there are several nationalities. Many have small farms; not all are rich; but poverty is unknown. All have warm houses, warm clothing, and enough to eat. The climate compels thrift. Meat is eaten every meal as a rule. Potatoes are on the table at breakfast, dinner and supper and wheat bread always, and coffee or tea. I speak especially, of the least rich. The children go to school warmly and decently dressed without exception.

I have been thirty years, engaged in farming, gardening and fruit-growing. I came from latitude 40; this is near the 45th parallel. Everybody knows we raise wheat, and have cold winters. Some other things are not so well known, perhaps I know men north of Minneapolis, each of whom plants from ten to fifteen acres of watermelons every year. I could give quite a list of men near St. Paul, every one of whom raises and markets tons of grapes every year—Concords, Delawares and many other varieties. I have sold over $1,000 worth of raspberries in a single season. My crop of this fruit has never failed but once; then the winter was too open. I have sold apples every year for ten years. [illegible] the "iron-clad" varieties, Duchess of Oldenburg and Wealthy ranking first.

Corn is an important crop here, and we raise dent exclusively for a field crop. The past season, owing to the cool summer and early frost, the corn crop was a failure. The man who broke the first prairie in Minnesota never knew anything like it. He is my neighbor, and lives [illegible]. The average temperature for the summer months for the past thirty-five years was 70.6 degrees. I have raised and marketed sweet potatoes of fair quality, and in considerable quantities. I have raised well-ripened peanuts; several bushels, I did not raise them for profit. Tomatoes were not at all killed by the frost of last September. They sold at twenty-five cents a bushel, retail, in the St. Paul market till the first of October. I generally have tomatoes in abundance till the middle of October, or later.

I nearly always plant my first sweet corn the last week in April. I have planted it earlier; and I never had good seed to rot in the ground, and never had it seriously injured by frost but once, and then it came on and made a moderate crop. I have sold sweet corn by the wagon load from the 9th to the middle of July; and in October. I have had green corn for the table July 4, and summer squashes, also, from seed planted in the open ground. Last year, luckily, I had no sorghum. I raised it five years in succession, on the same ground, without manure, and never had it injured by frost. The blades were killed once or twice before I cut it, but no harm was done. The syrup and seed always paid me. My best crop was 216 gallons of good syrup from exactly one acre. I have mentioned a few of the products of more southern regions that do well here.

Dakota is our younger sister and lies right by the side of Minnesota and extends some further south, but no further north. The great farming regions of Minnesota and the greater part of the vast territory of Dakota are just as near alike as possible, in climate, soil and productions. There are churches in the villages, and there are schoolhouses in the country in which the people have preaching at present, but the man who has the idea of God in his brain will find altars for worship all over the prairie. To me it seems literally a "Garden of the Lord." I cannot describe the feeling of exhilaration and elevation I felt while driving rapidly over the long, rolling swells of boundless prairie. It is not all level, but it is level enough. There are some beautiful streams, and the natural roads are the finest I ever saw.

Do not take a family to Dakota unless you have some money; and do not take a homestead to far from neighbors. Close settlements are best, for society, for schools, and for help in time of sickness and trouble. Don't let winter catch you unprepared for it; it may set in earlier than you expect. The fact that a poor family can get along for a while in a sod house, and with hay for fuel, is a great thing. Many good women have cooked and baked all winter with hay. A large box, full of the rolls, or twists, stands near the stove, and neat people do not have much litter. Some who are able enough to buy coal and wood burn hay to save money. There is a fortune for the man who shall invent a machine for compacting hay and straw into a sort of stove wood.

I know there is some grumbling all over Dakota. They think the price of wheat is lower than it should be. But groceries and other goods are cheap, too. I have heard my father say that after he had settled in the great woods of Muskingum County, Ohio, and had cleared some land there, wheat brought but twenty-five cents per bushel; and I heard mother say that she paid fifty cents a pound for coffee in Zanesville, and fifty cents a yard for calico.

A BETRAYER'S FATE.

A Startling and Tragic Climax of a Scandalous Intimacy.

A dispatch to the New York World gives the following particulars of a tragedy at Pine Grove, Pa.

"A long-standing scandal has just had a startling climax, involving the death of two persons, and the wrecking of two hitherto peaceful and happy homes. The principals in the unfortunate affair were Jabez Graul, a farmer in this village, and Mrs. Joshua Willig, wife of a farmer of large wealth residing a few miles from Pine Valley. Mrs. Willig is a young and handsome woman between 30 and forty years of age, and the mother of four children. Some time ago an intimacy sprang up between Mrs. Willig and Graul, and recently their names were associated in a notorious manner, and the tongue of scandal was kept busy discussing the numerous escapades of the guilty pair.

"Graul availed himself of the absence of Mr. Willig to visit his wife, and although their intercourse was generally talked of as scandalous, Mr. Willig appeared blind to the real condition of affairs and paid no attention to the gossip with which his wife's name was connected. On Wednesday morning he left his home intending to be absent a couple of days, and on the evening of his departure Graul went to Mrs. Willig's, and, despite the remonstrances of the lady's oldest son, he remained there all night.

"Young Willig, finding that his protests were in vain, left his home and spent the night at a neighbors. In the morning Graul and Mrs. Willig were missing, as was also some $7,000 in money belonging to Mr. Willig. When Mr. Willig returned home and learned of the conduct of his wife, he was so shocked and excited that he ruptured a blood vessel, and bled profusely from a hemorrhage of the lungs. He had for some time been in delicate health, and was at once placed under the care of physicians. His son went in search of his mother and found her with Graul at Gorman's Tavern. He demanded that she return to her home and return the $7,000 she had stolen.

"Graul at once attacked young Willig and beat him violently about the face, continuing the assault until Mrs. Willig begged him to desist. As soon as he was released, Willig sprang back a few paces, drew a revolver and fired three shots at Graul, each of which took effect in his body. Willig surrendered himself and was placed under $3,000 bail to await the result of Graul's injuries. During the excitement that followed the shooting Mrs. Willig escaped and has not since been seen by any of her family. Besides the $7,000, Mrs. Willig had in her possession all the title deeds to her husband's property. It is supposed she fled to Baltimore.

"Mrs. Willig married some twenty years ago, and gossip has at intervals been busy with her name, but her husband appeared to have implicit confidence in her. It is reported that Graul is sinking rapidly and can only survive a few hours. The sympathy of the community is with young Willig."

Albert Vandecar, who had been in jail at Waupaca, Wis., eighteen months on suspicion of having murdered H. C. Mead, the banker, was released.

CROOKSTON, - - MINNESOTA.

New York city had a temperature last week of ninety-five degrees, but a fine breeze prevailed during this scorching visitation, so there was not the usual amount of suffering.

The signal service officers predict cyclones to follow the stagnant condition of the atmosphere for a week or two. The signal service theory is that such a shell of stagnation is a precurser of violent disturbances of the atmosphere. Now we shall see what kind of prophets Uncle Sam has in his employ.

The Northwest News of Portland, Ore., brings assurance of a good harvest in that state as follows: "It is safe to say that the crop this fall will be one of the largest ever harvested in this state. With a wheat crop of 18,000,000 bushels, a wool clip of 10,000,000 pounds, a large hop yield and an immense fruit crop, the Pacific northwest will rapidly overcome the effects of the short crop of last year. This is essentially an agricultural community and a good crop of wheat, fruit, wool and hops means good times."

Bismarck in a few words effectually disposes of mischievous rumors that are frequently set afloat. He said in the German parliament: "Our relations with France are as confidential and amicable as with any other country. There exists complete trust in reciprocal treatment and in our mutual honor. I am pleased at having an opportunity for mentioning this fact." About half the matter telegraphed from Europe to American papers comes faom characterless fellows who know they are pandering to the craze for sensational news, and are giving their employers the greatest satisfaction when they can telegraph reports such as Bismarck has taken the trouble to deny.

The farmers of the northwest have reason for gratitude that the killing frosts and drouth which have almost devastated some portions of New England and other States, did not prevail in this section. Though the season was late, yet the recent warm and wet weather has pushed things ahead beyond the most sanguine expectations, and there is a fair prospect that everything will ripen before the usual time for frosts. It has been often remarked that the northwest is more exempt from untimely frosts than sections of country several degrees further south, and this statement is bourne out by the experience of at least a quarter of a century. The northwest now blossoms like the rose, and frosts and drouth have not done any harm this year, as yet.

The provision in the army appropriation bill to relieve soldiers of the regular army from the severe manual labor imposed upon them is a very wise one for the improvement of the standard of soldiership. Is is a matter of fact that at very many of the frontier posts the enlisted men are compelled to work as hard and at very much the same kind of employment as railroad laborers and farm hands, beside performing the sentry duty and other routine occupations of the military service. This is not what they enlist or are paid for, and one inducement for this class of men to accept the meagre pay of soldiers is to escape this severe and continuous labor, while they are very willing to accept the dangers and hardships of the military service.

The late unprecedented rains in California have done great damage to the crops. Hundreds of tons of hay lying in the fields will be a total loss, while thousands of acres of grain are laid flat on the ground. A dispatch from Salinas says: "The rains have been the heaviest ever experienced in the valley in the month of June. Thousands of tons of hay are lying in the fields, a soggy mass, rendered unfit for any purpose. All the heavy barley is down, most of it beyond recovery. Wheat is in the same state. The loss to farmers in this section from these rains will not be less than half a million dollars." Rain at this season in California astounds the oldest inhabitant and all are ready to admit that the theory of a change of climate may have something in it after all.

Worcester, Massachusetts is preparing to celebrate its two hundredth anniversary. A few adventurous men and women had previously braved the dangers of the forest and had made for themselves rude homes in that locality, and in October 1684, the legislature, then known as the "great and general court," lent its countenance to their enterprise and gave to their humble settlement the name of Worcester, a name noted in English history. People residing west of the Mississippi, and especially in the northwest, can hardly realize the interest attached to celebrations of this character in sections of the country that were settled two hundred years ago, or the patient investigation and care exercised to exhume and pre- [illegible]

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Washington News.

Mr. Raymond is still trying to secure the consideration of the Sioux reservation bill before the session closes, and believes he will succeed.

Fifty thousand dollars, with $3,000 accumulated interest, a legacy of the late Charles A. Reed, of Newton, Mass., to the United States toward the payment of the public debt, has just been paid into the subtreasury.

Postoffices established: Dakota—Driscoll, Burleigh county; Sherwood, Clark county. Minnesota—Till, Polk county. Postoffice name changed—Warren Spaulding, Fairmount, late Deville, Dak; John Falde, Jr., late Hughitt, Dak.

During this session 1,246 bills have been introduced in the house of representatives and 2,339 in the senate. Of these only 60 have become laws. About 400 bills are now lying on the speaker's table in the house which have passed the senate there is every prospect that congress will adjourn sometime next week.

Collector Robertson received an anonymus letter Saturday inclosing $500 for duty on smuggled goods. It is the largest sum of this character he has ever received since the day a New York merchant entered his office and personally drew a check for $10,000, at which he said he had unintentionally defrauded the government.

As Gen. Hazen, his wife, and another lady were riding on F street, Washington, the horses took fright in front of the Ebbitt house and became unmanageable. The carriage was overturned and the occupants thrown violently upon the pavement. They escaped with slight injuries. Gen. Hazen suffered a contusion of the head, but not serious.

The majority report sent the House committee on public lands, declaring forfeited certain lands granted the Northern Pacific, is a lengthy document. Its substance is that congress has the power to declare the forfeiture of land, and sound public policy should be exercised in the provision of the bill, upon which the report is made, to apply to that portion of the main line from Wallula, Wash., to Portland, Ore., 214 miles, and that portion of the branch line from Ainsworth to Puget Sound, 180 miles.

Rail and River News.

A construction train of thirteen cars broke through a bridge near Logansport, Ind., killing Engineer Thomas Grace and Fireman William Scott. Two spans of the bridge went down. Loss $30,000.

Casualties of the Week.

James Livingston, who was thrown from a horse at Miles City some time since, died recently. His parents live at Washington.

The breach in the Elk Ridge levee at Union island, Stockton, Cal., is now forty feet wide. Efforts to stop the flow of water are abondoned. Seven hundred acres of wheat will be destroyed.

Crimes and Criminals.

A man giving the name of E. R. Marshall was arrested in Milwaukee while attempting to pass a £50 Bank of England note at the Mercantile Exchange bank.

Lewis Keckley of Oregon suspect of setting fire to his house, and burning a skeleton intending to represent his own remains, so his wife could recover his life insurance, who was arrested at Ashland, feigned to be crazy. He was taken by the Sheriff back to Hillsboro.

As Kate Murphy was walking along the sidewalk in Cincinnati some boy threw a lighted firecracker into her pocket. The firecracker exploded and ignited her clothing. Before the flames were put out she was seriously burned about her lower limbs and hips. She cannot live.

At the house of James Howard, at Pickett's Creek, Ky., Dillard Johnson knocked at the door and when Howard looked out, shot him dead. Johnson then searched the house for Joseph Neal, and found him concealed behind the stove. They both fired at once, and both fell dead without speaking. The trouble was about a notorious woman.

Adolph Dills, a German farmer living in Creek township, Woodbury county, Iowa, seduced the thirteen-year-old daughter of a neighbor named Greap. The girl becoming enceinte, Dills endeavored to have her married to his twelve-year-old son. Failing in this, he took the girl and left; also taking his boy along. Warrants have been sworn out and officers will attempt to capture the runaways, but there is, as yet, no clew to their whereabouts. Dills is an old resident and has a grown-up family.

Personal News Notes.

Allan Pinkerton, the founder of the Pinkerton detective system, is lying at the point of death.

Gen. Horace C. Lee, late postmaster, colonel of the Twenty-seventh Massachusetts regiment in the war, and mustered out as a brevet brigadier general, died in Springfield recently.

Walter Wilson, who left Montreal suddenly on the eve of his wedding and who has since been sojourning in New York, returned, and the marriage will be celebrated privately.

New York, left his fortune to Theodore St. Quinton and Laura Schuyler Wellington, his grand-children, on condition that they married each other, otherwise to the one who was willing to marry. If both declined to marry, the estate was to go to a charitable institution. Young Theodore was willing to marry his pretty cousin, but she positively refused and is earning her own living at service in Boston. St. Quinton advertised to learn Miss Hamilton's whereabouts, with the intention of voluntarily transferring one-half the estate to her. Miss Wellington saw this personal and called at the postoffice for the letter mentioned, and then wrote him a touching letter, thanking him for his generosity. Friends who know both parties now say that it would not be strange if old Mr. Schuyler's wishes would be fulfilled.

There are at present four homes for disabled soldiers—at Dayton, Ohio, Augusta, Me., Milwaukee, Wis., and Hampton, Va.—and the number of inmates is constantly increasing. In 1880 there were 7,003 inmates at the four homes. in 1881 there were 7,476. In 1882 there were 8,147, and in 1883 there were 8,626, and this in spite of the large number of deaths. The homes are all crowded, and cannot accommodate those who apply for admission. The bill for another branch home, which has passed the house, appropriates $250,000 for the erection of a home and requires that the building be commenced within the next six months. It directs the board of managers of soldiers' homes to report upon the advisability of establishing a home upon the Fort Dearborn military reservation in Michigan.

Mr. Henry Rose, a well-known journalist of Hull, England, is engaged in the preparation of a new work on political economy, based on the theories of land reform promulgated by Henry George, and will also write a complete life of the reformer.

London dispatch:—The first death here by cholera occured June 4, but was kept secret. Over fifty deaths have thus far occurred. Fourteen fresh cases of cholera were reported recently. One patient died. The gravity of the symtoms is decreasing. There have been fifty-three cases of cholera so far, of which twenty-two resulted fatally.

There was a lively discussion of Germany's colonial policy in the reichstag in connection with the consideration of the proposed treaty of commerce with Corea, and the bill providing for the subvention of colonial steamship lines. Conservatives and National Liberals spoke in advocacy of the subsidy scheme. The Clerical and New Liberals urged an examination of the details of the measure before making the bill a law. Bismarck resented the reproach which the delay necessary for such examinaiion would imply. He expressed regret that a portion of the house did not place necessary confidence in him.

Crime Lightly Punished.

The jury in the Mount Pulaski murder case returned a verdict of guilty against J. H. Hall and fixed the punishment at penitentiary for life. William Ferris and Mrs. Bell Hall were acquitted. The crime, one of the most barbaric of its class on record, was committed in August, 1882. On the 20th of that month the bodies of Charles McMahon, a wealthy bachelor farmer, and his two hired men, John Carlock and Robert Matheny, were found on Mr. McMahon's farm a few miles east of Mount Pulaski, having been dead several days. McMahon's head was battered almost beyond recognition, and the heads of the others had been nearly severed from their bodies. Matheny was from Hazel Dell, Wis. McMahon was murdered for his money, and his men presumably because they interfered to save him. The two Barber brothers, the desperadoes who were lynched in Iowa in June, 1883, were suspected of complicity in the Mount Pulaski murder.

Punishment of a Brute.

Allen Worth, a dissolute man aged thirty years, living at Baraboo, married a pretty but weak-minded girl of seventeen years, named Ableman, about three weeks ago, and immediately started on a wedding trip down the Northwestern road to Howard, prostituting his bride for pay to railway men along the line. He returned to Baraboo, and at 10 o'clock he was taken from his home by an indignant mob of masked men, making a most desperate resistance, and treated to a coat of tar and feathers, his head and feet alone being spared. He was then hunted from the town like a wild beast, and, stark naked, sought refuge in the wild bluffs surrounding Devil's lake, where he is now in hiding. The affair created intense excitement, but the citizens generally of Baraboo justify the act. Both Worth and wife are well connected, the latter being a niece of Col. Ableman, now deceased, for whom Ableman's Station was named.

Marriage of Tennyson's Son.

London Cable: The marriage of Mr. Hallam Tennyson to Miss Audrey Bayle was solemnized Tuesday the 24th, at Westminster abbey, and proved to be the leading society event of the season. The bridegroom is the eldest son of the poet laureate, Baron Tennyson D'Eyncourt, and was named for his father's earliest and warmest friend, Arthur Hallam, whose untimely death inspired the poem "In Memoriam." The bride is the incarnation of youth, health and beauty, possessing every desirable attribute except a fortune, for she is comparatively portionless. In addition to the poet laureate and scores of other loards, both temporal and spiritual, there were present Premier Gladstone, Minister Lowell, Mr. Henery Irving and a host of other celebrities. The bride was charmingly attired in a robe of ivory colored satin covered with Brussels lace, and a rich bridal veil with pearl and diamond ornaments. There were ten brides-maids uniformly dressed in silk of the palest blue, with India muslin overskirts. The bride received over three hundred presents, including the inevitable Indian shawl which Queen Victoria seems to invariably bestow upon those brides whome her majesty chooses to honor.

Deliberate Murder at Mankato.

Henry Alexander, formerly a cook in the Mankato house, Mankato, Minn., shot Lycurgus Thornton, who was employed as a cook in the same house, Friday evening at 6:30. Alexander was engaged to a white girl employed in the Mankato house as pastry cook, named Maggie Evans. After he left the Mankato house Thornton was employed. He succeeded in supplanting Alexander in the affections of the girl. Last week Thornton married the girl and this evening while he was engaged in cooking meat, Alexander suddenly appeared at the door of the kitchen. Without saying a word, he drew a thirty-eight caliber Smith & Wesson revolver and fired three shots into Thornton, each shot taking effect. Thornton lived about ten minutes after the shooting. Alexander coolly walked out, crossed the street went into a saloon, took two drinks of whisky purchased a cigar, delivered up his revolver to the saloonkeeper, Thomas Dartnell sat down in a chair outside and awaited his arrest, which occurred in a few moments. The following persons were summoned as a jury by Coroner Paddock: Henry Shaubut, H. S. Wood, W. L. Coon, R. H. Rose, W. F. Gorrie and F. M. Brayton. H. M. Hamilton, the proprietor of the Mankato house, Mary Foley, Lena Olsen, Mary Webber and Eliza Fullington testified as to the circumstances of the shooting. Thomas Dartnell, the saloonkeeper, testified in regard to Alexander's delivering up of himself and surrender of his revolver.

REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN NOTES.

June 21 was fixed upon by the committee appointed by the national convention to notify James G. Blaine of his nomination to the presidential candidacy of the Republican party.

Promptly at 11 o'clock the committee proceeded in a body to Mr. Blaine's residence, and were received by Mrs. Blaine. As the day was oppressively hot and the rooms of the mansion crowded almost to suffocation, it was suggested that the presentation be made upon the lawn. Accordingly the committee and guests proceeded to a well-shaded portion of the grounds, where a semicircle was formed and all present stood with uncovered heads, making it an impressive scene. The rustling of the spreading branches of the great elms and the buzzing of insects were the only sounds to disturb the stillness. When all was in readiness Mr. Blaine was escorted to the lawn, where he stood within the arc of the semicircle

CHAIRMAN HENDERSON'S ADDRESS.

Gen. Henderson then stepped forward and presented the address of the committee, reading from manuscript. He spoke as follows:

Mr. Blaine, your nomination for the office of president of the United States by the national Republican convention, recently assembled at Chicago, is already known to you. The gentlemen before you, constituting the committee composed of one member from each state and territory in the country and one from the District of Columbia, have now come as the accredited organ of that convention to give you formal notice of the nomination and to request your acceptance thereof. It is, of course, known to you that beside your own several other names among the most honored in the councils of the Republican party were presented by their friends as candidates for this nomination. Between your friends and the friends of the gentlemen so justly entitled to the respect and confidence of their political associates, the contest was one of generous rivalry, free from any taint of bitterness, and free from reproach or injustice. At an early stage of the proceedings of the convention it became manifest that Republican states, whose aid must be invoked at last to insure success to the ticket, earnestly desired your nomination. It was equally manifest that the desire so earnestly expressed by the delegates from those states was but the fruitful reflection of an irresistable popular demand. It was not thought nor pretended that this demand had its origin in any ambitious desire of your own, or in the organized work of your friends; but it was recognized to be what it truthfully is—the spontaneous expression by a free people of the love and admiration for

THEIR CHOSEN LEADER.

No nomination would have given satisfaction to every member of the party. This is not to be expected in a country so extended in area and so varied in interests. The nomination of Lincoln in 1860 disappointed so many hopes and overthrew so many cherished ambitions that for a short time disaffection threatened to ripen into open revolt. In 1872 the discontent was so pronounced as to impel large masses of the party to organize in opposition to its nominees. For many weeks after the nomination of Garfield in 1880, defeat seemed inevitable. In each case the shock of disappointment was followed by sober second thought, and individual preference gradually yielded to the conviction of public duty. The promptings of patriotism finally rose superior to the irritations and animosities of the hour. The party in every trial has grown stronger in the face of danger. It gives us pleasure to remember those great measures which furnished causes for party congratulation by the late convention at Chicago, and which are now crystallized into the legislation of the country; measures which have strengthened and dignified the nation, and while they have elevated and advanced the people, have at all times and on all proper occasions received your earnest and valuable support. It was your good fortune to aid in protecting the nation against the assaults of armed treason; you were present and helped to unloose the shackels of the slaves. You assisted in placing a new guarantee of freedom in federal institutions. Your voice was potent in preserving the national faith when false theories of finance would have blasted national and individual prosperity. We kindly remember you as the fast friend of honest money, commercial integrity in all that pertains to the security and repose of capital and the dignity of labor, the freedom of the people, the right of the oppressed to demand and the duty of the government to afford protection. Your public acts have received the unqualified endorsement of popular approval, but we are not unmindful of the fact that parties, like individuals, cannot live entirely on the past, however splendid the record. The present is ever charged with immediate cares, and the future presses in with its new duties and its perplexing responsibilities. Parties like individuals, however, that are free from stain of violated faith in the past, are fairly entitled to the presumption of sincerity in their promises for the future. Among the promises made by the party in its last convention at Chicago, are economy in administration; protection of citizens, native and naturalized, at home and abroad; prompt restoration of the navy; wise reduction of surplus revenues, relieving the taxpayer without injuring the laborer; the preservation of the public lands for actual settlers; import duties, when necessary at all, to be levied, not for revenue only, but for the double purpose of revenue and protection; regulation of interstate commerce; settlement of international differences by peaceful arbitration, but coupled with the reassertion and maintenance of the Monroe doctrine, as interpreted by the fathers of the republic; perseverance in the good work of civil service reform to the end that the dangers to free institution which lurk in the power of official patronage be wisely and effectively avoided; honest currency based on coin of intrinsic value, adding strength to the public credit and giving renewed vitality to every branch of American industry. Mr. Blaine, during the last twenty-three years the Republican party has builded a new republic, a republic far more splendid than originally designed by our fathers. As its proportions are already grand, they may yet be enlarged; its foundations may yet be strengthened and its columns adorned with beauty more resplendent still. To you, as its architect in chief, will soon be assigned this grateful work.

MR. BLAINE'S RESPONSE.

Blaine listened to Gen. Henderson's address, standing under an elm tree with his arms folded on his chest and his eyes usually cast down, but at times wandering about scanning the faces of the audience. When Mr. Henderson had concluded speaking, Walker, the candidate's son, stepped forward and handed his father the manuscript of the address in reply to that of the committee. Mr. Blaine then read as follows:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the National Committee: I receive not without deep sensibility your official notice of the action of the national convention, already brought to my knowledge through the public press. I appreciate more profoundly than I can express the honor which is implied in the nomination for the presidency by the Republican party of the nation, speaking through the authoritative voice of duly accredited delegates. To be selected as a candidate by such an assemblage from the list of eminent statesmen whose names were presented fills me with embarrassment. I can only express my gratitude for so signal an honor and my desire to prove worthy of the great trust reposed in me. In accepting the nomination as I now do, I am impressed, I am also oppressed, with a sense of the labor and responsibility which attaches to my position. The burden is lightened, however, by the host of earnest men who support my candidacy, many of whom add, as does your honorable committee, the cheer of personal friendship to the pledge of political fealty. A more formal acceptance will naturally be expected and will, in due season, be communicated. It may not, however, be inappropriate to this time to say that I have made a careful study of the principles announced by the national convention, and that in whole and detail they have my heartfelt sympathy and meet my unqualified approval. Apart from your official errand, gentleman, I am extremely happy to welcome you all to my house. With many of you I have already shared the duties of public service and have enjoyed most cordial friendship. I trust that your journey from all parts of the great republic has been agreeable and that during your stay in Maine you will feel that you are not among strangers, but among friends. Invoking the blessings of God upon the great cause which we jointly represent, let us turn to the future without fear and with manly heart.

At the conclusion of Mr. Blaine's reply, the members of the committee were introduced to him individually and an hour was spent in social and informal converse. The members of the committee then repaired to the residence of Col. Osgood, where they were entertained at lunch. At 1 o'clock they left for Portland.

Jail Delivery at Moorhead.

Five prisoners confined in the county jail at Moorhead, Clay county, Minn., knocked down the jailer Andrew Emingson, who went to lock them up, and escaped. The jail is a patent cage with small cell cages inside. When the jailer went to lock up the prisoners they all went, as he supposed, into their cells, which he locked from the outside of the cage. He then went inside as usual, carrying a large lamp in his hand. The beds all appeared to be occupied. While he was in the washroom, with his back to the stand, two prisoners, who had hidden themselves behind the door, took a piece of iron, pushed it away and seized him from behind. The lamp was knocked out of his hand and broken, and he was severely bruised and choked with a handkerchief saturated with kerosene. All of the prisoners except Rheamz, held for murder, were released, the jailor locked in a cell, and the prisoners departed, carrying the keys with them. One of them, named James McDonald, came back and gave himself up. The names of those who escaped are John Drew, James Connors, Frank Gray, and Daniel Driscoll. They were held for tria next November for assaulting, robbing and nearly murdering a man named Kotz.

SERENADED LOGAN.

THE NOMINEE SPEAKS AGAIN.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, June 21.—This evening 500 veterans of the two wars took a hand in the business of ratifying. They did a good job. It could not well have been more thorough and complete. The column formed at city hall, and at 8 o'clock came marching up Pennsylvania avenue preceded by the old Marine band and a company of Washington's light infantry. Along the entire line of march there was a constant fusilade of Roman candles, while along the side of the street passed a cart freighted with red and blue fire which was dumped at frequent intervals and the match applied, the effect being picturesque in the highest degree. In front and rear and upon both sides of the column the street was filled with a dense crowd that seemed to catch the enthusiasm of the soldiers, and along the whole route there was a perfect pandemonium of shouting and singing. The front of Gen. Logan's house was tastefully decorated, while many of the general's neighbors manifested their kindly feeling by displaying their banners on the outer walls. Gen. Raum very neatly presented to Gen. Logan the congratulations of the veterans. As Logan stepped forward to speak, he was greeted with tremendous and prolonged cheering. He was often interrupted by outbursts of applause, which attested the hearty approval of his patriotic utterances, and especially of his declaration in favor of upholding the integrity of the nation and the protection of all its citizens at home and abroad. This sentiment was received with cheers that continued several minutes. When the speaker mentioned the name of James G. Blaine, there was another perfect tornado of shouts.

LOGAN'S WORDS.

The text of Gen. Logan's speech is as lows:

Comrades and fellow citizens: The warm expressions of confidence and congratulations which you offer me through your chairman, impress me with a deep sense of gratitude, and I beg to tender my sincerest thanks to all my participating friends for this demonstration of kindness and esteem. Your visit at this time, gentlemen, is interesting to me in a double aspect. As citizens of our common country, tendering tribute to me as a public man, I meet you with genuine pleasure and grateful acknowledgement. Coming, however, as you do, in the character of representatives of the soldiers and sailors of our country, your visit becomes a feature insensibly leading to a train of most interesting reflections. Your assemblage is composed of men who gave up the pursuits of peace, relinquished the comforts of home, severed the friendship and yielded the gentle and loving society of family to brave the dangers of the tented field, or crested waves, to run the gauntlet of sickness in climates different from your own, and probably to yield up life itself in the service of your country. Twenty-three years ago, gentlemen, many of you were standing with one foot upon the portal of manhood, eager for conflict with a world which promised to bring you honor, riches and friends, and a life of peace and ease, but few of you had passed the period of young manhood, or advanced to the opening scene of middle life. At the call, however, of your endangered country you did not hesitate to leave anything for which we strove in this world, to without the incentive which has inspired men of other nations to adopt a military career as a permanent occupation and as an outlet to ambition and assent to power. [Cheers.] The safety of our country having been assured and its territorial integrity preserved, you sheathed the sword, unfixed the bayonet, laid away the musket, housed the cannon, doffed your uniforms, donned the garments of civil life, buried hatred toward our brothers of the South, and shook hands in testimony of a mutual resolve to rehabilitate the waste places and cultivate the arts of peace, until our reunited country should be greater, prouder and grander than ever before Those years have glided into the retrearing perspective of the past since you responded to your country's call, and mighty changes in the eventful march of nations have taken place. This passing time has made itself manifest upon the heads of many of you who shouldered your muskets before your first beard was grown. But however lightly, or however heavily it has dealt with you, your soldiers' and sailors' organizations that have been kept prove that the heart has been untouched and that your love for country has but been intensified saw the light of day under the name of Republican, its birth announced the conception of a higher, broader principle of human government than had been entertained by our forefathers. Part few of us, perhaps none, took the full dimensions of the coming fact at that early day. It broke upon us all gradually like the light of the morning sun. At length it came in full blaze and for the first time in the history of our republic we began to give genuine vitality to the declaration of 1776, that "all men are created equally and entitled to the inalienable rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. The Republican party was the unquestionable agency which bore these gifts to the waiting age, and it was the Democratic idea which disputed their status, first upon the field of battle, and subsequently and up to this moment at the polls. The Republican party, then, represents the latest fruition of governmental progress, and is destined to survive upon the theory that the development of principles still more advanced shall compel it to measure its step with the march of the age or go to the wall an instrument which has fulfilled its destiny. So long as the Democratic party shall cling, either in open or covert manner, to the traditions and policy belonging to the expired era of our development, just so long will the Republican party be charged with the administration of our government. In making this arraignment of the Democracy, my friends, I appeal to no passion nor reopen settled questions. I but utter the calm, sober words of truth. I say, that until every state in this broad and beneficial Union shall give free recognition to the civil and political rights of the humblest of its citizens, whatever his color, until protection to American citizens follows the flag at home and abroad; until the admirable monetary system established by the Republican party shall be placed beyond the danger of subversion; until American labor and industry shall be protected by wide and equitable laws so as to give full scope to our immense resources and place every man upon the plane to which he is entitled by reason of his capacity and worth; until education shall be as general as our civilization; until we shall have established that will not only preserve the place with other nations, but will cause every American citizen to honor his government at home, and every civilized nation to respect our flag; until the American people shall permanently establish a thoroughly economic system upon an American ideal which will preserve and foster their interests, uninfluenced by English theories or Cobden clubs, and, until it is conceded beyond subsequent revocation that the government exists upon the basis of a self-sustaining, self-preserving nation, and the fatal doctrine of independent state sovereignty, upon which the civil war was founded, shall be stamped as political heresy, out of which continued revolution is born, and wholly incompatible with the idea of the republic, the Republican party will have much work to do and an unfulfilled mission to perform. The standard bearer party in the ensuing campaign is Hon. James G. Blaine, known throughout the land as one of its truest and ablest representatives. He has been called to this position by the voice of the people in recognition of his especial fitness for the trust and in admiration of the surprising combination of brilliancy, courage, faithfulness, persistency and research that has made him one of the most remarkable figures which have appeared upon the forum of statecraft in my period. That such a man should have enemies and detractors is as natural as that our best fruits should be infested with parasites, or that there should exist small and envious minds which seek to belittle that which they can never hope to imitate or equal, and that he shall triumph over these, and lead the Republican hosts to another victory in November, is as certain as the succession of the seasons or the rolling of the spheres in their courses. Gentlemen, again I thank you for this visit of congratulation, and extend to you one and all my grateful acknowledgments.

BECOME DEFENDERS OF THE UNION

The speakers who followed Gen. Logan were heartily cheered. They included Senators Plumb and Harrison and Congressmen Cutcheon of Michigan, Goff of West Virginia, A. H. Pettibone of Tennessee and Bayne of Pennsylvania. For two hours the street along the entire block was densely crowded with the shouting, sweltering crowd. Such an intensity of enthusiasm and good feeling is rarely seen.

In the past thirty two years 261 families of Dukes, Marquises and Earls, embracing 4,536 scions, and filling 8,228 offices, have obtained from the British taxes, under the Marlborough pension that has just been commuted, the sum of £66,247,242.

MINNESOTA NEWS NOTES.

Minnesota State Medical Society.

The sixteenth annual session of the Minnesota State Medical Society was held at Stillwater last week, the president, Dr. W. L. Lincoln of Wabasha, presiding. Rev. Dr. J. Halstead Carroll, of the First Presbyterian church, Stillwater, invoked divine blessing upon the session of the society. Dr. B. J. Merrill, Stillwater, then delivered the address of welcome:

The committee on membership—Drs. Millard, Dunsmoor and Leasure—recommended the following applicants for membership.

G. R. Hewitt, St Paul, Jefferson Medical college, 1877; H. H. Wilcox, Albert Lee, Medical College of Ohio, 1882; R. O. Beard, Minneapolis, Chicago Medical College, 1881; P. N. Kelly, Rochester, McGill Medical college 1883; W. J. Mayo Rochester, McGill Medical college, 1883; T. J. Hutton, Taylor's Falls, Long Island hospital, 1871; Charles H. Stewart, Duluth, Iowa university, 1870; J. C. Adams, Lake City, 1851. President Lincoln delivered his annual address. He combatted the idea that the physician was not called upon to instruct people how they may prevent sickness, and then showed the physician should be a sanatarian in the largest sense. The evils of alcoholism were strongly depicted.

A member inquiring as to the practical workings of the recent act of the legislature regulating the practice of medicine in Minnesota, Dr. Millard, of the state mecical board, stated that he knew of a large number of persons who had heretofore been imposing upon the public a pretended knowledge of medicine and a pretended course of medical study, who, under the new law and the activity of the board, had been obliged to leave the state until such time as they should be properly qualified to practice. This law was proving a great protector of the people against charlatanism and knavery.

A large number of valuable papers were read and interesting discussions had thereon. The papers will be printed in the official report.

The following resolution, offered by Dr. J. Owens of St. Paul, was adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That this society has perfect confidence in the late medical examination board, and recommend our members to give it all encouragement and assistance in their power, by creating favorable public opinion.

Dr. Franklin Staples of Winona represented the name of president and he was elected.

For first vice president Dr. Davenport nominated Dr. F. A. Dunsmoor of Minneapolis, who was elected unanimously.

Dr. W. H. Pratt of Stillwater was, on motion of Dr. P. H. Millard, elected vice president, and Dr. Wheaton of S' Paul third vice president.

On motion of Dr. Hewitt. Dr. Sheardown of Stockton, the present incumbent, was chosen as treasurer.

For secretary, Dr. Clark's motion that the present secretary, Dr. C. H. Boardman of St. Paul be re-elected, was unanimously carried.

Dr. Ritchie of Duluth was chosen corresponding secretary. For the ensuing three years, Dr. J. C. Rhodes of Stillwater and Dr. B. Smith of Duluth were elected by acclamation.

Treasurer Sheardown submitted his annual report which showed a balance of $344.11 in the treasury.

The doctors visited the State prison, and made a careful and leisurely inspection of the grounds, cell room and various shops, the formidable procession of the professional gentlemen evidently exciting more than ordinary curiosity and interest among the inmates. They also attended a banquet given by the citizens of Stillwater which was enjoyable.

Minnesota Knights Templar.

The Grand Commandery of Knights Templar of Minnesota was held at Minneapolis, on the 25th. There was a full attendance of grand and Past grand officers present, and the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

M. E. G. Commander—Sir A. M. Shuey, Minneapolis.
V. E. Deputy Grand Commander—Sir W. D. Cornish, St. Paul.
E. G. Generalissemo—Sir Henry Berkett, Owatonna.
E. G. Captain General—Sir Thomas Montgomery, Mankato.
E. G. Prelate—Sir P. P. Hubbell, Winona.
E. G. Senior Warden—Sir Thomas Mee, Faribault.
E. G. Junior Warden—Sir R. L. Van Duesen, Rochester.
E. G. Treasurer—Sir J. G. MacFarlane, Minneapolis.
E. G. Recorder—Sir A. T. C. Pierson, St. Paul.
E. G. Standard bearer—Sir William Worm, Albert Lea.
E. G. Sword Bearer—Sir Eugene Ward, Austin.
E. G. Warder—C. E. Hubbard, Lake City.

The grand officers were installed by T. S. Parvin, grand recorder of the grand encampment of the United States, and the commandery adjourned to meet next year in Winona.

Red Wing Mystery Solved.

C. Clausen, a Norwegian, resident at Red Wing, of which place he is a prominent citizen, disappeared June 17th mysteriously, and circumstances pointed to mental aberation. Search was instituted by relatives and friends in St. Paul, Minneapolis and Stillwater, Julius Reim, a clerk of the missing man, conducting the hunt in person. All search proved fruitless, and stories of absconding were rife until June 24th. At 9 o'clock a. m., Joseph La Court, while on the Mississippi within the boom, two miles above the Sioux City bridge, St. Paul, discovered a floater, which he drew ashore and then notified the coroner, who had the body removed to the morgue and it was recognized as that of Mr. Clausson. Mr. Clausen's estate is in a very demoralized condition, and will probably be insolvent. His liabilities amount to over $100,000, being largely deposits made with him by his countrymen in the vicinity of Red Wing. His assets are placed at over that amount, but it is doubtful if as much will be realized.

Dr. William H. Miller, aged seventy and the oldest druggist in St. Paul, died at his residence, No. 183 West Third street on Tuesday, the 24th. Mr. Miller came to St. Paul early in the fifties and opened a drug store. He has been in that business continuously ever since.

Clinton Truman, an old and respected citizen of Sauk Center, died aged fifty-three years.

At the Red Rock Camp Meeting near St. Paul, there were over 10,000 people present last Sunday.

In pursuance of his plan, previously elaborated and published, President James J. Hill has commenced the shipment north and west along the line of the Manitoba of finely bred poled Angus and short horn bulls. These animals—thirty of which recently arrived from abroad—will be shipped to responsible parties, who will give them for service to neighboring farmers at a normal price.

One of the most important suits ever tried in the courts of this state, involving the title to a large section in the centre of the city of Duluth, is now in the United States circuit court at St. Paul. The property involved in the litigation includes about 700 acres in the heart of Duluth. The Northern Pacific yards, coal yards, docks and other valuable property are in the district, and the total value is placed at over $7,000,000. The basis of the suit is the reservation to one Armstrong in an Indian treaty of 1854 between the La Pointe band of Chippewas and the United States, whereby there was patented to Armstrong certain land an undivided half of which he sold to Fred Prentiss.

J. A. Green of Hampton, Iowa, and Lafayette Lamberson of Perham will open a bank at Warren, having purchased a ground on which to erect a brick block for the use of the bank.

John Estey, living at Fort Ripley, was kicked in the abdomen by a horse, receiving injuries which resulted in death in a few hours. Estey operated a saw mill at Fort Ripley. He leaves a wife and eight children.

The inquest on August Schmidt of Minneapolis found that he fell through the suspension bridge through the negligence of workmen to place lights and guards.

Secretary H. H. Young of the State Board of Immigration reports that the condition of spring wheat at this time is good with one or two exceptions in the counties of the state. All as far as heard from stands at 100 which means a good crop with the exception of Wilkin which stands at ninety and Goodhue at ninety-five. The continuance of the rainy season however places this crop in great danger of a pull back, especially where growing on flat ground.

Burglars attempted to enter Gov. Hubbard's house at Red Wing. Mrs. Hubbard heard them and scared them off.

The following city licenses have been issued in St. Louis. Thirty-eight saloons, $3,800; fifty-eight dogs, $61; thirty-three billiard and pool tables, $425; one circus, $100; two druggists, $50; two shooting-galleries, $10; three peddlers, $20; one bowling alley, $15; one opera house, $25; total, $4,606.

One of the most brilliant social events of the season at Austin, was the wedding of W. W. Keyser, Esq., of Omaha, Neb., and Miss Jennie Ellis, oldest daughter of A. V. Ellis of that city.

Charles Hauer of Rich Prairie and Kate Langer of Le Sauk were to have been married. The bans were duly published, the license was procured, and the wedding party proceeded to the parish priest, where they were informed that another lady had filed a claim against the would-be bridegroom, and objected to his marriage with Miss Langer, but would give him up for $1,000.

Machine shops to cost $35,000 will be built this summer by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba railroad at Barnesville.

Considerable excitement was created by finding on the shore of one of the lakes which adjoin the village of Waterville, eight dead cattle belonging to A. Kenrick. There was no doubt that their death was caused by drinking the lake water, which at this time of the year becomes slightly greenish-colored in all parts of the lake, and near the shores much more so; and in still, warm weather becomes very foul and gives out a sickening stench. This is not the first time this has happened.

A sailor on the barge Iron Duke, William Knott by name, fell off the dock at Duluth while going back to the boat after a spree up town, and was drowned.

Thomas Saul of Gillford, aged twenty-six, and a son of John Saul, was killed by lightning about 9 o'clock on Thursday morning while driving from Zumbro Falls to his home, two miles distant. The young man was stricken dead in the wagon, but the team and vehicle were not injured, and arrived at the home of Mr. Saul with the dead body.

A little daughter of John Olson, of the town of Rome, Minn., riding with her father, fell from the wagon, a wheel passing over and killing her.

Winona Dispatch: The tramp nuisance has assumed very annoying proportions. The conductor of a freight train arriving from the east said his train was besieged by a gang of about fifty tramps this side of La Crosse, and that he only succeeded in keeping them off his train by knocking one of them down with a coupling pin. The residence of Mr. John Rice in the First ward was visited by tramps recently when all of the family were absent but a little girl. They walked around the house, peering in at every window and trying the doors, but the girl had locked the doors and bravely stood her ground notwithstanding that she was much frightened.

The St. Paul & Northern Pacific damages on First street, Minneapolis, are $77,035 in all.

The time for holding the Big Stone Lake camp meeting has been postponed from the 15-21st to the 22-26th of July.

O. J. Sundhal, an old settler in Otter Tail county, is dead. He built the opera house in Fergus Falls.

A large number of people were drawn to Red Rock near St. Paul last Tuesday by the announcement of the memorial exercises in honor of Bishop Simpson. An audience of about 2,000 were present when the address by Bishop Foss begun. The speaker's stand had been draped in mourning and decorated with wreaths and white flowers. Prominent on the stage was a portrait of Bishop Simpson, which had been taken fully fifteen years ago. The address of Bishop Foss was very able and enlisted close attention.

One of the largest jams which ever occurred took place in the dalles of the St. Croix, at Taylor's Falls. There are from forty to fifty million feet of logs jammed together in every conceivable shape, forming one of the most novel and grotesque of sights. People are flocking in from the surrounding country to witness the strange spectacle. It is thought it will take three weeks to break it up.

Mr. W. R. Dunn has sold the Chronicle to Jas. G. McGrew, Esq., for $6,500. Mr. Dunn has labored hard and consencienciously to make a good clean paper and has certainly succeeded in making it profitable. The JOURNAL extends the right hand of fellowship to W. R. and wishes long life, health and abundant success to him and his wherever in the future they may abide. We welcome Bro. McGrew, who is an old newspaper man, to the ranks confident that he is worthy and well qualified. Here's Ho!

THE ALLEGHANIANS.

This excellent troupe returned on Thursday evening of last week "to Sing the Songs our Fathers sang," and to "Ring dem Charmin' Bells." Their return was greeted by a much larger audience than greeted their first appearance, and, although very much fatigued by traveling and hard work they fully sustained the reputation they had made. We shall not attempt the program in detail, suffice it to say it was an excellent one and well rendered. The singers seemed to rise out of themselves, carrying their audience along on the pinions of song and the applause they received was hearty and well merited. Miss Hiffert, who has been with the Alleghanians for over 30 years, astonishes one with the compass of her voice, its low notes rivalling a barso. She sang and acted "The Three Old Maids of Lee," inimitably, and now every bachelor in our city, the one "just an inch too short," "the one too tall," and the one "not rich enough" are saying to the girls who are disposed to say no, "Be careful, go a little slow and remember the old maids!" And the girls will all take due heed and will all say—what they like all the same. Miss Hanlon, who has been upon the stage since a child, having sung Pinafore with a juvenile opera troupe alone 300 nights was just as sweet and bewitching as ever or as one of the boys said, "yum, yum!" Unlike many who begin public singing early, her voice has developed rich qualities which gives promise of far greater things yet to be, while her every movement is grace itself. Miss Medina, who has won herself a name in the musical world, appeared a trifle nervous at the beginning of her solo but regained her usual composure directly. She sang Staccato Polka, her voice touching the highest and lowest notes with perfect ease and melody. She told our better half, after the entertainment closed that she saw a dear old lady in the audience with a "come-down-off-that-fence,-or-you'll-fall" expression upon her face which changed to one of relief and comfort when she began the good old-fashioned song, "Annie Laurie," as an encore. We hope some day to hear this lady (who by the way the Italians called "The American Sappho," because of her talent for versification) in a grand opera, when full scope may be given her rich, clear, sweet voice. Miss Willard out-did her previous singing and acting proving that "with added vivacity" she would rank high as a charming singer and actor. She was in full voice and seemed bound to make us take back our former rather harsh criticism which we are more than pleased to do. She is a charming singer and verily she will have her reward (next winter) if we are correctly informed. Mr. Hall apparently was a trifle lazy (or indisposed) as we did not get an opportunity to listen to his gentle racket alone, but he sustained his reputation well in his various parts especially in his role of music teacher in which he was ably assisted by Miss Medini. It is not necessary to mention Mr. Fields. He kept the audience in a broad grin every time he appeared and was always obliged to double the dose. Mr. Boulard had been sick almost all of the time since he has been away but it did not seem to affect his singing at all and he seemed to snatch the bells with all of his accustomed vigor. Appropos of the bell ringing, most troupes employ from 6 to 8 persons. The Alleghanians only four which makes it far more difficult and if one misses a note the error is more easily detected. As a whole our citizens were well pleased and will welcome the Alleghanians heartily if ever they come this way again.

STRAYED.

From my yard Monday, June 30th, an old bay horse weight about 1200 lbs. Any person bringing back the horse, or giving any information will be suitably rewarded.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication June 5th, 1884.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of twenty-five and 75-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Andrew J. Ostie and Martha A. Ostie, his wife, to The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London (Limited) bearing date the 16th day of November A. D. 1881, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 7th day of December A. D. 1881, at 1:15 o'clock p. m., in book "B" of mortgages, on pages 556, 557 and 558, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note of three hundred and fifty dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage, and due the 16th day of November 1886, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January of each year, according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Andrew Ostie and Martha Ostie, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the makers thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. from the time it becomes due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1884, and the interest now due on said interest the said mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said note, should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The southeast quarter of Section eight (8,) Township one hundred and fifty-four (154,) Range fifty (50,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of thirty-six and 75-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Thomas Nemetz and Annie Nemetz, his wife, to Clarisa W. Phillips, bearing date the 17th day of January A. D. 1882, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 19th day of January A. D. 1882, at 8 o'clock a. m., in book "F" of mortgages, on pages 181, 182 and 183, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for five hundred dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 17th day of January A. D. 1887, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum payable annually on the 1st day of January of each year according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Thomas Nemetz and Annie Nemetz, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. from the time it becomes due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st, 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, said mortgagee therefor elected that all of said sums described in said note, should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The southwest quarter of Section twenty-two (22) Township one hundred and fifty-four (154) north, of Range forty-eight (48) west, containing one hundred and sixty acres, in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and $25.00 attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as proveded by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication July 3d, 1884.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of ninety-two and 75-100 dollars ($92.75-100,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by James Ryan, a single man, to James Barton, bearing date the 11th day of December A. D. 1883, and, with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 11th day of December A. D. 1883, at 5:25 o'clock p. m., in book "N" of mortgages, on page 319, that an action at law in which said James Barton was plaintiff, and said James Ryan was defendant, was instituted in the District Court, in and for Polk County, Minnesota, on March 14th, 1884, to recover said debt and that on June 26th, 1884, a judgment was duly rendered in said action for the sum of $102.81 in favor of the plaintiff therein, and against the defendant therein, which said judgment was on the 26th day of June 1884, duly entered in the office of the Clerk of said Court, and that on the 26th day of June 1884 an execution was duly issued from said court in said action and that on June 26th 1884, said execution was returned wholly unsatisfied, and that said sum of $102.81 is now justly due and owing from the defendant in said action to the plaintiff therein.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: Lot number nine (9,) in block number two (2,) in Hurlbut's addition to the townsite of Crookston, according to the recorded plat thereof now on file in the office of the Register of Deeds of Polk County, Minnesota, also an undivided one-half (½) of lot ten (10) in block twelve (12) in Davis Addition to the townsite of Crookston, according to the recorded plat thereof now on file in the office of the Register of Deeds, of Polk County, Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 16th day of August A. D. 1884, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of twenty-nine and 40-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Camile Bruitts and Sophie Bruitts, his wife, to The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London, (Limited,) bearing date the 4th day of February A. D. 1882, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 4th day of February A. D. 1882, at 3:15 o'clock p. m., in book "G" of mortgages, on pages 139, 140 and 141, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note of four hundred dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 4th day of February 1887, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January in each year according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Camile Bruitts and Sophie Bruitts, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the time it became due, and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, the said mortgagee therefor elected that all of said sums described in said note should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note, and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby, given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter (nw¼) of the southwest quarter (sw¼) and south half (s½) of the northwest quarter (nw¼) southwest quarter (sw¼) northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section ten (10,) Township one hundred and fifty-one (151,) Range forty-five (45,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of twenty-five and 75-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Andrew J. Oslie and Martha A. Oslie, his wife, to The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London (Limited) bearing date the 16th day of November A. D. 1881, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 7th day of December A. D. 1881, at 1:15 o'clock p. m., in book "E" of mortgages, on pages 556, 557 and 558, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note of three hundred and fifty dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage, and due the 16th day of November 1886, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January of each year, according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Andrew Oslie and Martha Oslie, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the makers thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. from the time it becomes due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1884, and the interest now due on said interest the said mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said note, should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The south-east quarter of Section eight (8,) Township one hundred and fifty-four (154,) Range fifty (50,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court-House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of thirty-six and 75-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Thomas Nemetz and Annie Nemetz, his wife, to Clarissa W. Phillips, bearing date the 17th day of January A. D. 1882, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 19th day of January A. D. 1882, at 8 o'clock a. m., in book "F" of mortgages, on pages 181, 182 and 183, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for five hundred dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 17th day of January A. D. 1887, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum payable annually on the 1st day of January of each year according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Thomas Nemetz and Annie Nemetz, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent, from the time it becomes due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st, 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, said mortgagee therefor elected that all of said sums described in said note, should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The south-west quarter of Section twenty-two (22) Township one hundred and fifty-four (154) north, of Range forty-eight (48) west, containing one hundred and sixty acres, in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and $25.00 attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as proveded by law.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of fifty-eight and 80-100 dollars which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, executed and delivered by Xavier Ducharme and Elizabeth Ducharme, his wife, to the American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London, (Limited) bearing date the 30th day of July, A. D. 1881, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the 1st day of August, A. D. 1881, at 8 o'clock a. m., in book "E" of mortgages, on pages 160, 161, 162 and 163, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for seven hundred dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage, and due the 30th day of July, 1886, with interest thereon from date until paid at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, payable annually on the first day of January in each year, according to the terms of said promissory note of said Xavier Ducharme and Elizabeth Ducharme, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the time it became due, and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st, 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, the said mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said note should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The southwest quarter of Section thirty-five (35) Township one hundred and fifty-one (151), Range forty-four (44) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres, in Polk County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fee as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston in said County and State, on the 31st day of July, A. D. 1884, at two o'clock p. m. of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

A VICTORY OF THE NORWEGIAN PEOPLE.

Pioneer Press.

Congressman Nelson has received from the editor of a Norwegian newspaper published at La Cross, Wis., a printed circular containing a cablegram from Norway, dated June 26th, which will be of interest to the numerous Scandinavians in the United States. The cablegram says:

A new ministry has been appointed, consisting of John Sverdrup, prime minister; Richter Sveredsen; Jacob Sverdrup, a brother of the prime minister; Arctander, Haugland, Jacobsen, Stang and Blix.

Mr. Nelson says, the king has evidently had no success in the formation of a ministry with Prof. Berch at the head. There has been a struggle between the king and storthing or parliament of that country for some years over a constitutional amendment allowing the Scandinavian ministers to appear in the parliament as the British ministers are required to do in the British parliament. The amendment was adopted without the king's approval by the usual constitutional methods. The result was a struggle between the crown and the parliament, culminating early in the spring in the impeachment of the ministry. The King then appointed another ministry with Prof. Berch as prime minister, but this also proved a failure, as appears by the cablegram, and a new ministry with a leader of the majority at the head was formed. Mr. Nelson thinks the new cabinet will prove entirely satisfactory, and will place the Norwegian government on a stronger basis than before, and in a similar position with the English government, with the ministry selected from the majority of the parliament.

'ROUND HOME.

Eddie Chiniquy has returned from Chicago, and will now remain in Crookston.

F. W. Benedict, the genial manager of the Central house, says that cigars are in order, call and see him.

Schwark & Behlme have put a large trunk for a sign on the top of their store building on Second Street.

Sylvester Lanterman, one of Crookston's early settlers, now of Hillsboro, celebrated the fourth in this city.

The wrestling match which occurred on Main Street last Tuesday afternoon was called a draw by the by-standers.

Mrs. Dyer arrived in this city last Monday evening from St. Paul. She came to visit her son Chas. Dyer our genial express agent.

M. R. Brown's new store building on Main Street will soon be completed; the frame work is up and it will soon be ready for occupancy.

Eleonard Soriol, a niece of Mr. Filiatrault, arrived in the city last Friday evening. She will make her home with Mr. Filiatrault hereafter.

A gentleman, from Nichie, D. T., was in our city this week looking around with a view to locating here. It is not as yet decided whether he will come or not.

A sad event took place on the North bound train last Saturday morning. A lady was traveling alone, with her three children and one about a year old died a short time before the train reached this city.

C. H. Brooks, general contracting agent for W. H. Harris' Nickel Plate show, gave us a pleasant call last Tuesday. Mr. Brooks certainly understands his business and Mr. Harris is certainly fortunate in obtaining so competent an agent.

Daring Burglars.

On the night of July 3d burglars entered the Sherman house and relieved some of the guests of about $200 in all. On July 4th, about two or three o'clock in the afternoon, a young man who gives the name of Gus Loskiel was arrested by officer McKinny on suspicion and finally through fear, as he claimed, owned up to being an accomplice in the robbery, said that one Henry Goenen was his partner in crime. Goenen was immediately arrested and had a hearing before Justice Lilly, who put him under $2,000 bonds to appear on Monday July 7th for trial; he could not give bail so he was put in the county jail. The trial commenced Monday at 10 o'clock a. m., and the evidence given by Gus Loskiel was certainly intended to convict Goenen. The story was something like this: "I saw Goenen about 5 o'clock p. m., at the Norsk hotel, he spoke to me and says I want to see you to-night Gussy, and got in to his wagon and drove off; I met him again that night about nine o'clock near Jenne's livery stable and he says Gus I am hard up for money and I have got to make a raise to-night if I can, and he then went over to his camp, I then went down to where there was another traveling outfit that I was acquainted with, and tried to sleep but could not on account of mosquitoes, staid there about an hour or a little over perhaps and started up town to find Goenen, went up the back street toward the Commercial house, walked up and down the street a few times and saw Goenen crossing the river on the logs, waited; until he came and he showed me a small box of tools, some keys and a small bottle which he said contained a liquid that would put people to sleep and then we started up toward the Commercial again, so he left me on guard and told me if I saw anybody coming to walk fast down the sidewalk, he then went over and got up on the shed on the east side of the house and tried to open the window but did not succeed, came over where I was again, he then told me that he was going to try another place if it cost him his head and then threatened me and told me that he would not tell and that I must not and said that he was wearing diamonds and that I would too if I followed him, and then we went up to the Norsk hotel and he tried to get in there but failed, he then came to me and said that he was going to try one more place that night, and from there we went to the Sherman house. I was on guard near the red elevator while he went and got a ladder and went into the house and I watched there until I got frightened and I went away and did not see him again that night, and on the 4th we were both arrested." This story was pretty well gotton up but when Judge Montague, attorney for the defendant, commenced to cross question him he got terribly mixed up up and the defendant was discharged and Loskiel is now in custody, and it is generally believed that he himself is the criminal, and that the man he slept with in the wagon is his accomplice. The officers are on their track and they will probably be taken in.

THE W. H. HARRIS NEW SHOWS.

There is probably no man living today who has had better success, or made more friends, or won more laurels in the show business than W. H. Harris, who is a thorough gentleman and a showman worthy of the name, and is known wherever the Nickel Plate has shown as a man of integrity, sobriety, honesty and indomitable perseverance. This enviable reputation Mr. Harris has gained by dealing fairly with his patrons, the public, by fulfilling his every promise and by constant and hard brain and hand work. It has ever been his aim to better his profession, and his labors have been highly successful. In the organization of the Nickel Plate circus Mr. Harris has enbodied all of worth that he has gained from experience of years. He has built a new show after his own plans and ideas and from new material. He has built a circus for the people, has engaged the best talent of the country, and will introduce features that will be new, novel and pleasing, among which may be mentioned, Dora, the Feejee island cannibal, only one in America; "Gypsy," the only umbrella-eared elephant, with the largest ears of born brutes; the largest and most savage den of lions; the only male and female Samson on the continent, pulling against elephants and horses, etc. etc.

Crookston, Minn., July 3d, 1884.

For furnishing material and constructing a fire proof vault at Court house, will be received by the undersigned until Monday the 21st inst. Dimension 8x12. Plans and specifications to accompany each bid. The right to reject any or all bids is reserved.

By order of the Board of County Commissioners.

P. J. McGUIRE, Clerk.

MARRIED

HUNTER—MILLAN.—In Crookston, on June 5th, 1884, by Rev. H. L. House, Mr. K. C. HUNTER to Miss MAGGIE MILLAN all of Crookston.

BENEDICT—PERSON.—In this city, at the residence of M. Roudy, on July 2d, 1884, by the Rev. K. L. Adams, Mr. F. W. BENEDICT, of Randall, Wis., to Miss CLARA PERSON, of Le Sueur, Minn.

The happy party left on the train the same forenoon for Fort Totten, and returned to this city Saturday evening July 5th. Mr. Benedict has taken charge and has the entire management of the Central house, one of the popular hotels of this city, and he will probably make Crookston his home for the future. The Journal offers congratulations.

'ROUND HOME.

Dan McDonald is in from Red Lake Falls this week.

Mr. McIntyre, of Warren, was in the city last Wednesday.

Mr. H. G. Palmer, of Warren, celebrated the Fourth in Crookston.

The bill boards next to Herb's branch were blowed down last evening.

Grand times for the small boy. The famous Nickel-Plate Shows have six funny clowns.

Rauenbuehler is still on deck with with the best assortment of harness in the market.

A. E. McManus was in from his school at Mentor to spend the Fourth with his brother George.

E. D. Schreader's livery sign was blown down during the storm Wednesday evening and badly demoralized.

LeRoy, the tailor on Second Street has got a sign that is the dandy. It is a regular picture gallery. Take notice.

Gardner Stephens returned from Montana on Saturday. "Steve" thinks he will stay around in a civilized country awhile.

M. Rauenbuehler has just received the finest assortment of whips ever brought to this city. Call and look them over.

If you want to secure the best hand made harness in the city, at bed-rock prices, call on M. Rauenbuehler, the Broadway harness-maker.

S. P. Norton proprietor of the Central house brought in a sample of wheat from his farm last Wednesday that was 4 feet 6 inches high and all headed out.

Charlie Seely's place was decorated for keeps on the Fourth. Besides the evergreens, hundreds of flags lent an air of patriotism that was refreshing to behold.

Peter Cornelius, O. H. Lucken and O. L. Hamery intended to start for the 13 towns on Tuesday but owing to the death of the Hon. P. C. Sletten postponed the trip for a few days.

Mr. Harris fears no opposition and cares for nothing that precedes or follows him. His show is one, especially in its arenic performance, that can have no successful opposition.

The big whistle at T. B. Walker's saw mill sounded again last Wednesday. We hope that the machinery is now all arranged, and that work at the mill will now commence in earnest.

On Friday morning last Mr. Geo. Schwoerer died at the residence of Fred Fox for whom he had been working and was buried on Saturday, Rev. C. E. Page conducting the funeral services.

Geo. Gonin returned Wednesday evening from the east where he has been visiting friends for the past month. He had a very pleasant trip and will now resume his old position at Fortier's place.

Charlie Netzer keeps a choice brand of cigars equal to any ever brought to the city. He also keeps domestic and imported beer in quantities to suit. Give Charlie a call at the Germnia house on Main Street.

We understand that Knute Steenerson was badly cut up in St. Hilaire July 4th, by one Sandeman, a hard character. Sandeman was bound over by judge Ives and is now at rest in the county jail

Mrs. Van Cleve, of Minneapolis lectured at the Presbyterian church last Monday evening. She gave a very interesting lecture which was well attended under the auspices of the Women's Christian Union.

Dunc Terry received a Fourth of July present that makes him prouder than anything. It was a fine ten-pound boy. Mother and boy doing well and Dunc thinks with proper care he himself will pull through all right.

A valuable colt belonging to Peter Cornelius got seriously injured by running against a sharp rail in a fence. We hear so much about the deadly wire fence that we are glad to know that they are not always too blame for injury to stock.

Mrs. Monroe Palmer, of Angus spent the Fourth with friends in the city. She was a classmate with the Hon. M. E. Clapp, the speaker of the day, whom she piloted to our office for a friendly call. We found Mr. C. a gentleman whom it was a great pleasure to meet.

The residents of the Pacific coast are recognized by amusement managers to be the most critical people in the world. The enormous patronage those people gave the Nickle-Plate Shows speaks for itself. Mr. Harris has done a larger business on that coast than any circus that has ever visited there and some of the largest in America have exhibited there.

On the morning of the ever-glorious, remembering the failings of ye printer man, Mr. Frank T. Haseltine appeared at this office with several boxes of the finest strawberries we have seen this year. They were all large, plump berries, entirely free from sand, dirt and grit and prove conclusively that fruit raising can be made successful in this country. Mr. H. has given much attention to his small fruits and now begins to reap a rich reward.

On Wednesday evening last, Mrs Johnson, wife of carpenter Johnson, was setting by the window in her sitting room when a stray ball from some revolver sped through the window and striking the plastering fell to the floor. This practice of firing guns and revolvers within the city limits is against the law and should be severely punished when known. If common sense does not prevent a man indulging in such dangerous practices he should have a dose that would.

A Farmers Mass Convention is called to meet at Moorhead on Tuesday and Wednesday, July 15th and 16th. A similar convention is also called to meet at Crookston on Thursday and Friday, July 24th and 25th. The object of these conventions is to talk over the interests of farmers in relation to the wheat market and to take means to obtain a reduction on freights. The Pol. Co. Alliance calls a meeting on Saturday, July 19th, to elect delegates [illegible]

Mrs. A. E. Sawyer and her daughter Hattie left for St. Hilaire this morning.

A. E. Sawyer, Dr. C. E. Dampier and Mayor Walsh left this morning for Winnipeg, to attend the races there.

Notwithstanding the cool weather on the Fourth, the Presbyterian Open House netted lots of fun and about $60 cash.

Owing to the death of the Hon. Paul C. Sletten, Receiver of the U. S. Land business at the Land Office will be suspended until his successor is appointed and qualified.

Chas. Seeley, who returned from New York City Wednesday, left on the train this morning for Grand Forks. He will probably take in Minneapolis before he returns.

The sole aim of Mr. Harris, of the Nickel-Plate Circus, has been to gather around him a company of arenic celebrities, that would permit him to present to the public the best circus performance that has ever been given. The menagerie was added because no circus is complete without one.

The Milling and Lumber Association of Red Lake Falls is in rather bad shape. The loss to parties interested as yet is not known, suffice it to say that it is a large amount. We have taken particular pains to find out something definite but have not as yet, but will publish particulars later.

DIED.

SLETTEN.—At his residence in this city, on Tuesday morning, July 8th, of inflamation of the bowels, PAUL C. SLETTEN, aged 43 years, and 5 months.

Paul C. Sletten was born in Gulbrandsdalen, Norway, February 26th 1841, where he received his education, was married and was for some years employed as a civil engineer and railroad contractor. He came to America in 1869 and aided in the building of the Northern Pacific Railroad into the Red River Valley. In 1872 he took a homestead claim at Oak Lake, in Becker County, and in 1873 took charge of a store at that place for Loring & Black. In 1875 he received the appointment of Receiver in the U. S. Land Office, which position he was filling creditably at the time of his death. Mr. Sletten was a man of great natural ability, an indefatigable worker and a man of great political influence. He was doing a great work in this New Northwest where his name was a household word. Many and many a poor settler has cause to remember Mr. Sletten with feelings of the deepest gratitude. He was ever on the alert, considering no work too great that would enhance the interests of this New Northwest and among the many things for which he labored, the opening of the 13 towns stands as a monument to his name. He was full of plans for the benefit of his adopted country and had he lived he would not have rested short of their full accomplishment. By his death the Northwest loses a true friend and a faithful worker. How great is this loss those who knew him most intimately best know, and his early death will long be deeply felt and mourned by hundreds of warm personal friends besides a brother, his wife and four little girls, his remaining children. His remains were followed to his last resting place on Wednesday afternoon by a large number of mourning friends and relatives, escorted by the French Cornet band. "After life's fitful fever he sleeps well" and his memory will long be enshrined in the hearts of his true friends and co-laborers.

THE REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN.

Organization of the Republican National Committee and Preparations for Active Work.

New York, June 26. The Republican national committee met at the Fifth Avenue hotel June 26th. John W. Mason of West Virginia was chosen temporary chairman, and George W. Hooker of Vermont temporary secretary. Every state and territory was represented either by member or proxy, except Georgia, Minnesota, Texas, Montana, Washington Territory, Wyoming and Utah. D. McClure was proxy for H. Davis of California, George E. Spencer for T. Youngblood of Alabama, C. O. Cropker for T. Wrenn of Nevada, J. N. Dolph for T. J. Aperson of Oregon and D. P. Pride for S. M. Coffin of Idaho. The temporary chairman announced it in order to select permanent officers. Mr. Haynes of Maine moved that the chair appoint a committee to nominate permanent officers. The chair named J. Manchester Haynes, G. A. Hobart and F. E. Morea that committee, and the gentlemen retired. Pending their deliberations the committee at 12:35 took a recess of half an hour.

PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

At 1:25 the committee was again called to order and Haynes reported.

For chairman, B. F. Jones of Pittsburg; secretary, Samuel Fessenden of Connecticut.

Executive Committee—J. B. Chaffee of Colorado, J. C. New of Indiana, J. M. Mason of West Virginia, J. M. Haynes of Maine, W. W. Crapo of Massachusetts, S. B. Elkhis of New Mexico, G. A. Hobart of New Jersey, George W. Hooker of Vermont, John D. Lawson of New York, R. W. Humphrey of North Carolina, Frank S. Blair of Virginia, Powell Clayton of Arkansas, Frank Morey of Louisiana, A. L. Conger of Ohio, John P. Sanborn of Michigan, Church Howe of Nebraska, Cyrus Leland, Jr., of Kentucky, John R. Lynch of Mississippi, J. S. Clarkson of Iowa, E. Sanderson of Wisconsin, W. J. Lawson of Delaware, and E. H. Rollins of New Hampshire.

Finance Committee—B. F. Jones, Horace Davis, John D. Lawson, David T. Settler, W. W. Crapo, E. H. Rollins, M. H. Gray, and George W. Hooker.

CHAIRMAN JONES' ADDRESS.

Mr. Jones, permanent chairman read the following address:

Gentlemen of the committee, I did not seek nor did I expect this distinguished honor, I accept your action not as a compliment to myself personally, but as a recognition of our great business interests. I beg to assure you the compliment is appreciated, and I thank you for it. In accepting the important position, I have many misgivings as to my ability to perform the duties involved satisfactorily and only do so with the understanding that other members of the committee will not only assist, but give me the benefit of their superior experience, judgment and energy in conducting the campaign. It is my good fortune to have known Mr. Blaine intimately over thirty years. I have watched his career during that time with unusual interest, and I have never known anyone to be accuated by purer motives or governed by a higher standard of morals. His lofty patriotism and splendid abilites are recognized and acknowledged everywhere. He is always on the American side of every question. These virtues and these accomplishments account for his wonderful magnetism and for his nearness to the heart of the American people. I have not much of a personal acquantance with Gen. Logan, but who is there in this broad land who does not know his magnificent record as a soldier and his grand career as a statesman? The Democratic party must be held to its record on free trade and tariff for revenue only. Too many yet live who remember the languishment of trade, scant employment and poor wages burning of corn in the west for fuel because there was no other use for it under Democratic domination to vote for the party which threatens a return to that condition of affairs. Our people believe that reasonably prosperous times are attainable in this country. The working classes especially ask, claim and demand that they shall continue to have an opportunity to earn such wages as will enable them to live as American citizens should live. With such candidates, with such principles as are set forth in our platform, success is assured, victory will be ours in November as sure as the sun will bless us with its light.

At 3:15, after a recess, the chairman again called the committee to order. Secretary Fessenden read a communication from the Young Men's Republican club of New York city, suggesting that the club would be able to contribute to the election of Republican candidates in November. Senator Chaffee reported in behalf of the subcommittee to select headquarters in New York city, that 242 Fifth avenue could be secured. The report was accepted, and the subcommittee instructed to complete arrangements. The committee adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

met in the same room and was in session two hours with closed doors. Senator Chaffee was made permanent chairman of the executive committee and Col. Hooker permanent secretary. The committee delegated its full power to a subcommittee to act during recess, consisting of Chaffee, Elkins and Hobart. It is understood that these three gentlemen will supplement the work of the chairman on the active organizing and working force of the committee. This subcommittee resolved to add, under the power given by the general executive committee, the names of Conger of Ohio, and Clarkson of Iowa, to have more especially care of the committee's and party's work in the western states. The general executive committee adjourned at 5 o'clock, subject to the call of the subcommittee. The latter committee and the chairman will go to work at once on the organization details of the campaign. The financial committee also had a meeting this afternoon.

Spiritualism is gaining ground in Washington, and since the social season closed it has been the fashionable thing in society to employ mediums to hold seances in parlors. A good many ladies have had their faith in orthodoxy shaken by the tricks of the mediums, and [illegible] communion with the spirits is the most popular way of killing time.

BLAINE AT HOME.

The Young Congressman's Deliberate Ambition—Dinner Table Wit and Domestic Good Will.

Mr. E. V. Smalley writes from St. Paul to the Chicago Tribune his recollections of Mr Blaine in the early years of his public life. Mr. Smalley says: "I first knew Mr. Blaine in the Thirty-ninth congress—the one which met in 1865, just after the war closed. He had served in the preceding congress; but had only fairly got hold of the ways of legislation. In fact, he had made so little impression that Speaker Colfax put him well down toward the tail of the military committee—an absurd place for him, because he had always been a civilian. All the rest of the members, except two Democrats, were generals fresh from the field. Blaine's mouth was closed, for how could he pretend to any right to be heard on military matters in the presence of six brigadiers? Of course, he was uncomfortable. I was a clerk of the committee. Blaine appeared to take a liking to me because I was a newspaper man. I remember to have thought that if ever there was a born journalist it was that bright young congressman from Maine, who was a complete cyclopedia of political facts, and had a terse, interesting, paragraphy way of talking. He told me in the course of a confidential chat one day that session, when the proceedings in the house were dull and we sat alone in the committee room by a blazing wood fire, that he meant to get upon the appropriations committee in the next congress, and in the following congress he hoped to get a chairmanship. Then, he said, he should look forward to the speakership. It all came about as he had planned, only he became speaker two years sooner than he had hoped would be possible. He was always a man who laid out his line of life in advance and worked up to it. There was nothing accidental in his career.

At first he lived in Washington in a nomadic sort of way—in hotels or boarding houses, as do most congressmen—but when he was elected speaker he bought a house on Fifteenth street, in the best quarter of the town. Opposite lived Hamilton Fish, then secretary of state; next door lived Fernando Wood; Gen. Sherman's house was only a few doors distant; and Gen. Butler could be found just around the corner. Blaine's house was thought a handsome one at that time, but it was only a plain brick structure in a row, and it cuts no sort of a figure in these days when big mansions in the Queen Anne, Elizabethan, Norman, and I know not how many other styles abound at the capital. There were two big parlors on the first floor, and back of them a sitting-room and dining-room, and all four rooms connected by folding doors, so that the crowds that used to surge in at the speaker's official receptions were measurably well accommodated. In the belongings of this, his first Washington home, Blaine showed a fondness for engravings, for substantial furniture, and for books. He was much given to hospitality, and never appeared so happy as when entertaining a congenial dinner party at his big round table. For his dinner table talks he had an inexhaustible fund of anecdotes and witticisms. I never heard him tell the same story twice. He did not resemble in the least the hand organ type of man who has only one little set of tunes. Indeed, I think he might dispute with Henry Ward Beecher for the honor of being the most original man in America. No matter what the topic may be, he is sure to contribute to the conversation something particularly bright and entertaining.

When not entertaining friends at his own house he usually dined out. I remember to have warned him once of the perils of the diner-out—how many an eminent man had come to an untimely end by eating big dinners. He said he observed a strict rule at dinner parties—he took soup and roast beef, but no prepared dishes. No dessert, a little ice cream, and no wine save dry champaigne. By sticking closely to this dietary programme he could dine out every day in the week without injuring his digestion. In those days Blaine was not a great letter-writer, either with his own hand or vicariously through that of his secretary. He did not, like Garfield, reply to all the letters he received. He was a great newspaper-reader, and always knew the attitude of every really important journal in the country on the dominant issues of the day. He knew the history of these journals, too, and something of the men who made them, and if there was any power behind the chairs of their editors he was pretty sure to be informed about it. He was not accessible at all times and to all the world, as many men who cherish great political ambition think it necessary to be. The impassable black guardian of the hall door was never quite sure that Mr. Blaine was in, but he would see. If the visitor was not welcome he would manage to make him believe that the speaker had just gone out a few minutes before. This colored person had a fine instinct for discerning the men whom his master would probably wish to receive. They were shown into the front parlor; others waited in the hall.

In the Fifteenth street house Blaine lived while in Washington until after the death of Garfield. He had previously begun to build a huge, expensive red brick pile out on the P street circle, deeming himself comfortably rich at the time, and thinking the position of secretary of state carried with it duties of enlarged hospitality. The house was a mistake, as he soon found. He lived in it only about a year. As a private citizen it was much too large for his needs; beside, a considerable share of his fortune melted away in the great shrinkage in stocks, and he did not feel able to support the expensive establishment which the house demanded. He considered himself very fortunate to be able to lease it for a sum which amounted to 6 per cent on its cost. Then he condensed his household into a dwelling of moderate capacity, facing on Lafayette square. From his front windows he could see the White House through the trees in the pretty park. Not many of his own belongings came with this house save his books and a few pictures. In it he did most of the work on his "Twenty Years of Congress," living as retired as his friends would let him, and getting his exercise mainly from a daily morning walk to the capitol, whither he went to consult the books in the congressional library.

All this time his real home, if the attachments of himself and the members of his family were considered, was the large, old-fashioned, broad-fronted white house, with its green blinds, its maples, and its grassy yard, which stands on a quiet, shady street near the state capitol, in Augusta, Me. This house typifies the well-to-do phase of village life in New England as it expressed itself in architecture, before the recent mania for colors, angles, balconies, and fanciful forms came in. It represents the plainness, solidity and conservatism of the last generation. Mr. Blaine has modified it very little, and not at all at the expense of its sober, old-time appearance. He has added two or three rooms in the rear—one large library, which is his work room, and which during the many hard fights he waged with the [illegible] when he was chairman of the state Republican committee used to be a rendezvous for his lieutenants from all parts of the state. In the course of two Maine campaigns I saw a good deal of Mr. Blaine. He was the busiest man in the state, hurrying from county to county to address mass meetings, writing telegrams on the trains, getting a pocketful of dispatches at every town, dictating letters at night to his secretary, yet always cheerful and companionable, and with a good joke or anecdote ready to enliven every occasion. He knew the whole state as well as his own dooryard, and was acquainted with the leading men in every town. He brought the canvass down to the school districts. The hurrah work of processions, banners and big meetings he estimated at its proper value, but he never depended on it to produce results. The real business of a campaign was to perfect local organizations, ascertain who were the doubtful voters and bring argument and personal influence to bear upon them through the efforts of their Republican neighbors.

Saturdays we special correspondents used to manage to get back to Augusta if we could to spend a quiet Sunday afternoon with Blaine at his house. In the evening some musical friends of the family would usually come in, and we had a good time singing old fashioned church tunes, for which Blaine had a fondness, and in which he would join with his children and with all the members of the company who could make any show of a voice.

Blaine has always had a dislike of being interviewed, perhaps because he has himself been behind the scenes of a newspaper office. Yet he has put more of his own ideas in the press of the country than any other man in public life. His way is to treat journalists with perfect frankness and good-fellowship, giving them his opinions freely and the benefit of his knowledge on all public questions, but to have an understanding with them that they are to use what he tells them in any way they like, provided they do not bring in [illegible] from him.

FITZ JOHN PORTER.

The president on Wednesday returned to the House the Fitz John Porter bill with his objections.

Attorney General Brewster had submitted to the president in compliance with the latter's request, a long and carefully prepared opinion upon the bill for the restoration of Fitz John Porter to the army, in which he expressed the opinion that the bill is clearly unconstitutional. The President took the same view of the constitutionality of the bill and said:

There are other causes that defer me from giving this bill the sanction of my approval. The judgment of the court-martial, by which, more than twenty years since, Gen. Fitz John Porter was tried and convicted, was pronounced by a tribunal composed of nine general officers of distinguished character and ability. Its investigation of the charges of which it found accused guilty was thorough and conscientious, and its findings and sentence in due course of law approved by Abraham Lincoln, then president of the United States. Its legal competency, its jurisdiction of the accused and of the subjects all its proceedings, are matters which have never been brought in question. Its judgement therefore, is final and conclusive in its character. The supreme court of the United States has recently declared that a court martial such as this was "is the organism provided by law and clothed with the duty of administering justice in this class of cases. Its judgments, when approved, rest on the same basis, and are surrounded by the same considerations which give conclusiveness to the judgments of other tribunals, including as well the lowest as the highest." It follows, accordingly, that when a lawfully constituted court martial has duly declared its findings and its sentence, and the same have been duly approved, neither the president nor congress has any power to set them aside. The existence of such a power is not openly asserted, nor, perhaps, is it necessarily implied in the provisions of the bill which is before me, but when its enacting clauses are read in the light of the recitals of its preamble it will be seen that it seeks in effect the practical annulment of the findings and sentence of a competent court martial. A conclusion at variance with these findings has been reached after investigation by a board consisting of three officers of the army. This board was not created in pursuance of any statutory authority, and was powerless to compel the attendance of witnesses or to pronounce judgment which could be lawfully exercised. The officers who composed it, in their report to the secretary of war, dated March 19, 1879, state that in their opinion "justice requires * * * such action, as may be necessary to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of the court martial in the case of Maj. Gen. Fitz John Porter, and to restore him to the position of which their sentence deprived him, such restoration to take effect from the date of his dismissal from the service." The provisions of the bill now under consideration are avowedly based on the assumption that the findings of the court martial have been discovered to be erroneous. But it will be borne in mind that the investigation which is claimed to have resulted in this discovery was made many years after the event to which these findings related, and under circumstances that made it impossible to reproduce the evidence on which they were based. It seems to me that the proposed legislation would establish a dangerous precedent, calculated to imperil in no small measure the binding force and effect of judgments of various tribunals established under any constitution and laws. I have already, in the exercise of the pardoning power with which the president is vested, remitted the continuing penalty that made it impossible for Fitz John Porter to hold an office of trust or profit under the government of the United States, but I am unwilling to give my sanction to any legislation which shall practically annul and set at naught the solemn and deliberate conclusions of the tribunal by which he was convicted, and of the president by whom its findings were examined and approved.

[Signed,] CHESTER A. ARTHUR,
Executive Mansion, July 2, 1884.

When the veto was read in the house, Gen. Slocum then rose and asked if it was in order to call for a vote on the passage of the bill over the president's veto. The speaker replied that under the constitution he was required at once to present the bill to the house for a vote upon it, unless the house chose to take some other action. He then asked if the vote should be by yeas and nays, when Mr. Tucker and Gen. Keifer arose simultaneously and said that the constitution required that it should be by yeas and nays. The clerk then called the roll and the vote proceeded with profound attention from both sides. The bill received the constitutional majority of two-thirds 168 to 78.

The affirmative vote on the bill is exactly fifteen less than that on the bill when it originally passed the house. The negative vote is just the same. Fifteen Republicans voted with the Democrats, and the Democrats voted solidly for the bill. The fifteen Republicans were: Messrs Bayne of Pennsylvania, Belford of Colorado, Burleigh of New York, Jeffords of Mississippi, Laird of Nebraska, Long and Lyman of Massachusetts, Phelps of New Jersey, Poland of Vermont, Ranney of Massachusetts, Ray of New York, Rockwell of Massachusetts, and, A. Herr Smith of Pennsylvania. Two-thirds majority was not obtained in the senate and therefore Gen. Porter will have to "wait a litte longer."

Monthly Report in National Finances.

The government fiscal year closed on the 30th of June, and the public debt statement shows a reduction of $101,000,000, against a reduction of $138,000,000 during the previous year ending June 30, 1883. An examination of the interest-bearing debt shows, however, that the actual reduction during the year has been nearly $116,000,000, which represents a permanent annual saving in the interest account of over three and a quarter million.

The gold coin and gold bullion found is now nearly $235,000,000, an increase since June 1 of about $3,000,000. While, however, this fund shows an increase of $3,000,000 for the month, there has been a decrease in the amount of gold owned by the treasury of $4,300,000. The outstanding gold certificates having increased since June 1 $12,000,000; the amount of these certificates now outstanding is over $70,000,000, and the amount of gold in the treasury not covered by certificates in $133,720,014. The number of silver dollars now on hand is $183,550,916—an increase of nearly $3,000,000 for the month, and since July 1, 1883, of $23,646,897. The amount of silver certificates outstanding is $96,420,000, thus leaving the number of silver dollars not covered by certificates over $39,000,000—an increase since June 1 of nearly $4,000,000.

The amount of bonds now held to secure national bank circulation is $334,000,000, against $357,000,000 one year ago, thus showing a withdrawal of bank circulation for the year of about $20,000,000. The total receipts for the year were $345,000,000, against $398,000,000 for the preceding year—a difference of $50,000,000 in round numbers. During the discussion of the tariff bill in congress it was estimated that the passage of the revenue bill then pending would work a reduction of about $70,000,000 per annum. The actual reduction in these two sources as shown by figures reported to the treasury department is a few thousand short of $42,000,000, the reduction in customs having been $9,000,000 and internal revenue, $23,000,000.

The Penalty of Smuggling in Manitoba.

Winnipeg, Man., Special: S. C. Ephenstein Bros., wholesale jewelers of Chicago, were arrested at St Vincent recently for smuggling thirteen gold watches across the line. He chose Dominion day to cross the line as the customs department had announced recently that its officers would not attend trains after hours and on holidays. When the train reached St. Boniface, opposite Winnipeg, Ephenstein jumped from the train and made a dash for liberty. He was pursued by Detective Hayden, who had him in charge. After a long race Hayden captured his man, who got stuck between two gravel cars. Ephenstein was safely caged in the police station, and was this morning fined $100 and costs. His goods, valued at $1,000, were confiscated.

Failures in Six Months.

The failures for six months ended July 1, 1884, are reported by R. G. Dun & Co., to number 5,510, compared with 4,637 for the first six months of 1883. The liabilities of the first half foot up to the enormous sum of 124,000,000, compared with $66,000,000 for the same period [illegible] the great growth of liabilities is directly traceable by the agency to the recent panic, which mainly centered in New York city. The agency claim that the legitimate business of the country [illegible] results from these failures, that a condition of [illegible] has been reached, and that the balance of the year may witness a [illegible] months.

Personal Mention.

Mr. Brouson Alcott attributes his long life to subsistence on dry Concord Philosophy and plain vegetables. But there is Mrs. Baker of Taylorsville, Va., who is more than a dozen years Mr. Alcott's senior, and she has made a practice of eating meat and drinking a dozen cups of strong coffee every day. The coffee might have killed old Alcott, but certain it is that Mrs. Baker would have starved to death long ago on a diet of Concord philosophy and baked potatoes.

Some time since Miss Lizzie Newmen stopped in a doorway on Second street, Louisville, during a shower. A pleasant-voiced lady noticed her standing there and invited her up stairs. Miss Newman took advantage of the offer. Up stairs she met William Crittenden, a man who had lost both eyes while herding cattle on the plains of Texas. Crittenden thought it would be pleasant to court the girl, and make love to her desperately. What he said jokingly, she understood in hard earnest. Before they separated Crittenden had changed his mind, and asked the girl seriously to marry him. She accepted the offer, and on the next night at 9 oclock the two were united by Justice John Gosnell.

Following is a list of the prominent millionaires of the United States: William H. Vanderbilt, $200,000,000; Fair, of California, $50,000,000; Flood of California, $50,000,000; Mackay, of California, $50,000,000; August Belmont, $30,000,000; Senator Sharon, $15,000,000; Senator Jones, $20,000,000; Astor, of New York, $75,000,000; James G. Bennett, $30,000,000; Jay Gould, $65,000,000; S. J. Tilden, $25,000,000; Solon Humphreys, $15,000,000; Sidney Dillon, $15,000,000; Edward Clark, $25,000,000; Oakes Ames, Jr., $15,000,000; Perry H. Smith of Chicago, $15,000,000; Pierre Lorillard, $15,000,000.

Touching her recent marriage, Mrs. Ella Wheeler-Wilcox writes to a Chicago friend as follows: "I have been exceedingly surprised and pained at the bad taste which the press at large displayed in reference to this occurrence in my life. All the severe and often cruel criticisms relative to my book I looked upon as so many dollars, and accepted them with good grace. But in this event which concerned my private life and most sacred feelings, I have felt that I deserved greater courtesy from the newspapers, especially as all that has been written concerning me must be seen and read by strangers who are to be my future associates, and must naturally influence their impressions of me."

Off Days.

Thousands and thousands of men and women have their off days—they are not sick enough to give up, relinquish their duties and go to bed, but as one describes it:

"I feel so drowsy and weary—my head aches."
"I never had a meaner feeling in my life."
"My stomach does not feel right."
"Don't know what is the matter with me, but do not feel well."
"I have a half feeling of nausea."
"Too cold one minute and too warm the next."
"To use a slang phrase, 'I'm all broke up.'"

The above and hundreds of similar expressions are heard daily, with some there is a known cause, others cannot account for the feeling. It may originate from different reasons, but from whatever cause, nature requires assistance and you can immediately render the assistance and dispel all these unpleasant symptoms. By using Burdock Blood Bitters take them immediately on the appearance of the unpleasant feeling.

You will feel better in half-an-hour.
Take it any time before or after meals.
If before you will enjoy your meal better.
If after it will aid digestion.

It is a medicine you can take at any time with good results, can be taken by the prattling child, or the feeble and tottering old man or woman. Composed of roots and herbs there is nothing in its composition that will injure the most delicate constitution, pleasant in taste and effect, will do you good.

Maria Jeanneret, one of the most noted criminals of the age, died in prison at Geneva, Switzerland, recently. She was an extensive secret poisoner, having caused the death of no less than nine prominent people, with a probability of scores of others. She belonged to an honorable family, was exemplary in her manners, and apparently kind-hearted, so much so that she frequently volunteered her assistance in cases of sickness. She gave her patients the greatest attention, yet they generally died. Belladona was the drug upon which she relied to do the work. When convicted, capital punishment had been abolished, and she was sentenced for life.

PAIN!

Pain is supposed to be the lot of us poor mortals, as inevitable as death, and liable at any time to come upon us. Therefore it is important that remedial agents should be at hand to be used in an emergency, when we are made to feel the excruciating agonies of pain, or the depressing influence of disease. Such a remedial agent exists in that old Reliable Family Remedy,

May mean "Poisoned with Potash." This is the case with hundreds who have been unwise enough to take Sarsaparillas, Potash mixtures, etc., until digestion is almost fatally impaired. Swift's Specific is a vegetable remedy, and restores the system to health and builds up the waste made by those poisons.

"I was suffering with Blood Poison, and treated several months with Mercury and Potash, only to make me worse. The Potash took away my appetite and gave me dyspepsia, and both gave me rheumatism. I then took Sarsaparillas, etc. All these Sarsaparilla mixtures have Potash in them. This made me still worse, as it drove the poison farther into my system. A friend insisted I should take Swift's Specific, and it cured me of the Blood Poison, drove the Mercury and Potash out of my system, and to-day I am as well as I ever was.

GEO. O. WELLMAN, JR., Salem, Mass.

John A. Smith, the largest merchant in Gainesville, Ga., says: "I suffered for years from the combined effects of Erysipelas and Eczema. I continued to grow worse under medical treatment and by taking medicine containing Potash. S. S. S. cured me thoroughly and absolutely. My appetite, strength and flesh returned as I was cured with it."

An Open Secret.

The fact is well understood that the MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT is by far the best external known for man or beast. The reason why becomes an "open secret" when we explain that "Mustang" penetrates skin, flesh and muscle to the very bone, removing all disease and soreness. No other liniment does this, hence none other is so largely used or does such worlds of good.

Vital Questions!!!

Ask the most eminent physician

GUNS

THE BRIDE.

FROM "A BALLAD OF A WEDDING," BY SIR JOHN SUCKLING.

The maid, and thereby hangs a tale,
For such a maid no Whitsun ale
Could ever yet produce;
No grape that's kindly ripe could be
So round, so plump, so soft as she,
Nor half so full of juice.

Her finger was so small, the ring
Would not stay on, which they did bring;
It was too wide a peck;
And, to say truth—for out it must—
It looked like the great collar—just
About our young colt's neck.

Her feet beneath her petticoat,
Like little mice, stole in and out,
As if they feared the light;
But oh, she dances such a way!
No sun upon an Easter-day
Is half so fine a sight.

Her cheeks so rare a white was on,
No daisy makes comparison
(Who sees them is undone);
For streaks of red were mingled there,
Such as are on a Cath'rine pear,
The side that's next the sun.

Her lips were red; and one was thin,
Compared to that was next her chin,
Some bee had stung it newly;
But, Dick, her eyes so guard her face,
I durst no more upon them gaze
Than on the sun in July.

Her mouth so small, when she does speak,
Thou'dst swear her words her teeth did break,
That they might passage get;
But she so handled still the matter,
They came as good as ours, or better,
And are not spent a whit.

THE SHERIFF'S PERIL.

A Sketch From Life in a New Mexican Frontier Town.

From San Francisco Argonaut.

The inhabitants of the growing little town of Palmeo felt a laudable pride in their gallant young sheriff—a brawny, blonde-bearded hero, with the strength of a minor Hercules and the face of an Apollo Belvedere. As in all new frontier towns, there had been an early attempt on the part of the ruffianly element to take possession of the place, but the effort had been promptly suppressed by the energetic action of this dauntless arm of the law, whose ready revolver and unerring aim sent more than one outlaw, unshriven to his last account, while the messages of the Associated Press, flying over the country on the wings of the lightning, scored one more for brave Tom Haughton, the scourge and terror of New Mexican outlaws. Genial and warm-hearted, with a smile ever as ready for a friend as a frown for a foe, Sheriff Haughton was for the time the most popular man in the country within a radius of a hundred miles.

But Tom Houghton's life had another side. Down to the South of the town, a little removed from the wagon-road, which at that time formed the link of communication between Palmeo and the neighboring village stood a small abode house, facing the desolate plains. A rude brush fence formed its sole environment, but a feeble attempt at adornment appeared in the shape of two forbidding specimens of cactus, which bristled in the depths of five-gallon oil-cans at either side of the front door, a pink geranium, blossoming against the tawdry but scrupulously clean lace curtains at the window. Through the glass panes of the door, a woman's face, shrouded in a black shawl, was sometimes seen by chance passers-by. A quiet shrinking little creature, the offspring of a debased and degarded race, and motherless from early childhood, like many of her class she had become the plaything of vice before the meaning of virtue dawned upon her. She had made her advent in Palmeo along with the horses and dogs and other chattels of a saloon-keeper, and when one day, in a fit of more than customary brutal rage, her quondam master had beaten and kicked and thrust her into the street, Houghton had chanced along, and, moved by her helplessness and her tears, avowed himself her protector, and established her in the little abode. It was rumored, however, that when his first chivalrous heat had died away, he had been scarcely more kind to her than her former lord, and although the tenets of his New England manhood saved him from the degradation of striking a woman, he had treated her with a cold scorn, only less blighting in its influence on a woman's soul. Asserting no claim to respect, a stranger to the awakening and elevating force of human love, she was like some faithful animal, passively submitting to blows or caresses in her blind devotion.

When Tom Houghton had held the office of sheriff in Palmeo eighteen months, nine graves in the desolate burying-ground had been filled with victims of his unfailing aim. This somewhat wholesale slaughter of the criminal class commenced to be a subject of grave discussion among the sober and conservative citizens of the place, and they questioned whether it would not be wise, now that the town was becoming more allied to the civilized world, to adopt gentler measures for the suppression of crime. The knowledge of this incipient recoil of public opinion inspired the roughs of the town to a bold and daring resolve. Tom Houghton should pay with his own blood for the next of their number who fell by his hand.

Upon Houghton himself this relentless execution of vengeance upon the perpetrators of crime, after the first valorous impulse to preserve the peace and safety of the community had passed away, was exerting its inevitable and baleful influence. Like the hired soldier who engages in combat without the ennobling stimulus of a nation's need, the cruel instincts of his nature were developing to the exclusion of gentle and harmonizing traits.

An interregnum of peace and inactivity seemed to settle down upon Palmeo about this time. For several months Houghton loafed around the streets, disgusted with life and his calling, or in hours of confidence with his friends threatened to throw up altogether a position which had become a mere sinecure. It was with a sentiment little short of absolute delight that he started up one day at the announcement that a cowboy, fresh from the Rio Grande, had arrived in Palmeo, and, true to the time-honored custom, was proceeding to take possession of the town. Houghton dashed out into the street. A fusillade of shots re-echoed from the other end of the town, and the clatter of a horse's hoofs, drawing nearer and nearer, [illegible] brought into view a rough-looking rider with the inevitable sombrero around his [illegible] the brim with bad whisky, and [illegible] flourishing a revolver in [illegible] just as he levelled the weapon [illegible] house [illegible] his arms [illegible] single report rang through the summer air, and the rowdy tumbled from the saddle and lay motionless in the dust. A coroner's jury was hurriedly impaneled, the customary verdict rendered, and in less than three hours—they do such things expeditiously in frontier towns—the outlaw had added another to the graves in the fast growing populous cemetery.

The seeming apathy with which the dead "rustler's" friends received the news of his hurried demise boded ill. There was none of the usual exclamations of "Poor fellow. There was a heap of good in him, after all," or "Now, Tom, you might let him have his little fun. He was only shooting up the town." To a less fearless soul than Tom Houghton's the calm that succeeded would have appeared ominous. But Tom had no thought of danger, and would have scouted the suggestion. A few days later, as the little Mexican woman drew her shawl around her, and, slipping through back streets and lanes, made her way to the town well to fill her pail with water from its cool depths, she observed a couple of rough-looking fellows leaning against the curbing. This was not a sufficiently uncommon occurrence to attract her attention, but a few words she caught arrested her.

"Going out to see the fun?"

"What's up?"

"Don't you know? The boys have got Houghton out in the hollow back of the Two-mile House, and they say they'll roast him alive."

The men had given no more attention to the swarthy little woman, slowly and painfully drawing the heavy bucket from the deep well, than if she were one of the dogs that roamed the streets. They did not observe how her hand shook as she emptied its contents into her tin pail, nor how she tottered and swayed as if from some deadly physical weakness as she made her way across the street and disappeared around a corner. Once out of their sight, she dropped the pail on the ground and flew as if with winged feet to where she knew the county officers were located, hitherto forbidden ground to her feet. She caught at the arm of the first man she met.

"Oh, for the love of God"—she used an expression whose meaning she had never grasped until that moment—"save him."

The man was a stranger, just arrived from the East. He looked down upon her as upon some new and curious creation, whose type had failed to be presented to him heretofore. He turned to a friend who had just left his side: "Look here, Burnham. What does all this mean?"

The gentleman he addressed was one of the county officials. He came quickly to the spot.

"It is your sheriff—they have him down by the Two-mile House—do not wait, or it will be too late." She wrung her hands in a tearless anguish.

"Fact, Cap," asserted a bystander. "Not ten minutes ago some one came and told Houghton there was a row at the Two-mile House, and he went off alone—the crazy fool." In his excitement he sought the most natural relief—that of abusing the subject of his anxiety.

The eastern man, secretly somewhat elated at the opportunity thus afforded him by witnessing what promised to be so stirring a specimen of the tragical episodes of frontier life, insisted upon accompanying the posse of men who speedily organized for the rescue. He witnessed with exultation the short, sharp, decisive contest, and admired the cool courage of the man whom they found helplessly awaiting his fate at the hands of these modern brigands. The sun had long sank below the southwestern horizon, but a glow in the western sky that was like a lurid flame, cleaved the gathering darkness and touched with mischievous fingers the various physiognomies of the captured roughs. There were faces which, in their dusky tones and abandoned villainy, reminded an observer of a canvas of Velasquez; others partook of a certain rugged type which only missed the heroic by having too great an infusion of the brute; while a few would have been fair and prepossessing, but for certain tell-tale pencilings about the eyes. Foiled in a serious purpose, they were ready to treat the whole affair as a huge joke.

As some of the men prepared pinon torches to light their way back to town, and the prisoners were marshaled into line, the Eastern man turned to his friend: "Who is the woman?—his wife?"

"Not much." The speaker laughed carelessly, then added, in a graver tone, "One of those unfortunate alliances so common throughout New Mexico—unhallowed by either marriage, sacrament, or priest, which prevent a man from asking an honest woman's hand in wedlock, and cut him entirely aloft from family and friends."

An undertone of irritation might have been detected in the gentleman's voice. A fine impression the event of this day would leave on the mind of this friend, a man of influence, whose good will he had been striving to enlist in the interest of their little town.

Another ear caught the words. The color leaped like a flame into the woman's cheek, and burned there a consuming fire. For the first time in her life, a sense of what she had forfeited swept over her in one great wave of agony. She drew her shawl about her head, half-hiding her face in the folds, and was stealing away, when a hand detained her, and a voice, altered from its customary tone of command into a certain indefinable tenderness, checked her.

Tom Houghton had been doing some hard thinking in the last hour. Outwardly calm and collected, and resigned to the wretched fate before him, the glimpse of his dusky face over the bank of the ravine had appeared to him like a symbol of hope.

"Don't go home yet. I shall be ready in a moment."

"Not home. It is not there I am going."

She spoke with the quaint precision acquired in the use of a foreign tongue, but the undertone of pain did not escape his attention.

"What does this mean? Would you leave me?"

They had passed out of hearing of the rest, and stood, two dark figures, silhouetted against the sunset sky.

"Oh, Tom, you know—you must know," moaned the girl, drawing her breath in short, hard gasps like some hunted creature panting away its life-blood. She reached out her hands and grasped the bough of a low-spreading mesquite, unmindful of the thorns which plowed their way into her flesh. "I am not like other women, the wives of your friends—not any honest woman—O God in heaven! It is a shameful thing I am. We must live like this no longer. I will go far away. Tom, tell me it is not true," she cried imploringly.

He had listened to her, startled and dismayed. To him it seemed as though his stifled conscience had taken voice and form, and confronted him in accusation.

"It is true," he said, slowly and gravely, "but the sin is mine, not yours. I knew. Go back to the house," he added gently. "You have a right there. I will stay away."

She heard him as one hearkens to a voice remote and far away. The barriers which the sudden consciousness of shame had raised between the two seemed to have placed them an infinite distance apart. Less from deliberate acquiescence than a blind instinct of obedience, she turned and walked slowly in the direction of town. The man stood and watched her until the sound of her light footfall had died away.

All that night and the next day she remained lying on the bed, with her face hidden in the pillow or crept to the door to steal furtive glances down to the road, in the half hope of seeing a well-known figure approaching. But only the dusty cloud which told of a passing horseman or the canopied wagon-tops of a Mexican train from over the range greeted her despairing vision. Late in the afternoon she suddenly roused from her lethargy, lifting her head with a startled look, as if through some subtile current of communication a thrilling revelation had come to her.

Rising to a sitting posture, and resting her forehead in the palm of her hand, her eyes assumed a far-away look, and she seemed lost in reflection. Then she went to a little chest on the other side of the room—a curious box of dark foreign wood, its corners bound with metal. Unlocking it, she took out a faded lawn dress of fine texture, an embroidered collar of dainty needlework, and a small gold pin with a circlet of pearls in the center—sacred relics of the dead mother, which, through the hardships of a miserable life, she had faithfully preserved. She laid her cheek for a momen, against the soft folds of the dress, as if into her heart had been born a new yearning for the young mother whose face had long ago faded from her memory.

Washing the tear-stains from her face, she combed out her long hair; arranging it with the most scrupulous care. Arrayed in the cool, sheer dress, with the delicate collar and simple pin at her throat, she seemed the embodiment of womanly purity and modesty. For an instant her hand hovered doubtfully over one of the pink geranium blossoms in the window, when she drew it suddenly back, as if stung anew by some rankling remembrance; a spark of color leaped into her cheek which rivaled the crimson heart of the blossom, and her dark hair remained without any ornament save its own glossy lustre.

Sitting beside the window, her head inclined slightly forward in an attitude of listening, the hours dragged by. She heard the rumble of hay-wagons and the sharp cry of Mexican drivers as they urged the unwilling oxen along the scorching road. The crack of a hunters rifle resounded through the stillness, and a great heron, with crippled wing, soared past her window. Shortly after a party of horsemen galloped swiftly by in the direction of the plains. As the day waned, and other sounds ceased, the loud, shrill cry of a locust fell upon the air. As the sun sank behind a distant mountain range, gilding its crest with a surpassing glory her intent ear caught a familiar sound. Her very breath seemed stilled as she listened to the well-known tread, no longer nearing the house cautiously and stealthily, but each footfall ringing distinctly upon the ground, approaching in the bold consciousness of an honest purpose.

She had bent her head forward, and did not raise it as he opened the door and walked straight to her side. He did not offer to kiss the drooping face, or even to lay his hand with caressing touch upon her shoulder; but as she looked up his eyes met hers with a pure and steady light.

"Do you know what I have come for?"

"Yes." Her voice was like a breath.

He gazed long and searchingly into her upturned face before he spoke again. A singular and startling change had passed over it in the last twenty-four hours. The dwarfed and stunted soul, in the travail of pain, had unfolded its petals to the light, and her dark eyes were luminous with the light of pure, womanly love.

"Than come."

She rose to her feet, and as she stood before him a wave of emotion passed over her features, and tranformed them—the glad rejoicing of the woman in the triumph of her lover's manhood.

There was a small gathering of people in the common church of the place. Some rumor of the approaching ceremony had spread abroad, and, moved by various impulses, different ones had strolled to the sanctuary. The pastor, a gray-bearded man, performed his offices with unusual gravity, and as the bridal pair left the altar, many bent eagerly forward, to wonder at the sweet solemnity of the woman's face and the proud serenity of the man. A little child ran forward and thrust a small bunch of flowers into the bride's hand—a poor little cluster of blossoms, coaxed from the desert soil with infinite labor and care. The little one wondered at the sudden gush of tears, that rewarded his gift, and the passionate kiss which the woman, suddenly stooping down, left on his little face. Near the door stood a stranger, the Eastern visitor, who had so attentively viewed the proceedings of the previous night. New to the habits and characteristics of the community, he was receptive to much that passed unheeded by those whom custom had made callous. He had uncovered his head at the approach of the bridal couple, and, as his calm gaze fell upon the young sheriff, the latter read in his eyes a tribute and a benison.

Not long since Mr. J. Russel Lowell was present at a London dinner at which he did not expect to speak, and hence he was not prepared. Toward the end of the feast, however, the toastmaster approached him, and put into his hands the usual slip of paper, which in nine cases out of ten provokes immediate indisposition. In real or feigned horror the American minister exclaimed: "What is it? Am I to speak? Why on earth didn't you give me notice?" "Bless you," replied the toastmaster, "we never do, or else we would have a gent talking all night."

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Cooking Recipes.

SUMMER DRINK.—The following I have found to be a very good substitute for lemonade: Peel and cut into inch lengths two stalks of rhubarb, pour over a coffee cup of boiling water, sweeten to taste, and add a bit of thin lemon peel. Let stand until cold. Add a piece of ice if you have it. The quantity of rhubarb is sufficient for only one glass.

CURRANT CATSUP.—Four pounds of fully-ripe currants and one-half pound of white sugar. Cook slowly until quite thick, then add a large spoonful of ground cinnamon, a teaspoonful of ground cloves, half of a teaspoonful of black pepper, two teaspoonfuls of salt, and a pint of vinegar. Cook 20 minutes longer—careful not to burn—then bottle for use.

POTATO SALAD.—Boil a quart of potatoes till just done, peel and cut in very thin slices. When cool mix them with a gill of vinegar, a gill of melted butter or sweet oil, a small onion chopped very fine, and salt to taste. Mustard and pepper can be added if desired. A sour, mellow apple peeled and chopped fine, is a pleasant addition.

LETTUCE SALAD.—For four heads of lettuce of medium size boil two eggs ten minutes, then place them at once in cold water. This will make the shell peal off easily. Mash the eggs in a plate, pour over them two tablespoonfuls of salad oil or melted butter, a tablespoonful of made mustard, a little salt and pepper; mix thoroughly. Pick over the lettuce carefully, rinse thoroughly and drain; pour over it half a gill of vinegar, sprinkle on a tablespoonful of sugar; cut it fine and mix with the other ingredients. Taste it and add whatever conliment it lacks.

Refreshing Summer Beverages.

There is nothing more refreshing in hot weather than a cooling drink. Nature demands and should have more liquid than in winter, to supply the moisture that is lost by evaporation; and while a quantity of ice-water taken when one is heated by exercise is injurious, a moderate amount of some palatable fluid is positively beneficial. The following receipts have been tested many times and may be relied upon as trustworthy guides. Some of the beverages described are very suitable for small evening parties when it is not convenient to provide coffee, and wine is inadmissable.

Boston cream—Put into a preserving-bottle five quarts of water and four pounds of granulated sugar; let it come to a brisk boil; when cool add four ounces of tartaric acid, and one ounce or two tablespoonfuls of essence of lemon; when perfectly cold, stir in the whites of six eggs beaten to a stiff froth, and bottle the mixture for use. Three tablespoonfuls of the cream is sufficient for a glass of water; add a small pinch of carbonate of soda to make it foam.

Strawberry or raspberry acid—Take two and a half ounces of citric acid, sprinkle it over six quarts of the fruit, add one pint of water, and let the mixture stand for twenty-four hours; pour off the liquid slowly, and to each pint add one and a half pounds of white sugar; stir every day for a week, until the sugar is dissolved, then bottle, but do not cork for a day or two.

Raspberry vinegar—Put the quantity of raspberries to be used in an earthen vessel, and cover them with good cider vinegar; let them stand one night then squeeze them in a stout cloth—a coarse kitchen towel answers admirably; to each pound of juice add one pound of white sugar; let it boil for five minutes after it comes to the boiling point (if boiled too long it is apt to jelly); skim, bottle and seal tightly.

Lemon syrup—Put in a preserving-bottle three pounds of white sugar, and cover with one quart of water, and let it boil until it is a clear syrup, stirring frequently; when cool, add one ounce of citric acid and two teaspoonfuls of oil of lemon; bottle immediately.

Ginger Beer—Take an ounce and a half of root ginger, bruise it, and put it in a preserving bottle; add three lemons sliced, one handful of hops, and two quarts of cold water; let the mixture boil slowly for two hours. While it is boiling, put in a larger jar three pounds of sugar, one ounce of cream of tartar, ten quarts of lukewarm water, one cup of yeast, and the whites of three eggs. Pour the hot liquid over this, and let it stand for a day before bottling; fasten the corks securely with strings.

Hop Beer—Put three gallons of water into a bell-metal or porcelain-lined preserving kettle; and two handfuls of hops; after boiling for half an hour, put in one cup of wheat bran and one quart of molasses; let it boil for fifteen minutes longer; when it is milkwarm add one teaspoonful of light yeast. Set the mixture in a warm place to ferment for a day and night, after which it may be bottled; secure the corks with wire or string, and lay the bottles on the side in a cool place.

Mead—Boil well together there pounds of sugar and one quart of water; when cool, add one ounce of tartaric acid, and vanilla to taste. It is ready for use at once; if it is to be kept, bottle and cork securely. When used, put three tablespoonfuls in a tumbler, add a quarter of a teaspoonful of bicarbonate of soda, and fill the glass with ice-water.

Koumiss—Besides being a delicious beverage to those who like it, koumiss is invaluable for use in sickness. Invalids who could retain nothing else have lived upon it for weeks, and its nourishing properties make it desirable for any one who from loss of appetite cannot take a sufficient quanity of food. The original koumiss, kumys, as the Russians call it, was made by the Calmucks, and obtained by fermenting the whey of mares' milk. To make it, take one quart of cows milk, add two heaping tablespoonfuls of sugar, and one and a half tablespoonfuls of yeast. Set this mixture in an earthen pan near the fire, until the bubbles rise on the top; stir it down, and bottle, filling the bottles not quite full; fasten the cork firmly with wire or stout string. If wanted for use within three days, keep in a temperature of sixty-five degrees; it is better if allowed to stand for a week in a temperature of forty-five degrees. It must be opened with a spigot like a champagne tap, as the contents of the bottle are likely to be lost if the cork is drawn.

To Break up a Sitter.

This high art is studied by men, women and children the country over during the spring and early summer. Each one has as different method, and the results vary in success according to the common sense that enters into business. One says "Duck her;" another says "Give her a throw," and a third "Tie her to a stake near the barn walk, and scare her up every time you pass." This last plan caps the climax. Now, let us say right here, Never under any consideration scare your fowls, even should they be found in the flower bed, for the fowls and flowers should be kept separate to begin with; and always treat your birds gently. We never are cured of our odd ways by any quick methods. All is needed is imprisonment in a strange place. A few days' rest in this way does the fowl good, and she will return to her laying greatly benefited. Bear, in mind that this is an effort at reproduction, and this very obstinacy marks a first-class sitter, which you prized so highly early in the season. Besides this, the rough treatment is liable to cause permanent injury, and the disabling of even one choice fowl will make a difference in your feeling that outweighs all pecuniary considerations, if you are fit to own a domestic animal of any kind.—Poultry World.

General Farming Information.

Any cow can be milked dry in a few weeks by irregular milking, sometimes at intervals of twenty-four hours and sometimes of six. Separation form her usual company, a change to new location, a strange milker, and above all, a blustering manner and scolding voice, are sources of irritation that more or less impair the milking qualities of a cow.—Indiana Farmer.

In reply to the query "What quantity of milk should a cow give to be considered profitable?" a well-known dairyman answers, 4,500 pounds; 2,800 pounds for the first 100 days, 1,000 pounds in the 100 days following, and 700 pounds between the completion of that time and drying off. Prof. Brown of Canada, in reply to a similar question, puts the figures at 4,000 pounds for 200 days, and as much as possible in the subsequent 165 days, and that every 100 pounds of milk should make three and one-half pounds of butter.

In regard to trimming raspberry bushes a correspondent of the Indian Farmer says: "They should never be allowed to grow long and slender. This summer when the new sprouts get about three to three and a half feet high pinch off the tips or cut with corn knife, and don't wait till berries are ripe and gone, or they will be long and slender again. I don't think it a good plan to take out the old wood in fall, but do it now, and also cut off the laterals now, whether ends are dead or not. Cut back to six or twelve inches of main stalk."

Bloody milk is caused by the congestion of the udder and the fine net-work of milk ducts. The glands secrete blood instead of milk. The only effective treatment is to reduce the feed, giving only a bran mash, and no corn meal, and even the pasture should be light. Give a cooling laxative, as a pound of Epsom salts. Give also one ounce of nitrate of potash every second day for a week. Bathe the udder with cold water after milking and keep the cow quiet. A cow once thus affected will probably prove more profitable for beef than milk.

The number of Jerseys, Shorthorns and Holsteins sold by auction in the United States during the year 1883, together with the average price each class received, according to a report furnished the National Live-Stock Journal, adds up as follows: Shorthorn, 3284, at an average rate of $205.56; 239 head of Holsteins brought an average of $373.60 each. The number of Jerseys sold under the hammer numbers 1688, and the average price received was $409.01.

According to Mr. Leo Grindon, who recently referred to the subject at Manchester, England, not less than about 100,000 flower-bearing plants are known to botanists, and not more than 10,000 of them—including five hundred kinds of fruit trees, all sorts of vegetables, timber trees, plants yielding fibre for clothing, etc.,—can be used to be of direct service to man. He thinks there may be about five thousand plants which are more or less poisonous and hurtful, and it is a surprising and important fact that many of the deadly plants are useful medicines in the hands of competent physicians.

Conditions for Cranberry Culture.

Cranberries can be grown in any place where proper conditions can be secured for them. Those conditions are a low-lying piece of ground that can be flooded at will, and can also be kept from flooding when necessary. A peaty flat, with water 10 to 12 inches below the surface, but with a supply so it can be raised one or two feet above the surface, is the best place. Any one having such a place can prepare it by cutting off all weeds, bushes or turf if it is sodded; then applying from three to six or eight inches of clean sand. A dam should be put in, so that by inserting gates the water can be raised as before mentioned. Plant the cuttings (portions of of vines) by placing them in shallow marks and covering them a half inch deep. All weeds should be kept entirely out, and when winter comes the gates should be closed, and the plantation flooded, remaining so until about the last of May or first of June, or until all danger of frost is passed, as frost is very destructive to blossoms or fruit. Flooding is also very useful at any time, should insects attack fruit or vines. The fruit should be gathered by picking, and never with rakes, as these greatly injure the vines.—Rural New Yorker.

Beecher on Fancy Farming.

One of the most perfectly free and easy, unconventional, characteristic and interesting of Mr. Beecher's recent utterances, was an off-hand talk before the Storrs Agricultural school, in Mansfield, Connecticut. There are thousands of personal friends or admirers of Mr. Beecher, acquainted with the peculiar economics of his fancy farming, who will enjoy the following neat and comprehensive "confession and avoidance," by him, viz:

Next we find the much derided and improperly derided "fancy farming," (I am not speaking of any 'round here.) [Laughter.] A gentleman must have two stores in the city to support one farm in the country. He has fancy barns, fancy stock, fancy poultry, fancy stone walls. I am one of 'em. It takes six months of lecturing to pay for six months of farming. Plain farmers laugh at all this. But, after all, it is a good thing, for men with money may thus show farmers without money how such things can be done. Since I came to Peekskill every farm around that neighborhood has increased in market-value twenty-five per cent. They have better farms, better stock. The fancy farmer is the fool that makes all the neighborhood wise. Let us speak kindly of the fancy farmer.

Raising Calves.

Professor Knapp, in speaking of the calf before the Illinois Dairymen's Association, said: "If little grass and hay and considerable corn be fed during the first year, a limited capacity of the stomach will very naturally be developed and a tendency to thrive only under grain conditions. Such an animal is a poor grazer and a light hay feeder. Upon the other hand, if considerable wheat, bran and oats be fed, with abundance of milk, grass and hay, the tendency will be to produce a large stomach, with a well sprung rib, fine head and short legs, while rapid growth will be secured. Such an animal will give a large flow of milk and keep in fair flesh upon pasture alone, and when dry will winter well upon hay. This is of great importance to the farmer, as a ton is worth only about twenty-five per cent. more than a ton of the best meadow hay for food. The best hay at $4 per ton would be equal to four at $5, or fourteen cents per bushel. Hay contains an abundance of nutritive material to support an animal in high condition. The question is, whether the animal will eat and can digest a sufficient quantity. This depends upon the hay and the capacity of the stomach.

How the Boys Got Their Tobacky.

Unanimous as the people of South Carolina are supposed to have been in favor of secession, there were some loyal men among them. I remember one specimen, who, although Irish by birth, has spent his best years in the State. He was now hard on to 60 years of age, and fairly well off for a man of his station in life. He was a dray-man and owned quite a number of teams, which he let for hire. When Capt. Foster commenced work on Fort Moultrie a good deal of hauling had to be done, and McInerry, the drayman, willingly let his carts for the purpose. This displeased the rebels, and a committee waited upon him and demanded that he withdraw his teams. The committee reminded him that he was a citizen of South Carolina, and that patriotism demanded that he should not help the enemies of his state. "A citizen in South Caroliny is it?" replied the drayman. "Faith, and do ye suppose I crassed the broad Atlantic to become a citizen of only one Shate?" Of course McInerry's motives may not have been unmixed with mercenary considerations in that transaction, but the following is believed to be pure. There was a tobacco famine in Sumter. A piece of tobacco was almost worth its weight in gold. This condition of ours had got abroad in some way, or lovers of the weed had guessed at it, and one generous donation was received from a leading manufacturer in New York. But that supply was exhausted, and we were as badly off as ever again. One Sunday a small boat was observed leaving Sullivan's Island and coming in the direction of Sumter. It had no white flag, and contained only three men. When it got within 500 yards of the fort it was hailed by the sentinel and ordered off, a shot being fired in front of it as a warning. The boat stopped, and the figure in the stern-sheet commenced gesticulating violently, and no doubt shouting, although we could not make out what he said. At last he seemed to give it up. He ceased gesticulating and sat down. Then some inexplicable proceedings were indulged in, and presently a large white flag was displayed, and the rowers resumed pulling toward the fort. The sentinel reported, "Flag of truce approaching," and the officer of the day ordered a boat away to receive it. But the flag of truce was too quick for him. While he was yet talking it came sweeping around the corner of the fort and in an instant had hold of the wharf with a boat-hook. The officer of the day was furious at this irregular proceeding. He ordered the boat to cast off at once on pain of being fired into. "Fire away if ye loike and divil a hair I care!" said McInerry, for he it was in the stern-sheets of the boat. "Do ye suppose that afther ruining my Sunday shirt by tearing the tail off for a white flag that I'm going to be driven away like a dog without givin' the boys the tobacky?" Meantime he was throwing plugs of tobacco ashore to the men. After distributing in this way a good armful of navy plug he dropped away without waiting for thanks, and the officer of the day promptly withdrew in order that the men might have an opportunity of expressing themselves without committing a breach of discipline in his presence. This they did with a will, and many hearty cheers were sent after the generous and loyal Irishman who had risked his life and ruined his Sunday shirt on their behalf.—The United Service.

Not long ago a big whale got stranded on one of the Shetland Islands. A venturesome small boy thought he was dead, and sat down on his snout. The whale showed that he objected to this liberty by giving a snort which sent the small boy flying into the water fifty feet away. When he swam ashore he knew more about whales than he ever did before.

The collecting craze is at a white heat in Germany. Its latest and most preposterous phase is that of collecting breakfast rolls of ladies of note, actresses en vogue, and also of distinguished men, from which rolls a bite has previously been taken. The remnant is then ticketed by the collector: "This roll was bitten into by Miss So-and-So, on May 12, 1883, while taking her coffee."

BOYHOOD OF EMINENT MEN.

An Eminent Teacher on Choosing a Calling—Lewis Cass and Daniel Webster—Dr. Abbott in 1847.

St Louis Republican.

Dr. Benjamin Abbot was for half a century Principal of Phillips Exeter Academy. He was one of the most eminent teachers this country ever produced. Last June the 100th birthday of the academy over which he so long and sosuccessfully presided was celebrated. The pamphlet which records the proceedings of this occasion contains the following reminiscences of Dr. Abbott, from the pen of Prof. Waterhouse, of Washington University:

Dr. Abbott was then about 85 years old. His venerable figure was seldom seen on the street, but his name was like a living presence. The personal qualities which, through fifty years of service, had won so wide a fame for Phillips Exeter Academy were well known to all the students. Stories of his high-bred courtesy and moral dignity of character, of his effective discipline and noble ardor in the work of instruction, were among the most cherished traditions of the academy. An earnest desire to see so distinguished a teacher induced me to call on Dr. Abbott. He received me with cordiality, and expressed the gratification which the visits of students afforded him.

"I have given," said he with a smile, "the best energies of my life to the education of youth, and it is but natural that I should not be indifferent to the regard of young folks."

Some inquiries with reference to my own objects of life served to introduce the theme which seemed to absorb all his thoughts. He explained at length his own theory of education, and spoke of the progress of the academy since it first came under his control in 1788. Alluding to the choice of a profession, he said:

"I have always been accustomed to advise young men to take good care of their health, perfect themselves in their studies, acquire as much practical knowledge and general information as possible, and then let circumstances and the bent of their genius dictate what vocation they should follow."

It was suggested that some teachers recommend an early choice of a calling and the pursuit of the special studies which tend to promote professional success.

"No, no," he replied with great earnestness, "I do not believe that is best. I have always counseled the youth under my charge first to complete their general studies, and then to follow the guidance of their natural tastes in the selection of a profession. A long observation of the careers of young men confirms the wisdom of this course."

A transition from this subject to the great men who had once been under his tuition was very natural to a teacher proud of the success of his pupils. The incidents which Dr. Abbott related about school-boys who have since become illustrious were extremely interesting.

"Lewis Cass," he said, "was a very wild boy. One day his father, Maj. Cass, came to me and asked me if I would take his son.

"'Certainly, but why do you ask?'

"'Oh! the youngster is headstrong and hard to manage. I am an officer and can govern soldiers, but that boy is too much for me.'

"'What does he do?'

"'Plays truant, runs away from his work, steals off without my permission to go a gunning, fishing and swimming, and is full of all kinds of pranks.'

"'Well, send him to me, and I'll see what I can do with him.'

"The boy was placed under my charge. Several months latter I met his father, and asked him how his son was getting along. "Well, sir," said he, 'if Lewis was half as afraid of the Almighty as he is of you, I should never have any more trouble with him.'"

In relating this incident Dr. Abbott fairly shook with the laughter which the recollection of Maj. Cass' answer excited.

It is scarcely necessary to add that, controlled by the preceptor's extraordinary power of discipline, the strong motive energies which led young Cass into all sorts of boyish mischief were directed to nobler objects. The results of the wise management which quickened the ambition and roused into action the faculties of a powerful nature are recorded in American history. It was, however, intimated that at Exeter the future statesman evinced more talent for practical affairs than for the details of scholarship.

In speaking of the school-boy traits of Daniel Webster, Dr. Abbott mentioned an unexpected fact. He said that "young Webster showed an insuperable aversion to declamation. As 'the boy is father to the man,' it might have been supposed that the lad who was destined to be pre-eminent in oratory would have exhibited an early fondness for declamation, but no persuasions could overcome his natural diffidence."

Dr. Abbott remarked that "there was a popular misapprehension with regard to Webster's scholarship. It was generally believed that Webster was a dull and unsuccessful man, but such was not the fact. His mind rarely seemed to be occupied with his studies. His large, lustrous, thoughtful eyes were gazing about the room, or looking out of the window; but at recitation the pupil who appeared not to be engaged in studious preparation always acquited himself well. He often showed a far better grasp of the subject than those who were nore familar with the minor points of scholarship.

While Dr. Abbott was telling these anecdotes his tones became more earnest and his eyes lighted up with a glow which these agreeable recollections kindled. It was quite obvious that age had not yet wholly quenched the fires of earlier manhood.

Heartily thanking him for his courtesies, and for the rare pleasure which his conversation had afforded, I bade the venerable teacher good-by.

The next time I saw him he was lying in his coffin. An expression of sweet and childlike serenity rested upon his features, as though the Divine hand had set upon his face the seal of a happy and well-spent life.

A notable surgical operation has been performed on the earl of Wilton, whose life has been saved by having his tongue cut out on account of a cancer. Hitherto cancer in the tongue has been deemed fatal. The elder placide, Henry died of it, and his brother Thomas committed suicide under the suffering which attends it.

NEW YORK'S AMBULANCE SERVICE.

Harper's Weekly.

Walking up or down Broadway you are apt to hear suddenly the sharp strokes of a bell. They come swiftly nearer. The lumbering trucks and omnibuses draw away to either side. The stroke of the bell rings loudly right at your side, and in a moment a light covered vehicle dashes past you. Barely an instant later the bell is striking far ahead of you, and the wagon has disappeared into a side street, or is hidden from view by the trucks and omnibuses which have again taken full possession of the roadway. You may have had time to read "Ambulance" on the light vehicle as it dashed down the street, and to have caught sight of a young man wearing an official cap.

As you walk on your progress may be checked by a crowd that has gathered around something on the sidewalk Near the curb you see the ambulance. In a little while the crowd falls back, and the young man with the official cap gives an order. Something is raised from the sidewalk and carried slowly toward the wagon. As the stretcher is lifted into the ambulance you catch a glimpse of a poor agonized face (the face may be of a little girl or boy); the young man takes his seat again, the driver grasps the reins, you hear the sharp strokes of the bell once more, and the ambulance drives back to the hospital. If your curiosity is excited, you may read in next morning's paper how a lad was caught and lacerated by the machinery of the factory in which he worked, or how a poor delicate girl was crushed by one of the lumbering trucks or omnibuses, and how she lay there exposed to the stare of the curious crowd till she was taken by the ambulance to some hospital—most likely, if the accident occurred down town, to the Chambers street branch of the New York Hospital.

One day as the writer was standing in the waiting room of this branch of the uptown hospital, known as the Chambers Street Hospital, conversing with one of the ambulance surgeons on the subject of this article, there was a sudden jingling of the bell in the basement.

"That's a fire alarm? Ring up the ambulance!" called the surgeon.

Before the jingling had stopped, or the surgeon had finished the order, the superintendent had turned a switch on the signal instrument.

"That brings the ambulance from our stables to the door," said the surgeon. "The jingling you heard comes from police headquarters. It simply tells us that there's a fire in our district, and to be prepared for another call in case of accident. Here's the ambulance."

It came rattling down the street, and with a quick turn fetched up at the door. The surgeon while speaking had put on his cap. As he had stretched his arm to take it down from the peg, the flap of his coat lifted somewhat, and disclosed a small leather case, evidently for surgical instruments, protruding from the inside pocket. The superintendent, who had been listening at the telephone, said they had telephoned from police headquarters that the fire was on Broadway, near Canal street.

Just then a succession of sharp strokes was given on the bell in the basement.

"One, two, three, four," counted the surgeon, as the bell went on striking, until he had told twenty. "There's been an accident at the fire, and they want an ambulance. Come along."

We rushed down the steps, and before we were in the seat in the back of the ambulance the bell near the driver's seat was ringing out sharply, and we were speeding along.

As we dashed up the street every vehicle, whether it was going in the same direction with us or coming toward us pulled out of our way. That little bell seemed to have a magical effect. Burly, surly drivers, who would have cursed like troopers in a Broadway jam, hauled up to the curb, and the light wagon went spinning along on a straight line until it met one of the United States mail carts. Then the ambulance turned out as any ordinary vehicle would have done. Speeding up Broadway it had a perfectly clear track.

It's as likely at a fire to be a thigh injury as any other," said the surgeon, as he drew out some long splints from the mattress in the bottom of the wagon. "These are for such injuries. In this bag," pointing to a bag that hung from the side of the wagon cover, "we have smaller splints. But here we are."

Barely a few minutes had elapsed since we had left the hospital, yet the sizzling of the fire engines told us that we were within the fire line. In a moment the ambulance had stopped and had backed up to the sidewalk. We had jumped from our seat. The body of the wagon slanted toward the curb, and in an instant the mattress was slid out on to the walk. A falling beam had shattered a fireman's leg. He was lifted on to the mattress, a swift examination made, the splints adjusted, the mattress with fireman upon it slid into the wagon again. We jumped into our seat, the driver into his, the sharp strokes began once more, and away we sped back to the hospital. In spite of our hot pace and the jolting of the wheels the injured man seemed to lie easy, the mattress moving only gently up and down.

We were soon at the hospital again—just fourteen minutes from the time we had started. The surgeons lifted a stretcher out from the wagon, and opened it on the sidewalk. The mattress with the fireman upon it was slid on to the stretcher, and then the attendants carried it into the basement room, where the injured man was received by the house surgeon, who proceeded to make a careful examination of the case.

During the preliminaries he asked the fireman where he lived. "Do you want to be treated here or at home after I get through?" The fireman expressed a wish to be taken home, and as it would not, in the surgeon's opinion, be dangerous to transport him, he was promised that the ambulance would take him to his home in the afternoon.

The following facts regarding the ambulance service were obtained from Dr. [illegible], to supplement the writer's practical experience of fourteen minutes. The writer requested Dr. [illegible] to inform him what steps had to be taken in order to bring an ambulance to the relief of an injured person. The answer was to the following effect:

Suppose a man engaged on one of the large buildings which one sees going up in the lower part of the town, falls from the scaffolding and is injured. The crowd which gathers round the injured man usually attracts the attention of the policemen on the beat. When he ascertains that some one has been injured he notifies the authorities at the station house. At times a private person who knows where the station house is situated may get to it with the news even before the officer knows of the occurrence. The information is then telegraphed or telephoned from the station house to police headquarters, whence it is conveyed by telephone to the hospital in the district in which the accident has happened. If it happens to have occurred in the district to which the Chambers street branch of the New York Hospital is situated, and the news is received there, a call is sent to the ambulance stables in Duane street. There are three calls to those stables, the first, for the ambulance to come to the hospital door; the second, for the ambulance to wait for the surgeon at the stables; the third, for it to wait for him at the corner of Broadway and Chambers street. There are two ambulances attached to this hospital. During the day one of them is ready to start on the instant the call is sounded, the horse being in harness and the drivl er on his seat, and no matter whether it be driven at once to the hospital, or the surgeon meets it at the stables or at the other rendezvous, rarely more than two minutes elapse between the call and the time the surgeon is in his seat. At night both horses are unhitched, but they are harnessed on the system adopted by the fire department, so that very little time is lost. The surgeon once aboard the ambulance is off for the scene of the accident. It will have been noticed that any delay in extending help to the injured under this system is due to the clumsy manner of conveying the information to the hospital, or, more properly speaking, to the station house. This may cover twenty minutes or more, and in some cases a delay of twenty minutes is a serious matter.

In this city there are seven hospitals to which ambulances are attached, viz: The New York Hospital, the Chambers street branch of the New York Hospital St. Vincent's, Bellevue, the Ninety-Ninth street branch of Bellevue, the Presbyterian, and the Roosevelt. The calls which come from police headquarters are divided into ordinary and "hurry up" calls. in a case of a "hurry up" call, the spot where the accident has occured is reached with the utmost speed, the ambulance "sliding right up" to use the expressive phrase of the ambulance surgeons. This speed of course could not be attained were it not that the ambulance has the right of way over every class of vehicles excepting the vehicles of the United States mail and of the fire department.

Each ambulance is fitted up with a sliding mattress, boxes for splints, emetics, antidotes and instruments for stopping hemorrhage. The service has existed here about eight years, and not being any way connected with politics, is highly efficient. Before it was introduced patients were carried to hospitals on stretchers, as they are still in London and Paris.

Schmidt, His Baby and Friends.

From the New York Sun.

A stout, florid German went up to a policeman in the Bowery yesterday and said; "I vant to haf some beebles arrested."

"How many asked the policeman.

"So many as I don't gount mit all der fingers un toes of my left handt."

"What have they done to you?"

'Everydings! Dey trive me most crazy. You see, my vife she haf a leetle poy yesterday. I dolt my gustomors about it, and ve all trink dot leetle poy's suggsess at my expense. I tink I open as many as dree kegs of peer. Vell dot vas all righd; for I don'd vas a fadder efery tay.

The frosts in New England in May and June were much more severe than first reported. In the detailed accounts from some localities it is reported that the ground froze and that ice formed an eighth of an inch thick. The best informed say that the garden and vegetable crops generally will be almost a total failure in Rhode Island, Connecticut and some parts of Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. The outlook for farmers was never more discouraging in New England and the fatal season of 1816, the year without a summer, in which frost fell in every month, is despondently recalled. Corn that withstood the freeze in the [illegible] Friday in May was cut down by the frost of June 2. Added to the frost was a drouth that will prevent anything like the usual crop of hay, while the grass lines are as brown as in October. Unless accounts are greatly exaggerated the [illegible] of New England farmers at present [illegible] very dismal [illegible]

FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE.

Household Hints.

Tea or Coffee should be made with water which is freshly boiled.

It is said that the happiest women are those who lead the ordinary home life.

If you are bilious, try the juice of a lemon in a cup of coldwater—no sugar—before going to bed.

A correspondent writes that she has found a plate smeared with lard to be an excellent ant-trap. She says they prefer lard to any other food. When the plate becomes covered with them, hold it over the fire, and then reset the trap.

Ice boxes and refrigerators in general are not half cared for. They should be washed in every part with hot soda water, rinsed with clean water, dried and aired each time before putting in fresh ice. Between times, wipe up any milk, gravy or vegetables that may be spilt.

In cases of diphtheria or other contagious diseases, a German physician recommends a mixture of equal parts, say 40 drops of turpentine and carbolic acid put into a small kettle of water, and allowed to simmer slowly over the fire in the same room with the patient. The atmosphere of the sick room must be kept constantly impregnated with the odor of these substances. In several cases of diphtheria there was no attempt at isolation and the mother cared for sick and well without spread of the disease.

Women Who Never Buy.

From the New York Sun.

A dry-goods salesman says: We have to endure a great deal at the hands of those ladies who never buy. These people take up valuable time, and a good part of our energies is directed to the effort to circumvent them. The moment an "old timer" comes up to the counter she is instantly recognized by some one of the salesmen, and the warning signal, a tap on the counter is passed along the line. Then we have some fun. The "old timer" will call for, say, a certain shade of yellow. She is told that it is not in the stock. "Oh, what a pity," she exclaims; "that is just what I wanted. If you had it I would buy sixteen yards of it." Then it is the next man's turn. He comes up, accordingly, and tells the first salesman that he is mistaken, that there is still a bolt of twenty yards of that indentical stuff in the store. He brings it forward and lays it down. You would think the shopper who never buys would be disconcerted at this turn of affairs. Not a bit of it. She says smilingly: "Oh, that is just what I want. Lay it aside for me and I will see my dressmaker and see just how many yards she needs, and to-morrow I'll come back and buy it." Then she departs with a simper, but she never comes back. We amuse ourselves in this way, but it's a terrible nuisance all the same.

Waxed Floors.

Yes, I deal in antique furniture, and get up new furniture on antique models, and repair things and so on, but my principal business is in making floors—hardwood floors, of course. That is increasing all the time. I don't have much to do with the floors of dancing halls because the men having charge of them get into a way of waxing the floors themselves. It is in private houses that my services are in demand. Three years ago there were very few waxed floors in New York residences, but they are all the rage now among New Yorkers who live in good style. Some have them because they are nice for a german or a small social party; but they are also popular among those who do not dance, for they give an air of richness, of well keeping and are so much cleaner than carpets can ever be. When you sweep a carpet you send up a cloud of dust and fibers from it, but that cannot be the case with a waxed floor, which gathers no dust and the more it is swept and brushed and polished, the smoother and brighter it becomes. A hardwood floor should be waxed thoroughly three or four times a year, besides being rubbed occasionally by the servants of the house.—New York Sun.

A Sensible Woman.

It matters not whether your dress is silk or cotton, so long as it is clean. I prefer a clean cotton gown to a dirty silk. Sometimes I have a visitor—a real live, heavy "swell." He or she finds me in a cotton gown, a shady one at that whose only merit lies in its cleanliness, but what care I? My gown is cotton. My hands are red, because I do lots and lots of housework, but my brain is just as it always is, and I can hold my own in spite of the cotton gown and red hands. If the visitor has any idea that I am not the proper person to be on friendly terms with, because I open my door in a cotton gown, it is the privilege of that visitor to walk down the steps and never ascend them again. If my matted rooms do not seem good in the eyes of my acquaintances, who possess body Brussels carpets, they need not call. If I cannot hang up Landseer's pictures on the walls I am happy to get a handsome chromo in lieu thereof, since it would be worse than folly to go without some sort of ornamentation because the finest could not be obtained. Just suppose a woman taking a house squatting down on bare boards, and gazing up on bare walls for an indefinite period, because she had not the money to buy the finest and richest of everything. There is no philosophy in that, Mrs. S.—San Francisco News Letter.

The Best Bed.

Of the eight pounds which a man eats and drinks in a day it is thought that not less than five pounds leave his body through the skin. And, if these five pounds, a considerable percentage escapes during the night. This, being in great part gaseous in form, permeates every part of the bed. Thus all parts of the bed—mattress, blankets, as well as sheets—soon become foul and need purification. The mattress needs this renovation quite as much as the sheets. To allow the sheets to be used without washing or changing three or six months would be regarded as bad housekeeping; but I insist, if a thin sheet can absorb enough of the poisonous excretions of the body to make it unfit for use in a few days, a thick mattress, which can absorb and retain a thousand times as much of these poisonous excretions, needs to be purified as often certainly as once in three months. A sheet can be washed. A mattress cannot be renovated in this way. Indeed there is no other way of cleaning a mattress but by steaming it or picking it to pieces, and thus in fragments exposing it to the direct rays of the sun. As these processes are scarcely practicable with any of the ordinary mattresses, I am decidedly of the opinion that the good, old-fashioned straw bed, which can every three months be exchanged for fresh straw, and the tick washed, is the sweetest of beds.

If in the winter season the porousness of the straw bed makes it a little uncomfortable, spread over it two woolen blankets, which should be washed. With this arrangement, if you wash all the bed-covering often, you will have a sweet, healthful bed.

Now, if you leave the bed to air, with open windows during the day, and not make it up for the night before evening, you will have added greatly to the sweetness of your rest, and, in consequence, to the tone of your health.

Improved Methods on the Farm.

From the Breeder's Gazette.

There are very few farms in this country, east or west, that have ever been made to produce over 50 per cent. of their capacity, and very few farmers capable of making even 100 acres do more than this. A vast majority of those who own more would be benefited by selling the surplus and using the proceeds as a capital to improve the remaining acres, and by purchasing better stock.

The little Island of Jersey is said to maintain one animal to every two acres on the island, including roads, fences and the ground occupied by buildings. Their farms average about ten acres. In a very few instances in this country one animal has been supported to each improved acre. This proves what is possible under the best management. The best talent, the intensest study, the most knowledge and the best business methods should be, and will be devoted to agriculture for years to come. The professions are overstocked. Doctors are without patients and lawyers without clients, as most of them ought to be; but good lands are cheap and plenty. Intelligent laborers on the farm are scarce and better paid than any other class. Farming has been accepted as a last resort by those unable to live by their wits, or good enough for such as were considered incapable of or indifferent to thorough culture. The mentally-active boy has taken a medical course or a law course of lectures after completing his education" at the academy or college. These avenues are now full to repletion; they are in need of thorough drainage. Now that farmers begin to see that they need more culture, more knowledge and business methods to attain any standing in their own business, and to fill creditably such public positions as their numbers and their occupations entitle them, let them win back their sons from the shop and office to their farms, where all their intelligence can be more profitably employed. Let them send their sons to the agricultural college instead of the medical school; let them attend a course of lectures on botany and chemistry instead of law, and they may possibly do something to make farming more attractive as well as profitable, and take and hold that station in life to which the poet's fancy has assigned him.

Farming Notes.

In dry weather keep the cultivator moving. Frequent stirring of the surface soil will do much to mitigate the evil effects of a drought.

The cattle loss in Kansas during the year—chiefly from starvation, thirst or cold—is placed by the Cowboy at "about 10 per cent." This simple figure stands for an aggregate of suffering disgraceful to our boasted civilization.

Mr. F. K Phoenix, Walworth, Wis., reports Jersey Queen strawberry "utterly tender and worthless" on his clay loam after two years careful trial.

The Michigan Farmer reports twenty-five carloads of thoroughbred sheep as having passed through that state recently, en route from Vermont to the west.

Of a herd of cattle in a Kansas pasture, thirty-five standing or lying near the barbed-wire fence during a recent thunder storm, were killed by lightning attracted by and following the wire. This is a fair warning to keep ourselves and animals away form all wire fences during storms.

Prof. Wiley, the United States chemist, states that sorghum is one of the most valuable of forage crops. He doubts whether there is anything better adapted than sorghum for ensilage. Especially where dry summers are apt to prevail, will the sorghum plant be found invaluable—For forage purposes it should be sown broadcast, or in drills like wheat or oats. Both as a sirup-producer, and a fodder-maker he looks to see it one of the most important crops of the great northwest.

Treatment of Stallion.

J. D. D.—How can my stallion be made surer? He leaves plenty of seed, but does not stick more than one mare in 10; he is vigorous enough, and is always willing and is worked moderately.

Ans.—It doesn't seem to be the fault of the stallion that the mare do not get in foal; probably the fault lies entirely in the mares. When not easily got in foal, a mare should be brought to the horse cool and not fatigued with exercise. Then let her be served, and put into a cool stable by herself, where she will not be disturbed by the sight, movement or noise of any other animal. As soon as the horse can serve her again—which may be in a quarter to a full hour's time, according to his vigor—put her to him the second time, and then let her rest an hour or two, and do not let her get hot, or be exercised much till the next day, and then and afterwards let her be gently and moderately worked. Some mares can never be got in foal except by two services, and they occasionally require three, as fast as the stallion is able to serve them. When put to the horse the mare should be in proper condition—neither fat nor lean, nor should she have been idle or worked hard, and she should have been fed moderately. Your treatment of the stallion seems to be judicious, so far as giving him moderate exercise daily. It is presumed he is properly fed hay or grass, with six to 12 quarts of oats per day, as he may need; or an equivalent of other grain, such as middlings or ship stuff, mixed with one-fourth to one-half of Indian meal; but oats are the best feed. Avoid pure corn, although at the South and West it is fed more or less with impunity; but there the horses are reared on it, and being accustomed to it, they are not apt to be injured by it when fed pure in moderation.

The Growing Power of the Republic of Chile.

After the perfection of its national independence, the Chilean government soon passed into the permanent control of civilians, "while the other governments of the west coast remained prizes for military chieftains." Its present constitution was framed in 1833, and though it is only half a century old "it is the oldest written national constitution in force in all the world except our own, unless the Magna Charta of England be included in the category." The political history of Chile during the fifty years of its life has been that of a well-ordered commonwealth, but one of a most unusual and interesting sort. Its government has never been forcibly over-thrown, and only one serious attempt at revolution has been made. Chile is in name and in an important sense a republic, and yet its government is an oligarchy. Suffrage is restricted to those male citizens who are registered, who are twenty-five years old if unmarried and twenty-one if married, and who can read and write; and there is also a stringent property qualification. The consequence is that the privilege of voting is confined to an aristocracy; in 1876, the total number of ballots thrown for president was only 46,114 in a population of about two and a quarter millions. The president of Chile has immense powers of nomination and appointment, and when he is a man of vigerous will he tyrannically sways public policy, and can almost always dictate the name of his successor. The government has thus become practically vested in a comparatively small number of leading Chilean families. There is no such thing as "public opinion" in the sense in which we use the phrase, and the newspapers, though ably conducted, do not attempt, as they do not desire, to change the existing order of things. "History" says Mr. Browne, "does not furnish an example of a more powerful political 'machine' under the title of republic; nor, I am bound to say, one which has been more ably directed so far as concerns the aggrandizement of the country, or more honestly administered so far as concerns pecuniary corruption." The population of Chile doubled between 1843 and 1875; the quantity of land brought under tillage was quadrupled; copper mines were discovered, and so worked that Chile became the chief copper-producing country in the world; some of the silver mines rivaled the Comstock lode; more than one thousand miles of railroad were built; a foreign export trade of $31,695,039 was reported in 1878; and two powerful iron-clads, which were destined to play a most important part in Chilean affairs, were built in England. Meanwhile, the constitution was officially interpreted so as to guarantee religious toleration, and the political power of Roman Catholic priesthood diminished. Almost everything good, except home manufactures and education, flourished. The development of the nation in these years was on a wonderful scale for a South American state, and the contrast between Chile and Peru was peculiarly striking. Comparative purity and strength of race, born out of hardship and producing political stability and honesty and personal courage, seemed to be the prime factors in the Chilean distinction. And yet the two peoples were the descendants of the same European race and of kindred Indian races. Doubtless the difference in climate was entirely favorable to Chile. Apropos, one recalls Mr. Edward Everett Hale's rule for determining in advance the length of a South American outbreak: "Multiply the age of the president by the number of statute miles from the equator; divide by the number of pages in the given constitution: the result will be the length of the outbreak in days. This formula includes an allowance for the heat of the climate, the zeal of the leader, and the verbosity of the theorists."—July Atlantic.

Prof. Swing on the Uselessness of Profanity.

Suppose you are given to a habit of profanity. You enter conversation with a man who never swears; in other words a gentleman. By and by you begin to perceive that he is the superior man. Your remarks have a tame, flat, feeble sound to your own ears. Your cheeks begin to burn with a sense of your friends excellence. Your pert little damns sound rough and course and vulgar, as they are. They begin to drop out of your sentences, ashamed to remain in the company of good, honest English words, until, as you discover that you are carrying on your part of the conversation without swearing you feel easier, and your intellectual stature is increased by a foot. Just observe this, my boy, and see if I am not right. But you will rip out some time; oh, yes, in some way you will. I know some good men—some of the best in the world—who will "confound it," and in New England even a deacon has been known, under a terrible strain to "condemn it." But, as a rule, my son, don't do it. Don't swear. It isn't an evidence of smartness or worldly wisdom. Any fool can swear. And a great many fools do. I, my son? Ah, if I could only gather up all the useless, uncalled for, ineffective swears I have dropped along the pathway of my life I know I would remove stumbling-blocks from many inexperienced feet, and my own heart would be lighter by a ton than it is to-day. But if you are going to be a fool, just because other men have been, oh, my son, my son, what an awful, what a colossal, what a hopeless fool you will be.

CAPRICE.

"I've got two beaux," she said, "two beaux"
(She warbled in the choir)—
"The tenor and the basso both
Yours truly do admire.

"I alternate; when fears are scarce
As truths in screeds of Vennor,
And stripling voices fit the day,
I patronize the tenor.

"But when 'tis night, and horrors threat
My timid soul to lasso,
I crave a voice that frights the foe,
And utilize the basso."

VERY FRENCHY.

A SKETCH BY ZOKA.

The count was fifty, belonged to one of the most illustrated famlies of France, and possessed a large fortune. Being discontented with the government, he occupied himself in various ways; wrote articles for the reviews, threw himself into business, and became enthusiastic in agaiculture and the fine arts.

The countess is forty-six, yet the loveliest blonde of Baris. Never has she looked handsomer. Age seems to purifiy her complexion. In ripening, she has the roundness of fine fruit. When she enters a parlor she appears like a rising star, and women of twenty are jealous of her.

Nothing can be said of the household of the count and countess since their marriage. It is even said they lived together happily for six years. In this time they had a son, Roger, who is Lieutenant; and a daughter, Blanche, whom they married off last year. In later years they lived in separate quarters, yet remaining good friends, with great self-control, often consulting together, and all right before the world.

One night the countess returned from a ball about 2 o'clock in the morning. The waiting maid, after undressing her, says: "The count is indisposed this evening."

The countess, half asleep, turns her head lazily. "Ah!" murmurs she, yawning, and adds: "Awake me tomorrow at 10; I go to the dressmaker."

The next day at breakfast as the count does not appear, she makes some inquiries, and afterward decides to go to his room. She finds him in bed very pale but very dignified. Three doctors have already been there and talked in a low tone; they left prescriptions, and will return at night. The count is cared for by two servants, who are grave and quiet, stifling the noise of their heels on the carpet. The great chamber gives you the idea of a cold severity. No linen is disturbed, no furniture deranged. This is a malady proper and ceremonious.

"You suffer, then my friend?" asks the countess, as she enters.

The count makes an effort to smile. "Oh! a little fatigue," replied he "I only require rest. I thank you for disturbing yourself."

Two days pass. The room remains stately. Everything is in its place; the drugs disappear without spotting the furniture. The shaved faces of the domestics are decent; they do not permit themselves to express sentiments of unrest. However, the count knows that he is in danger. He has requested the truth from the physicians, and he leaves them to act without a complaint. He remains most of the time with closed eyes, or looks fixedly as though he reflected his solitude.

In society the countess says her husband is suffering. She has not changed her manner of living, eats and sleeps and walks at her usual hours. Every morning, noon, and night she goes herself to ask the count how he is.

"Well, are you better, my friend?"

"Yes, much better; thank you, my dear Mathilde."

"If you desire it I will remain near you."

"No, it is unnecessary. Julius, and Francis are sufficient. And what good would it do to fatigue yourself?"

Between them is an understanding; they have lived apart and will die apart. The count has had the bitter enjoyment of desiring to leave the world without having round his bed the annoyance of a comedy of grief. He cuts short as much as possible, for himself and the countess, the private interview. His last wish is to disappear properly, as a man of the world, without disturbing any one.

One evening he can hardly breathe; he knows he will not live through the night. When the countess comes to make her accustomed visit, he says to her, forcing a smile:

"Do not go out; I do not feel well."

He would guard her from the tattle of the world. She installs herself in the room. The doctors do not leave. Two of the servants finish their duties with impressive silence. They have sent for their children, Roger and Blanche who keep near the bed by the side of their mother. The night passes in this way. In the morning the last sacrament is brought, and the count takes it before them all, so as to patronize religion. The ceremonial is over and now he is ready.

But he does not hasten; he seems to recover his strength, in order to avoid a clamorous end. His breathing, in the vast, severe apartment, gives the broken noise of a clock which is out of order. He is a well-bred man who is departing. And when he has embraced his wife and children, he falls back toward the wall dead. Then one of the doctors closes the eyes, saying in a low voice, "It is finished."

There are sighs and tears in the silence, as the countess, Roger, and Blanche fall on their knees and weep between their joined hands. Soon afterward the children take away their mother, who at the door, wishing to show her despair, sways to and fro.

From this moment the count belongs to the pompous undertaker.

The physicians have gone away, bending their backs with desolute faces. They send a priest to watch. The two domestics remain with the priest, seated on chairs, stiff and dignified; it is the expected end of their service. One of them perceives a spoon, which has been forgotten, he rises and slips it quickly into his pocket, that the fine order of the room may not be disturbed.

Below, in the drawing room, the noise of hammers is heard; it is the upholsters, who are changing the room into a glowing chapel. The embalmer is alone with the assistants, the doors are shut. When the count is brought down the next day, he is finely dressed and has a youthful freshness.

At 9 o'clock, the morning of the funeral, the house is filled with the murmur of voices. The son and son-in-law of the deceased receive the crowd on the ground floor. They bow and keep the quiet politeness of afflicted people. All the notabilities are there—the nobility, the army, the magistracy—even Senators and Professors.

At 10 the funeral procession starts for the church. The hearse is of the highest class—plumes and feathers, draped with hangings of silver fringe. The tassels of the pall are held up by a Marshal of France, a Duke, an old friend of the deceased, an ex-Minister of State and an Academician. The count's son, Roger, and his son-in-law led the mourners. Afterward comes the procession, gloved and cravated in black, all important personages, who march with the dull stamp of a disbanded troop. The excited neighborhood is at the windows.

Some persons form a line on the sidewalks, remove their hats and shake their heads as the triumphal hearse passes. Business is interrupted by the interminable mourning coaches, nearly all of them empty. The omnibusses and street carriages are gathered together on the cross roads; one hears the swearing of the coachmen and the cracking of whips.

During all this time the countess remains at home, giving out that her tears have broken her down. Extended on a lounge, playing with the tassel of her girdle, she looks at the ceiling, relieved and thoughtful.

At the church the ceremony lasts two hours. All the clergy make an appearance. Ever since morning, one has seen only busy priests running in their surplices and wiping their faces. In the middle of the nave, which is spread with black, is a brilliant catafalque. At last the people are seated; the women at the left; the men at the right; and the organ rolls out its lamentation; the singers moan softly; the children of the choir breathe soft sighs; the torches send up high green flames, which add to the pomp of the ceremany.

"Yes; I think so," replies the neighbor, who smiles from a distance on the ladies.

The voice of the singer rises quivering.

"Ha! what method, what breadth," adds in a low voice, swaying his head in ecstacy.

All the assembly are fascinated. The ladies, with a smile on their lips, think of the opera. "Faure really has talent!" A friend of the count goes so far as to say:

"He never sang better. It is provoking that the poor count cannot hear him, who liked him so much."

The singers, in black cloaks, march around the coffin. The priests, to the number of twenty, complete the ceremonial, bow and sprinkle holy water. At last all those present pass before the coffin and the holy water circulates again.

They all go out after shaking hands with the family. Outside the daylight blinds the eyes of the crowd.

It is a fine day in June. In front of the church there is some confusion. The procession is a long time in reorganizing, At the corner of a street two blocks away the waving plumes of the hearse are visible. One hears the clapping of the carriage doors and the trotting of the horses on the pavement. However the coachmen form in line and the procession moves toward the cemetery.

In the carriages every one was at ease; one would think they were going for a pleasure drive in the spring time. As they no longer could see the hearse, they forgot the funeral and engage in conversation; the ladies speak of the summer season; the men chat about their affairs.

"Say, my dear, do you go to the sea shore this year?"

"Perhaps. But not until August. We go on Saturday to our country place."

"Then he got the letter by fraud, and they fought—oh! very genteelly—a mere scratch. Last night he dined with me at the club, and he won twenty-five dollars from me."

"Is it not the day after to-morrow that the stockholders have their meeting? They wish to name me for the committee, but I'm so busy that I can't attend."

The procession moves along an avenue. A refreshing shadow falls from the trees, and the cheerfulness of the sun is over the grass. All at once a stupid lady, who leans against a carriage door, lets slip:

"Oh, it is charming here!"

Now the procession enters the cemetery. The vocies are hushed. Nothing is heard but the grinding of the wheels on the sanded walks. The vault of the count's family is at the farthest end to the left—a lofty tomb of white marble, ornamented with sculptures. They place the coffin in front of it, and the discourses commence.

There are four of them. The ex-Minister of State recalls the political life of the defunct, whom he describes as a modest genius, who would have saved France if he had not despised intrigue. Then a friend tells of the private virtues of him for whom all the world weeps. Then an unknown man spoke as delegate from an industrial society, of which the Count was Honorary President. At last a little man with a sour face presents the regrets of the Academy of Moral Science. During all this time those assembled have interested themselves with the adjoining tombs.

An old man with pinched lips, after catching this part of a phrase: "The qualities of heart, generosity, goodness, lofty character," shakes his chin as he murmurs:

"Well, yes, I knew him; it is a dog ended."

The last adieu is lost in the air, and soon there are none left in this secluded corner, but the grave diggers who lowered the coffin. The count is at home.

And the countess, on her lounge, has not stirred. She continues to play with the tassel of her girdle, her eyes on the ceiling, lost in a reverie, which, little by little, has colored her blonde cheeks.

Immigration is falling off somewhat, but 215,855 immigrants, supposed to be worth $1,000 apiece to the country, have arrived during the first five months of 1884. It would have astonished our fathers to have such an influx predicted to them a generation ago. Up to June 1, 1882, the number of arrivals was 357,279, and that year will perhaps always remain the greatest in the history of American immigration.

The Senate of the United States acted wisely in setting aside the unexpended balance of the $100,000 appropriation passed last year, as an emergency fund to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the country. It is well to be prepared for an emergency, and such an one as the sudden outbreak of a pestilence belongs not to the category of impossibilities.

Over the hundred women have applied for admission to Harvard University at Cambridge. One would think that the famous Wellesley Female college near Boston, and scores of other first class institutions of similar character would afford every facility required for female education, but the strong-minded yankee girls are determined to compete with the young men upon their own field.

Exports of domestic merchandise for the ten months ending April 30, 1884, amounted to $625,546,375, against $695,516,607 for some period last year. Here is a falling off of $70,000,000. The balance of trade, however, is considerably in our favor for the period named—the total imports for ten months being $559,880,063 against $625,546,375 exports. With a balance of $66,000,000 in our favor, the aspect of our foreign trade is not unsatisfactory, except as showing a decrease of business.

The eastern papers cater in one sense to the numerous class known as bread eaters. They seem to magnify the amount "in sight" and the prospects of an abundant crop, with a view of lowering the price of the great staple, and are assisted to some extent local pride in large yields. As yet there is no real basis for estimates of the number of bushels to be thrown on the market, but this fact is no obstruction to the expert figurers, who have their reputation to maintain of seeing farther into the future than anybody else.

Professor E. D. Cope, of Philadelphia, recently returned from the west, writes that the bison, the elk, and other of the larger game animals of this country, are approaching extermination. The elk, has been eliminated from the confines of civilization, and exists only in the forests; and the bison, unable to hide his giant frame upon the open prairie, is nearer to extinction than any of his smaller co-sufferers. Of the bison, he says: "The once huge southern herd has been reduced to a few animals in northwestern Texas. The Dakota herd numbers only some 75,000 head, a number which will soon be reduced to zero if the present rate of extermination continues. The Montana herd is now the object of relentless slaughter, and will soon follow the course of the other two herds." These bands are about all that is left out of the countless millions that once roved the plains. It is supposed by many that the game in the Yellowstone Park is preserved; but reliable accounts assert that it is not.

Dr. George T. Welch, of Keyport, New Jersey, in the Medical Record, vigorously protests against the extravagant and almost universal application of drugs for every malady and form of disease. He tells us that the medical scientist is skeptical of all drugs, and that medicine has achieved her most glorious renown in the prevention, not in the cure, of disease; and he boldly declares that, "even to be liberal in a large sense, if certain drugs like opium quinine, iodine, phosphorus, iron, ether strychnia and aconite were rescued, the whole nauseous bulk of the rest might be in the flat seas sunk, and the death rate rise no higher. The trouble is, the writer asserts that medical thought runs too much towards specifics. Proof of the tendency of natural recovery is not lacking in the wonderful cures that have been handed down by drugs which present enlightenment show to have no remedial virtues whatever, and the decadence of once popular remedies must lead us to suspect the disappearance of many which are now highly esteemed."

The courts throughout the country seem to be tightening up the law of libel in a way that renders the publication of ordinary news somewhat dangerous. The latest move in this direction is by the supreme court of Massachusetts in an action to recover damages for the publication of an alleged libel of and concerning plaintiff, by the Boston Herald, the same consisting in publishing a petition for the removal of plaintiff from the bar before any action had been taken or hearing had upon the same. The decision was against the newspaper, and the court decided that the publication of [illegible]

The management of the Milwaukee & St. Paul have made an appointment to fill the place made vacant by the death of H. C. Atkins. A. J. Earling, long known as one of the most popular as well as one of the ablest officials of the road, received the appointment. Earling's title will be assistant general superintendent, and he will have charge of the following: Chicago & Milwaukee division, Chicago & Council Bluffs division, La Crosse division, Prairie du Chien division, Wisconsin Valley division, and and Mineral Point division. Beside this appointment the following others were made: R. J. Callen to be superintendent of the Prairie du Chien & Mineral Point division, with office at Milwaukee. The Chicago and Council Bluffs divisions in Illinois and Iowa will hereafter be operated as one division, and R. B. Campbell has been appointed superintendent of the same, with office at Marion, Iowa. The jurisdiction of L. B. Beardsley, assistant superintendent of the Chicago & Council Bluffs division, is extended over the entire division. W. E. Beecham, formerly car service agent of the road, has been appointed assistant superintendent of the Hastings & Dakota division.

Casualties of the Week.

The pork slaughtering house of J. and I. Schroth, in Cincinnati, was burned. Loss, $35,000; insurance, $16,000.

At Westfield, N. Y., a fire burned the Westfield house and three small stores. Loss, $30,000; insurance, $1,300.

The whole business portion of Port Perry, Canada, is burned. The fire extended from Akerman's saddlery shop west, including the Ontario bank, Ross & Sons store, Ling & Mahaney place, the Windsor hotel, Wright's shoe store, Allison's drug store, T. C. Foreman's store, Davis' drug and cabinet store, Campbell feed store, McCaw's jewelry store, Davenport, James & Co., Brown parish hardware, W. Brock, and nearly to the postoffice.

At Butte, Mon., on the 4th, Miss Floyd, one of the twenty-mile equestriennes, was thrown from her horse near the close of the tenth mile, and seriously injured. But little hopes are entertained of her recovery. A terrible accident also occurred on the race course. About five hundred people were in the grand stand, when the roof fell in and the foundation gave away, precipitating the people to the ground, a distance of twenty feet from the highest point. One boy was killed and a dozen others seriously wounded.

Crimes and Criminals.

Alex Bunting of Ottawa, Ont., director of the defunct Exchange bank, a millionaire, has been committed for trial on a charge of giving fraudulent preferences to himself as creditor of the bank.

Richard Heller of Amsterdam and Miss Louise Scandorf of Fonda were married Tuesday, the 1st, at Fonda, the groom surrendering $125,000 left by his first wife on condition that he should not marry again.

A sneak thief entered the Albany City National bank at Albany, N. Y., and stole Spencer D. Patten's bank book from a shelf on the teller's window, while Patten turned to make a memorandum. The book contained $500. No trace of the theif.

J. B Cole, a discharged employe of the Manhattan Elevated railroad, New York, ticket agent, Williann Pinder, of that road, and August C. Speth, a lithographer, were arrested for conspiring to defraud the Elevated company out of $100,000 worth of tickets.

Diplomatic and Other Changes.

A recent Washington Special Telegram Says: There has been considerable shifting around in the diplomatic service. Congressman Kasson of Iowa goes to Germany to see if he can get along with the great chancellor, and takes with him a natural aptitude and long experience in diplomacy. Ex-Attorney General Taft is transferred from Austria to Russia, and John M. Francis, of the Troy Times, is promoted from Portugal to Austria. Mr. Francis would have been sent to St. Petersburg but for the fact that New York already has one first-class mission. Lewis Richmond of Rhode Island goes to Portugal in the place of Mr. Francis. The appointments for Alaska were also made to-day, and Andrew T. Lewis of Cannon's district, Illinois, is make clerk of the court. Frank Sperry, who is private secretary to the secretary of the treasury, is appointed one of the justices for Dakota and Leonard Smith of Iowa is the other. This is a great disappointment to Delegate Raymond, who earnestly urged George P. Flannery and George H. Hand, who were well endorsed by the bars of their respective districts. George Turner of Alabama is made associate justice of Washington Territory. He was the chairman of the Alabama delegation to the Chicago convention.

In the long list of the appointments sent to the senate to-day there is one which creates considerable amusement, that of Frank Sperry, to be associate justice of Dakota. Sperry is a young man of about twenty-five years, but his youthful face and diminutive stature make him appear as a mere boy. He has delicate little mutton-chop side whiskers, which look as though they were the first attempts at sprouting a beard. He is altogether a very insignificant looking youth. He was admitted to practice at the New York bar two or three years ago, but through the influence of George Bliss was appointed private secretary to Secretary Folger. Consequently he has had no experience in the practice of the law. It is said that he has been very faithful to the wishes of George Bliss, and that he has regularly reported to Bliss the private movements of Folger. There does not appear to be any objection to the young gentleman aside from his youth and inexperience. The appointments of Kasson, Kent and Francis are generally commended. Seward Smith, who has been appointed associate justice of Dakota, is a lawyer of Des Moines, with a practice of twenty years. He is said to be a man of ability and high standing at the bar. Mr. Byers, who has been appointed consul general at Rome, has been for several years consul at Zurich, Switzerland, and his nomination is a deserved promotion. Byers is the author of the song "Sherman's March to the Sea." The president has appointed John Jarrett of Pittsburg, president of the Amalgamated association, as the head of the labor bureau of the interior department, recently created by congress. John A. Rea, register of the land office at Bismarck, has been reappointed.

Conflagrations in Maine.

A late dispatch from Bangor says: Almost all of Northeast Maine is in flames. A dispatch from Patten says the air is full of cinders and ashes. The sun is obscured and the horizon is limited by day, and night is made grand and terrible by the distant roar of the great conflagration and the glare of great seas of flames. One great fire has for weeks been sweeping the country between the St. John and Alegosh rivers. Another big blaze between Greenville and the west branch of the Penobscot has been burning for ten days. Last Sunday a third fire started on the Wassattaquoik, and is sweeping the timber land north between townships 4 and 8. The damage can hardly be reckoned. The fires are fed by the great tracts of timber blown down by the terrible gales of last fall. Hundreds of millions of feet of valuable lumber then prostrated have dried in the sun and are now at the mercy of the flames. Unless rain soon comes, Maine's chief source of wealth will be very seriously affected.

Tempest and Death in Nebraska.

A severe windstorm approaching a hurricane visited the eastern part of Nebraska last Wednesday night. It was severely felt here, and was the third storm of the kind within a week. Two soldiers, Henry Gardner and Private Wanstoff, Company E, Fourth infantry, on their way from the city to Fort Omaha, were struck by a falling tree. Wanstoff had both legs broken and Gardner was so badly injured that he soon afterwards died. Numerous fences, trees, etc., were blown down. At Fremont, forty miles west, the storm was more severe. The streets and sidewalks were blocked with broken trees. The park was nearly destroyed. Knox hotel was unroofed, as was also the court house. [illegible] large warehouse was entirely demolished.

In the house of commons, Lord Edmund Fitzmaurice, the under foreign secretary, announced that the [illegible]

CONGRESSIONAL MATTERS.

The senate amendment to Mr. Raymond's bill to create two additional associate justices of Dakota was concurred in by the house Wednesday, the 2nd. The bill will now become a law as soon as it is approved by the president. The amendment gives an additional justice to Washington Territory. This is the second bill Mr. Raymond has passed through both houses. One of them, doubling the number of the legislature of Dakota, is now a law.

The President on Wednesday sent the following nominations to the Senate:—Lebarron B. Colt, Rhode Island, United States Judge First judicial circuit; Charles Cano, Illinois, chief justice of Utah; postmasters, E. L. Evarts, Menomonee, Wis., and Charles W. Howes, Rock Island, Ill.

The senate confirmed the following nominations. Watson C. Squire, Washington territory, governor of Washington territory; Gilbert A. Pierce, Illinois, governor of Dakota; Henry S. Neal, Ohio, solicitor of the treasury; Samuel A. Lasch, Pennsylvania, secretary of New Mexico; David P. B. Pride, Idaho, secretary of Idaho; Jesse W. George, Washington territory, United States marshal of Washington territory; P. Kelly, Oregon, United States marshal of Oregon. Postmasters—Ernst O. Brauns, Tracy, Minn.; Henry O. Bassford, Austin, Minn.

In the senate Mr. Van Wyck, committee on public lands, reported favorably the joint resolution prohibiting the secretary of the interior from certifying or patenting any lands to railroad corporations until congress shall have acted upon any bill or report from a committee favoring the forfeiture of such lands.

In the senate Thursday, the Fitz John Porter bill failed to pass over the president's veto, the vote being 27 to 37. The Chinese bill has passed without amendment as it came from the house by a vote of 43 to 13. The fortification bill passed, with an amendment increasing the amount $200,000. The Atlantic & Pacific railroad land grant forfeiture bill passed, but amended in such a shape as to leave the lands undisposed of until the legal proceedings prescribed by the act are terminated.

In executive sessions the senate confirmed the following nominations. John F. Morgan, chief justice of the supreme court of Idaho; John W. Lacey, Indiana, chief justice of the supreme court of Wyoming; Clarence Pullin, New Mexico, surveyor general of New Mexico; Washington Berry, California, receiver of public moneys, Olympic, Washington Territory; William Boult, Louisiana, register of the land office at Natchitoches, La.; Felix G. Clark, register of the land office at Des Moines, Iowa; Rowsell G. Wheeler, Indiana, agent for Indians at Pima agency, Arizona; H. Wheeler Combs, Maryland, general appraiser of merchandise, Baltimore; William H. Stevens, Nevada, smelter and refiner of the United States mint, Carson City.

Consuls—George J. Bromley, California, Tein Tsin; Henry May Brint, Callao; Archibald K. Brown, New Jersey, Algiers; Robert H. Davis, Pennsylvania, St. Paul De Loando; F. W. Horsefield, Iowa; Trieste, Joseph A. Jones, Massachusetts, Aden; Amos F. Learned, New York, Sydney, N. S. W.; H. A. Shakelford, Pennsylvania, Nantes; L. B. Smith, Maine, Curaco.

The senate passed without amendment the house bill amendatory of the anti-Chinese act of May, 1885. The bill which passed the house on the 3d ult., imposes additional restrictions upon the landing of Chinese laborers in this country, and is directed to the exclusion of skilled and unskilled Chinese laborers, whether subjects of China or any other foreign power. The same restrictions that are imposed upon the landing of Chinese arriving from China or other foreign countries are made applicable to Chinese arriving by land routes, the purpose of this latter clause being to prohibit the importation of this class of persons by way of countries contingent to the United States. Heavy penalties are imposed upon masters and owners of vessels and all persons who may aid and abet the landing of Chinese laborers in violation of the provisions of the act.

The contest of Mr. Botkin against Maginnis of Montana was decided by the house election committee. All of the charges were overruled and the committee, by unanimous vote, adopted a report that the contest was unwarranted and brought on frivolous grounds, and ordered Messrs. Ranney and Hepburn, leading Republican members of the committee, to present the report to the house.

The following nominations were sent to the senate on the 4th: John A. Kasson, Iowa, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Germany; Alphonso Taft of Ohio, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Russia; John M. Francis, New York, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Austro-Hungary; Lewis Richmond, Rhode Island, minister resident and consul general of the United States at Portugal; Samuel H. M. Byrnes, consul general at Rome; R. O. Williams, consul general at Havana; Ward McAllister, Jr., California, United States judge of the district of Alaska; E. W. Haskell, Iowa, United States attorney of the district of Alaska; A. T. Lewis, Illinois, clerk of the United States court, district of Alaska; Frank S. Perry, New York, associate justice of supreme court of Dakota; Seward Smith, Iowa, associate justice of the supreme court of Dakota; George Turner, Alabama, associate justice of the supreme court of Washington Territory; James Janett, Pennsylvania, commissioner of labor; Robert S. Gardner, West Virginia, Indian inspector; John A. Rea, Dakota, register of the land office, Bismarck, Dak.; Minor W. Bruce, register of the land office Niobrara, Neb.

The following additional nominations were confirmed:

Nothing was done in congress Saturday but to sit around and wait for reports from conference committees. According to the Congressional Record there was no session of the house Saturday; but according to the recollection of those who sat in the sweat box for fifteen hours, there was. A deception was practiced upon posterity by ignoring the calendar, and continuing what is known as the legislative day from 12 o'clock Thursday noon to 1 o'clock Saturday morning, and crowding the proceedings of two days into the journal of one. The senate was more honest, but not quite so patriotic, for its record of proceedings shows a session on the Fourth of July. The senators indulged themselves in a little fun, but kept their departure from the strict line of senatorial decorum confined within an executive session were a large business was transacted as follows: H. M. Grimes, register of the land office, North Platte, Neb.; James R. Hayden, receiver of public moneys, Olympia, W. T.; postmaster, S. L. Berkley, Missouri Valley, Iowa; H. N. Beach, consul general of the United States, Ecuador; Clement Carpenter, Ohio, secretary of legation of the United States, Chili; Chapman Coleman, first secretary of legation of the United States, Peking, China; Edwin Dunn, second secretary of legation at To Koi; consuls, Charles Einstein, New York, Zurich; W. H. Foy, Lambayeque; H. H. Leavitt, Ohio, Monogul; Geo. Scott, Nebraska, Odessa; Fulton Paul, Bucharest; John Shroeder, San Jose, Costa Rica; J. R. Smith, Mississippi, Asunsion; Gilbert Daggett Robertson, New York, Verviers and Liege; George C. Tanner, South Carolina, Teguicigalpa; William D. C. Gibson, Nevada, agent of Indians at Nevada agency, Nevada; commissioners for the district of Alaska, Mattrom D. Ball, Alaska, to reside at Sitka; Henry States, Oregon, to reside at Juneau City; George P. Ivert, Alaska, to reside at Wrangle; John Bradey, Alaska, to reside at Oonaloska; Chester Holcomb, secretary of legation and consul general of the United States at Bogota; H. Remsen Whitehouse, New York, secretary of legation and consul general to Guatemala; Richard R. Nill, Pennsylvania, secretary of legation at Lima; Edwards Pierrepont, New York, secretary of legation at Rome; [illegible] Charles S. Doughley, register land office, East Saginaw, Mich.; Frank Sperry, New York, receiver of public moneys, Bismarck, Dak.; H. L. Childs, receiver of public moneys, Bodie, Cala.; Wm. H. Francis, New Jersey, associate justice of the supreme court of Dakota, the nomination of Frank Sperry for this position having been withdrawn.

Lewis Richmond, Rhode Island, minister resident and consul of the United States to Portugal; Alphonso Taft, Ohio, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Russia; John A. Kasson, Iowa, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States of Germany; John M. Francis, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Austro-Hungary; Samuel H. M. Bayers, consul general, Rome, Italy; John Morgan, chief justice of the supreme court of Idaho; James R. Hayden, receiver of public moneys, Olympia, Wash. Ter.; Washington Barry, California, register of the land office at Miles City, Mont.; George Turner, Alabama, associate justice of the supreme court of Washington Territory; John W. Lacy, Indiana, chief justice of the supreme court of Wyoming; Andrew T. Lewis, Illinois, clerk of the district court of Alaska; Charles S. Zane, Illinois, chief justice of the supreme court of Utah; J. E. Cousins, Missouri, marshal of the United States, eastern district of Missouri; Senford Smith, Iowa, associate justice of the supreme court of Dakota; Ward McAllister, Jr., California, United States district judge of Alaska; E. W. Haskell, Iowa, attorney of the United States for Alaska; Le Barron B. Colt, Rhode Island, United States judge, First judicial circuit, M. C. Hillyer, Nevada, marshal of the United States, Alaska.

Postmaster, S. S. Berkley, Missouri Valley, Iowa; H. M. Grimes, register of the land office, North Platte, Neb.; Miner W. Bruce, register of the land office, Niobrara, Neb. Henry States, Oregon, commissioner of the district of Alaska; William H. Francis, New Jersey, associate justice of the supreme court of Dakota; Daggett Robertson, consul at Verviers and Liege; J. R. Smith, consul at Assunsion; Edward Pierrepoint, secretary of legation, Rome; Edward Dean, second secretary of legation, Tokei; H. Remsen Whitehouse, secretary of legation and consul general in Guatemala; R. R. Neill, secretary of legation at Lima; Clement Carpenter, secretary of legation, Chili; Chapman Coleman, first secretary of legation, to Peking, China; Charles Einsster, consul general at Rome; C. Holcomb, secretary of legation and consul general, Bogota; H. H. Leavitt, consul at Managua; H. N. Beach, consul general, Ecuador; George Scott, consul, Odessa; George C. Tanner, consul, Teguicigalpa; John Shrooder, consul, San Jose, Costa Rica; Fulton Paul, consul, Bucharest; W. H. Foy, consul, Lambayeque; Frank Sperry, New York, receiver of public moneys, Bismarck, Dak.

The session of Sunday lasted until 10 at night. The delay in the adjournment of congress was caused by the demand of the senate that they shall have private secretaries at the expense of the government. There are forty-three committees of the senate, and each committee has a clerk; each clerk acts as private secretary to the chairman of the committee in addition to his official duties.

The house finally yielded the point, but insisted that a direct appropriation of 33,000 should be made for the private secretaries, and that they should not be paid out of the contingent fund, so that the responsibility of this questionable expenditure might rest entirely upon the senate.

Second, the appropriation for building up the navy. This could not be settled. The Democrats refused to appropriate the money to complete the cruisers now on the stocks, and it was agreed to postpone the contest until next year and extend the present appropriations for six months. Third, the appropriation of $250,000 for a secret service fund for the state department. The senate receded from this, and the provision was stricken out. Fourth—The reduction and consolidation of internal revenue districts, which had been provided for by the house. On this point the house receded. Fifth—The Springer amendment to the sundry civil bill, abolishing the system of fees for United States marshals and district attorneys, and giving them salaries instead. On this point the house surrendered. These points having been settled, the house met at 3 o'clock, and the action of the conference committee was endorsed.

The president arrived at his room in the capitol at 11 o'clock, his cabinet and private secretaries accompanying him, and remained until after midnight. He signed the fortifications and postoffice appropriation bill, and a number of private pension bills.

The electoral vote will be counted in the old way next February. The bill which was intended to remedy the defects of the law passed both houses of congress, but the committee of conference could not agree upon points of difference.

Amounts finally agreed upon to enable the several executive departments to participate in the industrial expositions the current fiscal year are as follows: Louisville $10,000; New Orleans, $300,000; Cincinnati, $10,000.

Usually the close of a session is marked by a drunken carousal, but this year there have been none but the most orderly proceedings.

The president has signed the river and harbor bill. There were rumors of a veto, but they were unfounded.

Congress will undoubtedly adjourn on Monday.

Young Men and Marriage.

The following from the Philadelphia Bulletin is something for the young man to consider during the heated term; "There are plenty of people who declare that the best thing a young man can do is to marry and settle down in earnest to domestic life, and there are others who declare with the same emphasis that the opposite course is the correct one to pursue. Giving both sides of the argument proper weight, the choice is left with the young man. One who can give his wife a home, no matter how modest it may be, no doubt is justified in taking a partner for life; but it does seem to be the utmost folly for a young man to take a girl away from the home of her parents and subject her to discomforts which she must bear uncomplainingly for love's sake. This thing is a more common occurrence than most people imagine, and it accounts for about one-half the misery of the world. Elegance and wealth are not indispensable to the happiness of sensible people, but a certain amount of provision must be made."

A British Spider.

One of the most singular figures in the House of Commons is Lord Henry Lennox, who was announced for some time in the society journals as affianced to Mrs. Hicks Lord, and who has recently married another wealthy widow. He has been known as the Spider from as far back as 1852, when he was private secretary to Disraeli on his first assumption of office, and acted as his cup bearer, supplying him with draughts of port wine to sustain him in his memorable speech in defence of his first budget. The Spider combines the age of sixty-three with the vivacity, not to say the vanity, of twenty. His patent-leather boots are the nattiest in the House; his clothes are of the cut of the most accomplished masher; his hair, which is a lovely brown—what there is of it—is parted down the middle; his manners have the repose becoming the De Veres and people of that class. In short, Lord Henry is at all times and under all circumstances an interesting object and an instructive study, deserving the observation of American visitors to the House.

Col. Fred Grant, late soldier and self-esteemed millionaire, is to be employed as clerk in the down-town business house of a friend in New York, who has advanced him the money to set up housekeeping in a flat.

COTTON IS KING AGAIN,

Or Will Be, at the New Orleans Exposition—Gov. Hubbard's Proclamation Pointing Out Minnesota's Share in the Exhibit.

Lucius F. Hubbard, governor of Minnesota, yesterday issued a proclamation to the people of Minnesota, to which was attached the great seal of the state and the signature of Secretary Von Baumbach. The proclamation is apropos of the New Orleans exposition, and reads practically as follows:

The world's industrial and cotton centennial exposition is to be held at New Orleans, opening December 1, 1884, and closing May 31, 1885. The enterprise is fostered by the general government, the city of New Orleans, and the National Cotton Planters' association, and promises to surpass, in the number and completeness of its exhibits in all departments, all former international exhibitions. The demands for space in the buildings and grounds for foreign exhibitors and governments give that indication. The United States government and the states of the Union are preparing exhibits of the fullest description. In the centennial exposition at Philadelphia Minnesota was scarcely represented at all. The legislature in 1881, with the wisdom of experience, made an appropriation to enable the state to make a showing at a world's fair, then expected to be held at New York in 1883. That expectation was not realized, and the appropriation is not available for the exposition at New Orleans. The legislature has not been in session since the inception of the New Orleans exposition, and has not provided means for the necessary expenditures. The president of the United States has appointed Hon. Oliver Gibbs, Jr., of Lake City, commissioner, and Hon. Samuel E. Adams of Minneapolis alternate commissioner of the exposition, for Minnesota. Mr. Gibbs has conferred with the director general of the exposition at Washington, and learned the plans of the general government and the commissioners of other states and countries for the arrangement of exhibits; and our commissioners have proceeded accordingly to prepare for the organization of the work on the part of this state by the appointment of a state board of collective exhibits, and superintendents of exhibits in the various departments illustrative of the history, resources, arts and industries of Minnesota. The state board consists of the governor as president, the commissioner aforesaid as secretary, and the alternate commissioner as treasurer of said board.

SUPERINTENDENTS AND DEPARTMENTS.

The superintendents, as far as they have been appointed, are as follows:

Prof. Edward D. Porter, college of agriculture, university of Minnesota, Minneapolis, general superintendent of agricultural exhibits.

Prof. N. H. Winchell, state geologist, Minneapolis, superintendent of exhibits of the geology, mineralogy, flora and fauna of Minnesota.

R. C. Judson, secretary state board of agriculture, Farmington, live stock exhibits.

C. E. Marvin, Rochester, dairy exhibits.

Dr. C. N. Hewitt, secretary state board of health, Red Wing, sanitary exhibits.

F. C. Gould, Excelsior, horticultural exhibits.

Dr. R. O. Sweeny, president state fish commission, St. Paul, exhibits of fish and fisheries.

Gen. J. H. Baker, railroad commissioner, St. Paul, exhibits of railroad system of the state, maps, statistics, etc.

J. Fletcher Williams, secretary State Historical society, St. Paul, exhibits of historical collections, relics, curiosities, etc.

M. S. Chandler, United States surveyor general for Minnesota, St. Paul, Minnesota land system, maps, surveys, etc.

H. H. Young, secretary state board of immigration, St. Paul, immigration pamphlets.

H. D. West, of West Publishing company, St. Paul, Minnesota publications, law reports, state documents, reports of state societies and books by Minnesota authors.

Seth H. Kinney, Morristown, amber cane exhibits.

Charles Hallock, Minneapolis, exhibits of lakes and summer resorts.

Fred S. Pillsbury, Minneapolis, flour exhibits.

E. W. Durant, Stillwater, lumber exhibits.

David E. Bailey, Minneapolis, manufacturing and mechanical exhibits.

Henry Kalb, Rochester, exhibits of poultry and pet stock.

I urge upon individuals, as well as state and other institutions, municipal and other corporations and associations, to aid and promote the desired success by contributions of means and directions of interest to the cause commensurate with the importance of the event and their own concern in and relations to the commonwealth.

SECRETARY YOUNG'S PLAN.

Yesterday H. H. Young, secretary of the state board of immigration, directed a letter to the St. Paul chamber of commerce, in reference to the exhibit of this city at the New Orleans exposition. He favors the making of a bird's-eye view of St. Paul and Minneapolis and vicinity, to be displayed at the exposition. The proposed view would be fifteen by five feet in size, and the letter was written for the purpose of starting a subscription to raise the necessary funds. The commissioners who are preparing the exhibit for the state have only a small allowance of money at their disposal, and the state board of immigration has no funds to devote to the object. A letter was also sent to the Minneapolis chamber of commerce in behalf of the same cause.

CONCERNING GLANDERS.

Precautions Necessary to Prevent the Spread of That Infectious Disease—Description of the Pest.

RED WING, July 1.—To the Editor: You will confer a favor upon the owners of horses and mules, and other people as well, by the publication of the enclosed article on glanders. The disease exists in several places in the state, and as it is communicable to man and infectious to other animals, it is a nuisance which it is the duty of local boards of health to deal with and suppress. As usual in contagious disease, much ignorance and indifference exist on the subject among those most interested. Local boards of health, under the instruction of the state board, are moving to quarantine and control the cases brought to their knowledge, but have not as yet gotten full direction of the matter. It is needless to write you that this is a very serious matter to all our people. The enclosed article briefly sums up our present knowledge of the disease, its varieties and their control. Valuable horses have, within a few weeks, been shot for this cause in our state, whose loss owners, with the knowledge given in this paper, might have prevented. Look out for all suspicious cases and quarantine them till all doubt is passed, is the golden rule in the matter, which closely followed will render any wide spread of of this disease impossible.

CHARLES N. HEWITT,
Secretary State Board of Health.

GLANDERS AND FARCY.

The following summary of the facts of glanders is, by authority of the state board of health, furnished for popular information. The occasion, at this time, is the existence of the disease in a few places in the state, and, therefore, the necessity that horse owners particularly should be put upon their guard, and be asked to co-operate with the local and state boards of health in the suppression of the disease. More detailed instructions and information have been issued by the state board of health to local boards of health, which will be furnished to any one asking for them by the secretary at Red Wing. The disease occurs under two common forms, nasal glanders and farcy; sometimes also as an affection of the deeper air passages and the lungs. So far as observed, the present cases are of the first two varieties, and the majority of the first of them. In either form the disease is contagious to other animals and to man, though chiefly confined to horses and mules.

As an infectious disease it renders its victims nuisances and causes of sickness, and comes, therefore, directly under the control of the state and local boards of health. When well established either form is fatal to horses, mules, and other animals, and to man. The usual location of the disease, and therefore the place to look for its first invasion, is the cavity of the nose. About this locality there are in the vast majority of cases three clearly marked symptoms, by which any intelligent observer may judge of the probable, if not the certain presence of the disease: First, discharges from one or both nostrils of, first glairy and then yellowish and adhesive matter. Second, hard lumps, like split peas, in the lining membrane of the nose, followed by irregular and hardened sores or ulcers, chiefly in the partition between the nostrils. Third, A distinct, well-defined and hard gland under the jaw, on one or both sides, first movable, then fixed, rarely tender except at first, and as rarely going on to break down into matter. All these present in a horse or mule, and the case is clearly glanders. The viscid, yellow matter and the open and chronic sores are enough (and they rarely exist without the enlarged gland as their consequence) to justify grave suspicion and strict quarantine of the affected animal. If the disease is known to exist in the neighborhood, or the animal is believed to have been exposed to infection, either of these symptoms justifies quarantine till the exact truth is developed by time, and as a rule no long time will be necessary.

Of farcy, the characteristic symptom is the appearance under the skin of superficial tumors or farcy buds, which soon ulcerate and become hard, indolent, open sores. Then appear farcy cords, which are inflamed lymphatics which often become strings of hardened tumors, and may ulcerate. Usually this process is slow and may occupy weeks, but sometimes but a few days. In all cases the ulceration is rather in the lymphatics than in the glands. As regards danger to other animals the nasal form is probably the most dangerous, because the virus may be distributed by means of feed boxes or by sneezing; but all are infectious, and practically equally so. Hence in the possible or actual presence of the disease, it is the duty of owners of horses or mules, first to look out for the first appearance of any of the symptoms above described, not only in his own animals, but in those with which they have to live or work. Second, on the discovery of two or more of these symptoms, or of one if severe and well marked, to quarantine his own affected animal and to insist that other suspected animals are similarly treated. Third, to notify his local board of health of his suspicions, and to co-operate with the health officer in the work of observation and control. Fourth, to seek the best professional advice for his animals and to be guided thereby, always insisting upon a written opinion in the matter for his own protection. Better use the form prescribed by the state board of health, and to be obtained of the health officer. Fifth, in case one's horse or mule is, after due quarantine and sufficient observation, proven to have either form of the disease, to shoot it and bury the carcass as speedily as possible, and to use approved methods for disinfecting places and things infected by the dead animal. This is the long and short of a very serious matter. If horse-owners will assist, we can stop the progress of this disease with comparative ease. If they will not, the work will be harder and more troublesome, but it must be done, nevertheless. We ask for local boards of health and health officers' hearty co-operation and confidence. By order of the state board of health, CHARLES N. HEWITT, Secretary.

Minnesota News Notes.

Nichols & Dean and Averill, Russell & Carpenter of St. Paul filed a petition in the district court asking for the appointment of a receiver for Mayo & Clark, under the statute entitled "An act to prevent debtors from giving preference to creditors and to secure the equal distribution of the property of debtors among their creditors, and for release of debts against creditors."

At an adjourned meeting of the Faribault board of trade the following committee was appointed to wait on Mr. A. B. Stickney, for the purpose of discussing the railroad question, and the possibility of running the road about to be built from Mona, Iowa, to St. Paul, through Faribault: T. H. Loyhed, chairman; Hon. Gordon E. Cole, J. D. Greene and Donald Grant.

Rev. A. H. Lembower, of Reading, Pa., worthy master templar of the Temple of Honor of the World, will visit Minnesota the last week of July and the first week in August, in the interest of Temple of Honor work. The temples of Southern Minnesota will be in session during the constitutional amendment convention at Waseca on the 17th and 18th of July, at which delegates will be present from the temples of Minneapolis, Rochester, Winona, and other points, and addresses will be delivered by G. W. Penniman, Rev. H. C. Jennings, D. W. G. T. of Waseca, and others.

Senator George E. Case will leave France on the 1st of August, with twenty Norman and Percheron mares, which will be exhibited at the Minneapolis fair, together with stock from his Le Sueur and Fridley farms. His children, who have been attending school in France, have been transferred to a German school, Mrs. Case remaining with them.

Engineer Root, of the St. Paul & Duluth railroad, reported at Stillwater the wind was so strong in the vicinity of Dellwood, on White Bear Lake, that numerous oak trees six and eight inches in diameter were broken off. Quite a large number of shade trees in Stillwater were broken and ruined.

Soon after Orton's Anglo-American circus had begun its exibition at Wabasha, Monday afternoon, a terrible gale of wind from the west struck the tent and completely raised it. Several of the cages containing animals were upset and one of them fell upon W. M. Bloomfield, an employe, breaking his left leg in two places. Another employe, whose name was not learned, sustained internal injuries. There was an audience of nearly two thousand people under the canvas when the hurricane came, but outside of a few scratches and bruises, no injuries are reported. The damage to the circus company is estimated at $500.

As Elias Gjendahl and two other men were returning to their homes from Ortonville they were overtaken by a thunderstorm, from which they sought refuge in Mr. Carlson's granary. They had only been their a few minutes when it was struck by lightning and Mr. Gjendahl instantly killed. The two others escaped with only being heavily shocked.

H. K. Hoyt, shot himself through the head at St. Paul. He gave the name of Hoyt at the hotel, but after his death papers were found on his person which lead to the belief that his right name is Lonis Stone. Among his papers were found letters indicative of family troubles.

The seventy-five barrel flouring mill at Moorhead owned by Nelson Overbee has been sold and possession given to George N. Kneisley, of Dayton, Ohio, who has figured in sensational dispatches from that place as having ruined several indorsing friends in speculation in Fargo real estate. The mill is the one quarreled over by the creditors of P. V. M. Raymond, of Fargo, last winter, he having a lease of it.

Wells Brothers, wholesale dealers in millinery and fancy goods of Portland, Or., have failed. Liabilities, $100,000; nominal assets, $120,000.

The receiver of the Newark (N. J.) Savings Institution recently began the payment of 60 per cent. dividend. Total amount, $3,700,000.

The liabilities of the Marsh Binder Manufacturing company, of Sycamore, Ill., which assigned recently will amount to $300,000.

During the storm at Rush City, the front of G. Munding's blacksmith shop was blown out. Munding was buried in the debris but not dangerously hurt. The frame of F. S. Christiancy's new house was blown down. Loss, $500. The Catholic church was slightly moved on its foundation. Many trees, etc., were blown down.

The wind storm at Long Prairie unroofed a few barns and small buildings. Two chimneys were blown down on the new court house. The storm took a due easterly course and tore down considerable timber.

Notices have been received by Mr. Strait that pensions have been allowed by the department to Charles Waehler of Sibley county, Bradley Rogers of Lake City, and T. D. Greene, of Brown county, Minn.

The Celebration.

At 1 o'clock a. m. on July 4th, our fire bell sounded and the anvil chorus commenced, and the people of our city suddenly awakened to the fact that it must be the 4th of July. The firing of anvils and cannons lasted until about 8 o'clock for about or somewhere near that time the patriots who had given this anvil chorus, wended their weary way homeward, so that they might get a little rest before the dawn of day, that they so much needed, and so be prepared to celebrate during balance of the day. The morning came at last, but it was a very gloomy looking prospect for the carrying out of the grand program that had been arranged. Every body wore a disappointed look that morning, and we noticed (more especially) the committees who had labored so hard and faithfully, and we would say right here that the committees deserve a great deal of credit for their untiring labor in perfecting the plans for the grandest celebration ever held north of St. Paul, and which would have been carried out to the letter had the weather been favorable. The bell rang at 11 o'clock to call the committees together to see what could be done, whether they could form the procession in the afternoon or not. But the rain fell in torrents, and they had to give up the idea entirely. So every body looked dull, and small boys fired crackers and torpedoes until afternoon. About 3 o'clock the members of Col. Cobham Poast No. 90, G. A. R., the members of the fire department and a band of Chippewa Indians, with both brass bands formed in line and marched through our streets for about an hour, and then all went to the Crookston Opera House. Then came the speaker of the day Hon. M. E. Clapp, who gave a very interesting oration. In the evening was the grand ball at the Crookston Opera House, given by the members of the G. A. R. The opera house was nicely decorated. There was over a hundred tickets sold, the firemen were all there, and the ladies of our city gave them each a bouquet. John McKinnon chief of the fire department received a very handsome bouquet and shield, on which was the inscription "our protection." Every body had a good time at the ball, and every thing was nicely arranged, and the music was excellent. The business houses of our city were all nicely decorated with flags, and trees along the edge of the sidewalk giving the streets a fine appearance. We would say in conclusion that if the weather had been favorable, there would have been the largest crowd of people assembled at Crookston that day that ever gathered in one place in the Northwest.

Adjourned Meeting of the City Council July 8th 1884.

Mayor Walsh in the chair, present, Ald. Houston, Bang, Fontaine, Bataglia, Nolan, Walker, Stone and Chiniquy. Moved that the city engineer be instructed to permit a profile for a permanent sewer under the railroad, accross the right of way at Third Street. Carried.

Moved that the city recorder advertise for bids for excavating a tunnel for a sewer under the railroad embankment at Third Street, and also advertise for bids on the brick work for the said sewer. Moved that a committee be appointed to ascertain how many will take water from mains already laid and those contemplated. Carried.

Application was made by Mr. Hanson, agent of the Nickel Plate Circus for a rebate of license. Moved and carried that a rebate of $75 be allowed. Council then adjourned.

FACTS FOR THE FARMERS.

THOROUGHBREDS FOR THE GENERAL FARMER.

Breeders Gazette: American farmers have a good reputation for shrewdness and for ability to adapt themselves to their surroundings; yet there are tens of thousands of them who refuse to believe that they can profitably make any direct use of pure-bred stock—cattle, for instance—or who, at the most, only make use of pure-bred bulls. It is unquestionably true that cross-bred or grade animals are often fully equal to the pure-bred ones for beef or milk production; but there is still a demand for more pure-bred animals than can be had. Great prices cannot be made by the average farmer-breeder of pure cattle; but he must be a dull man, indeed, who cannot fine sale for his young stock—bulls and heifers—at prices considerably in advance of what he can obtain for even good grade animals. There are some breeds which are in little demand, but there is no need of selecting any of these. Shorthorns are now bred in such great numbers and so generally distributed over the country that almost any farmer, in any part of the United States in which good cattle are kept, can obtain all he may need at moderate prices. Some who are prejudiced against this breed point to the fact that Shorthorns can be bought at quite moderate prices as evidence that they are losing their popularity. The class of farmers we have in mind may well be thankful that prices are as they are. Such farmers cannot afford to pay $1,000 or even $500 for a bull or cow, but they can afford, as we fully believe, to pay $100 to $200 for good individuals of good breeding, even if fashion has set her face against certain crosses in the pedigrees.

Let us take a case within the reach of any one of some hundreds of our farmer-readers who have never bred or owned a pure Shorthorn cow. Suppose farmers buys a good bull and three, four or a half dozen cows or heifers at an average of $100 each. If one be content to accept unfashionable pedigrees and colors, and not insist on buying "show" animals, good, fair shorthorns can be obtained at this price or for an advance of $50 each at most over the price demanded for "scrubs." These cattle can be kept as cheaply as grades cross-bred animals, aside from danger of loss by disease or accident. Interest on the difference in cost over the value of good grade cattle will be the only additional cost of the progeny of these cattle. There may be places where it is not possible to sell a fair Shorthorn for $5 or $10 more than the price of a graded steer or heifer of like age, but we do not know where such places are to be found.

With anything like average success the sales of the young bulls will at least, repay the interest on the extra cost of the first purchase. When the herd of breeding females has reached twenty head the additional $200 or $800 at first expended over what would have been necessary to purchase grade cows cuts but little figure, while the herd will be worth, say $2,000, instead of $1,000 or $1,200. We are purposely using low figures. It often happens that large profits come from buying higher-priced cattle, but we want to impress upon many who could not be influenced to buy even one animal at $300 that they can make money, and almost without risk, by purchasing and breeding cattle of the lowest-priced families.

'ROUND HOME.

Buffalo coats were in order this 4th.

Jack Kivel, of Warren, was in the city two or three days last week.

A large invoice of fresh canned goods at Bauchman & Milette's.

The street sprinkler is taking a rest, we have not needed it for several days.

Gen. Frank Barney, celebrated the fourth with his many friends in Crookston.

Preaching in the M. E. church next Sunday at the usual hours by Rev. P. J. Brown.

Ole Lashun and George O. Reilay, of Grand Forks were in the city over the fourth.

The Fourth is past and we are still selling groceries and provisions as low as ever. Bauchman & Milette.

The fourth of July for 1884 is a day of the past, still Berthiaume Bros., are selling watches and jewelry as low as ever.

Dunk Terry is the happy father of a bouncing baby boy. Dunk says that this Fourth was really his first celebration.

We are receiving new goods every day and have a fine line of fancy groceries. Call and see us. Bauchman & Milette.

We are bound to keep up with the times, if you don't believe it call and see our fine line of watches, clocks, jewelry, guns and revolvers, Berthiaume Bro's.

The weather being unfavorable the procession on the Fourth was not very large, yet the fine line of watches, jewelry, etc., showed up in good shape at Berthiaume Bro's.

Everybody traveling on Main Street is pleased to notice the great change; that street is now in the best condition of any in the city. More good street work of that kind would be in order in the city.

Young people's meeting held in the Baptist Chapel every Sunday evening from quarter of seven to quarter of eight. Meeting dismissed in time to get to other church services. All the young people cordially invited.

It is now understood that we are not going to be disappointed entirely after all in the races that were billed for July 4th and 5th but that there will be two days races about July 16th, after the Winnipeg races. The directors of the Agricultural society are doing everything that can be done to have the horses stop here on their return from Winnipeg. We will give dates and particulars later.

We are very sorry to hear of a sad accident that occurred at Argyle. Mr. Shank, a blacksmith of that village, was out with the citizens firing an anvil. He finally took a pitcher of powder and again went to load up but the anvil was hot and there was a terrible explosion, and he stooping over received the charge in his face. It was a terrible sight, his face is completely filled with powder, and he will in all probability loose his sight entirely.

P. A. Dufour, left for Marshall Co., last Monday morning. He is retained in a suit for the Merchants' Bank, of Canada, against one Alexander McKay, of Marshall Co., to recover the snug little sum of $48,089.23. This is no doubt the largest case ever tried in the Northwest. Mr. Dufour has already attached a large amount of personal property. Mr. Dufour is alone on his side of the question, which certainly shows the utmost confidence of the Merchants' Bank of Canada in his ability.

Farmers Take Notice.

No More Danger of Fire.

I have invented a smoke-stack that I will guarantee not to throw out any sparks, and that is perfectly safe to use around stacks of grain. All farmers should see it used, and may see it work by calling at D. Cameron's place, Carman. There is no screen about it, still it is perfectly safe, and the draught is better than any other. I have been engaged in repairing engines and boilers in Crookston this summer.

Notice of Mortgage Sale by Advertisement.

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Theophile C. Patnode and Cordelia Patnode, his wife, mortgagors, to John Cromb, mortgagee, dated the fourth day of September A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the 4th day of September, A. D. 1882, at 1:45 o'clock p. m., in book "H" of mortgages on page 248 on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the amount of fifty-six and 17-100 dollars, and there is yet to become due thereon four hundred and twenty-five dollars and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction by the Sheriff of said County, on Saturday, the 16th day of August A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-four, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure. MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of twenty-five and 78-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Andrew J. Oslie and Martha A. Oslie, his wife, to The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London (Limited) bearing date the 16th day of November A. D. 1881, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 7th day of December A. D. 1881, at 1:16 o'clock p. m., in book "E" of mortgages, on pages 556, 557 and 558, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note of three hundred and fifty dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage, and due the 16th day of November 1886, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January of each year, according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Andrew Oslie and Martha Oslie, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the makers thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. from the time it becomes due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1884, and the interest now due on said interest the said mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said note, should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The southeast quarter of Section eight (8,) Township one hundred and fifty-four (154,) Range fifty (50,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

Dated June 3d A. D. 1884.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication June 5th, 1884.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of thirty-six and 75-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Thomas Nemetz and Annie Nemetz, his wife, to Clarissa W. Phillips, bearing date the 17th day of January A. D. 1882, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 19th day of January A. D. 1882, at 8 o'clock a. m., in book "F" of mortgages, on pages 181, 182 and 183, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for five hundred dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 17th day of January A. D. 1887, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum payable annually, on the 1st day of January of each year according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Thomas Nemetz and Annie Nemetz, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. from the time it becomes due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st, 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, said mortgagee therefor elected that all of said sums described in said note, should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The southwest quarter of Section twenty-two (22,) Township one hundred and fifty-four (154) north, of Range forty-eight (48) west, containing one hundred and sixty acres, in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and $25.00 attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication July 3d, 1884.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of ninety-two and 75-100 dollars ($92.75-100,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by James Ryan, a single man, to James Barton, bearing date the 11th day of December A. D. 1883, and, with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 11th day of December A. D. 1883, at 5:25 o'clock p. m., in book "N" of mortgages, on page 319, that an action at law in which said James Barton was plaintiff, and said James Ryan was defendant, was instituted in the District Court, in and for Polk County, Minnesota, on March 14th, 1884, to recover said debt and that on June 26th, 1884, a judgment was duly rendered in said action for the sum of $102.81 in favor of the plaintiff therein, and against the defendant therein, which said judgment was on the 26th day of June 1884, duly entered in the office of the Clerk of said Court, and that on the 26th day of June 1884 an execution was duly issued from said court in said action and that on June 28th 1884, said execution was returned wholly unsatisfied, and that said sum of $102.81 is now justly due and owing from the defendant in said action to the plaintiff therein.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: Lot number nine (9,) in block number two (2,) in Hurlbut's addition to the townsite of Crookston, according to the recorded plat thereof now on file in the office of the Register of Deeds, of Polk County, Minnesota; also an undivided one-half (½) of lot ten (10) in block twelve (12) in Davis Addition to the townsite of Crookston, according to the recorded plat thereof now on file in the office of the Register of Deeds, of Polk County, Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 16th day of August A. D. 1884, at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication June 5th, 1884.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of thirty-three and 60-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Robert Ritchie to The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London, (Limited,) bearing date the 16th day of April A. D. 1881, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 16th day of April A. D. 1881, at 2:30 o'clock p. m., in book "D" of mortgages, on pages 418, 419, 420 and 421, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note of four hundred dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 16th day of April 1886, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of eight per cent per annum, payable annually on the 1st day of January of each year according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Robert Ritchie, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of the interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the time it became due, and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, the mortgagee therefore elected, that all of said sums described in said note, should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note, and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The southeast quarter (se¼,) of Section twenty-four (24,) Township one hundred and fifty-two (152,) Range forty-nine (49,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and the disbursements allowed by law: which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Arthur Perras, mortgagor, to John Cromb, mortgagee, dated the 31st day of October A. D. 1882, and recorded as a mortgage together with the power of sale therein contained in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the 31st day of October A. D. 1882 at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m., in book "H" of mortgages on page 352 which said mortgage authorized the holder thereof in case of such default to declare due and foreclose the same for the whole amount secured to be paid thereby, and whereas, there is claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the amount of four hundred and sixty-six and 66-100 dollars, being the whole amount secured to be paid thereby, and still unpaid and seven and 35-100 dollars taxes paid by mortgagee, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, and whereas by such default the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of such power of sale contained in, and recorded with said mortgage and of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the west front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction, by the Sheriff of said County, or by his Deputy of said County, on Saturday, the 16th day of August A. D. 1884, at ten o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amount that shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon and costs and expenses of sale, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure. The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are the lot piece or parcel of land situated in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The west half (w½) of the northwest quarter (nw¼) and the west half (w½) of the southwest quarter (sw¼) of Section number fourteen (14) in Township number one hundred and [illegible] Range number forty-two (42) west, of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres of land, according to the United States government survey thereof.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of twenty-five and 75-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Andrew J. Oslie and Martha A. Oslie, his wife, to The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London (Limited) bearing date the 16th day of November A. D. 1881, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 7th day of December, A. D. 1881, at 1:15 o'clock p. m., in book "E" of mortgages, on pages 556, 557 and 558, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note of three hundred and fifty dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage, and due the 16th day of November 1886, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January of each year, according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Andrew Oslie and Martha Oslie, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the makers thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. from the time it becomes due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1884, and the interest now due on said interest the said mortgagee therefore elected that all of said sums described in said note, should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The southeast quarter of Section eight (8,) Township one hundred and fifty-four (154,) Range fifty (50,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of thirty-six and 75-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Thomas Nemetz and Annie Nemetz, his wife, to Clarissa W. Phillips, bearing date the 17th day of January A. D. 1882, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 19th day of January A. D. 1882, at 8 o'clock a. m., in book "F" of mortgages, on pages 181, 182 and 183, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note for five hundred dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 17th day of January A. D. 1887, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent. per annum payable annually, on the 1st day of January of each year according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Thomas Nemetz and Annie Nemetz, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. from the time it becomes due and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st, 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, said mortgagee therefor elected that all of said sums described in said note, should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The southwest quarter of Section twenty-two (22) Township one hundred and fifty-four (154) north, of Range forty-eight (48) west, containing one hundred and sixty acres, in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and $25.00 attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of twenty-nine and 40-100 dollars, which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Camile Bruitts and Sophie Bruitts, his wife, to The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company, of London, (Limited,) bearing date the 4th day of February A. D. 1882, and duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 4th day of February A. D. 1882, at 8:45 o'clock p. m., in book "G" of mortgages, on pages 139, 140 and 141, which said mortgage was given to secure the payment of one note of four hundred dollars, bearing even date with said mortgage and due the 4th day of February 1887, with interest thereon from date until paid, at the rate of seven per cent per annum, payable annually, on the 1st day of January in each year according to the terms of said promissory note of the said Camile Bruitts and Sophie Bruitts, with coupons attached, it being further stipulated in said note, that if the maker thereof should fail to pay any of said interest when due, such interest should bear interest at the rate of ten per cent per annum from the time it became due, and said mortgage should stand security therefor. Default having been made in the payment of the interest due January 1st 1884, and the interest now due on said interest, the said mortgagee therefor elected that all of said sums described in said note should be immediately due and payable according to the provisions of said note, and of the mortgage securing the same, and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter (nw¼) of the southwest quarter (sw¼) and south half (s½) of the northwest quarter (nw¼,) southwest quarter (sw¼) northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section ten (10,) Township one hundred and fifty-one (151,) Range forty-five (45,) containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, will be sold at public auction, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fee, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 31st day of July A. D. 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., of that day, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred and seventy-eight and 25-100 dollars ($378.25-100,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by John B. Dercsier, a single man, mortgagor, to Joseph L. Daoust, mortgagee, bearing date the twelfth day of April A. D. 1883, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 2d day of November A. D. 1883, at 9:50 o'clock a. m., in book "A" of mortgages, on page 228. The said mortgage was duly assigned by an instrument in writing, duly executed and delivered by the said Joseph L. Daoust to Arthur Yvernault, dated the 29th day of May 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds on the tenth day of June 1884, at 2:35 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on page 148, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter (nw¼) of Section six (6,) Township one hundred and fifty (150,) Range forty-four, according to the government survey thereof in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the first day of August A. D. 1884, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

WOODSIDE WARBLINGS.

UNION LAKE, July 5th, 1884.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—Your correspondent has been silent for some weeks, not on account of a dearth of news but pure negligence. Our community just now is in the best of spirits owing to the good condition of crops generally, in fact everything like vegetation is as promising as any country could wish, such as garden vegetables, wild small fruits, etc., wild strawberries are in abundance. To make an estimate of how plentiful these berries are would be almost impossible, but to give your readers some idea I will say that George and Charlie West, on the 2d day of July picked 32 quarts of strawberries inside of five hours, on less than an acre of ground. Who says Polk County cannot be made to grow all the small fruit she needs with proper cultivation? And now as to our progress in settlement and cultivation, twelve months ago the 13 townships were opened for settlement, then a trackless forest and prairie, but how is it to-day? There is a house on every available quarter section within my knowledge, there is also within my knowledge now 200 miles of good wagon road. Some of said roads are cut through heavy timber, all of which have been done by the settlers, and how wisely this work has been done may be judged when it is known that in all available places, the roads are cut on section lines, one, man, Mr. Thomas Lawrence hoving cut two and a half miles. And now we are to have a tri-weekly mail route established from Fosstown to Maple Bay, service to commence August 1st 1884. Goodrich & Co., will start their saw mill again next week as the demand for native lumber is now increasing owing to the good prospects of the growing crops. Uncle Daniel Cameron and wife were out on their claim last week. Now you may think we of the rural district have no excitement or amusement; such is not the case. Not long ago there was a very lively and interesting footrace near Maple Bay, between Mr. Eber Cameron and a Norwegian. It happened in this wise: your correspondent was riding with Mr. Cameron when owing to a change in the road Mr. C's team kept the old road, which, unfortunately ran across the Norwegian's claim which the Norwegian objected too, therefore he came out and in anything but a friendly manner ordered Eber to turn back. But he not being of the crawfish kind, insisted on finding the new road by a nearer way. The Norwegian then took hold of the bridles of Eber's team and called Eber a naughty, very naughty name, then Eber got out of the wagon, we expected to witness a puglistic punching match, but instead the scene changed with the rapidity of a drama from a fisticuff into a footrace. The Norwegian in the lead and Eber bringing up the rear, but although he is no slouch on a race, he could not catch that Norsk man, and after a lively race of something like a quarter of a mile, Eber had to give it up and came back, a wiser man. No wonder that it was the North men who broke the chariot wheels of Rome and thus weakened her power, they perhaps ran against them when the Romans were after them. We understand after the 1st of July we will have our mail on Saturdays, thus giving us the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL on Saturday instead of Tuesday.

FARM NOTES.

The Prairie Farmer.

WIRE-FENCE FOR HOGS.

A wire fence, with wires broken, or loose, or slack, is the worst nuisance on a farm. When the ground will permit, a heavy furrow thrown from each side against the fence would be a great protection. We find no trouble in making a hog fence of wire. Use six wires, and posts about a rod apart. Use hog wire for the lower strands, and put the lower wire quite close to the ground, and the second four inches above the first. They are cheaper than boards, and in every way better.

AXIOMS FOR DAIRYMEN.

The milking qualities of a cow depend more upon those of her sire's mother than upon those of her own mother.

One cow which will give 5,000 pounds of milk in a season, will bring more net profit than 3 cows producing only 3,000 lbs. each.

Good butter and cheese can not be made from the milk of cows which are deprived of pure water.

A putrid carcass polluting the air of a pasture will spoil not only the milk of the cows running there, but also the entire contents of the vat into which the tainted milk is poured at the factory.

The patron who will bring impure or imperfect milk to the factory, is like a passenger boring holes in the ship which keeps him and all the others afloat.

The one sure way to have good cows is to raise them yourself.

PURE DRINKING WATER,

This matter of pure water to drink, is vital, vital, vital to the well-being of farmers. It may be all very well for the good of the race, for the puny, delicate, "peaked" children to die, but these are the ones that the mothers, at least, love best, and there is a vast deal of rending of hearts over the sickness and death of the delicate ones, young or old, if they and we had pure water to drink. Wells near barnyards, or within two or three hundred feet of them, sometimes contain the germs of disease and death. The old fashioned privy vault, fifty times more dangerous, is usually nearer the house and the well, and contrived, as if by the "arch-enemy," as an unfailing source of malarial poison, of diphtheria, typhus and typhoid fevers, and the evils that follow in their train. There ought to be State laws forbidding the existence of the privy vaults, or even of cess-pools, except, perhaps, cemented cisterns, through which a regular flow of water is maintained.

No system was ever devised equal to the Mosaic, (Dent. xxiii ; 12, 13 and 14,) but that is particularly adapted to a nomadic people, although I have met with it in Louisiana and Kentucky, and know it is the rule in Texas, where the abomination alluded to has never existed, except to a very limited degree.

THE IMPORTANCE OF A SUPPLY OF WOOD.

No one who is at all familiar with forests and their products, needs to be reminded of the importance of having at hand an abundance of wood of various kinds, or how much it contributes to the general welfare and happiness of a nation. But there are those who have not paid much attention to this subject, who claim, and no doubt honestly believe, that the great progress made of late years in the use of iron in the place of wood in building houses, bridges, piers, ships, and other structures, are but indications of what is to follow, and that in a few years there will be no great demand for wood.

The building of railroads, which reach almost every part of the country, has aided in the distribution of coal, and made this in a great measure a more convenient and in many instances a cheaper fuel than wood, but in building these roads a vast quantity of wood has been used, and of the best kinds, not only for ties, of which nearly or quite three thousand are put down per mile, but on many of the roads wood is still used for fuel. There is now nearly or quite one hundred thousand miles of railroads in the United States, and we have only to multiply this by three thousand, to ascertain that three hundred millions of ties have been used in their construction, leaving out of account the thousands of wooden bridges and other structures, in the building of which more or less wood has been consumed. The railroads may have assisted very materially in checking the consumption of wood for fuel, but they have probably more than balanced the account in the amount used in their construction, besides the three hundred millon of ties must be duplicated every ten years, for the average life of a railroad tie will scarcely exceed a decade, and with nearly all kinds, except the best oak, it is a year or two less.

The demand for railroad ties is not likely to decrease, but increase, although as timber becomes scarce and prices advance, preserving processes will doubtless be employed to prevent rapid decay. Stone, brick, and iron will also come into more general use for buildings, but the increase in population will also tend to increase the demand for wood for other purposes besides that of buildings.

'ROUND HOME.

Mr. E. Allen, of Warren, was in the city last Monday.

Bauchman & Milette are selling groceries lower than ever.

Capt. Donaldson, and family went north last Tuesday to their home at Kennedy.

Mr. J. B. Merrill, of Fisher, was in the city last Tuesday and reports everything lovely in that locality.

Stone & Pinkerton are a little ahead of most of our business men, for they deliver goods with a steam engine.

A wrestling match and a foot race were watched with a great deal of interest in our city last Tuesday night.

In front of Morris Bro's. jewelry store is the place where the boys all assemble after supper, to see who is the best jumper.

Mr. O. Simmons left on Wednesday evening for a visit to the old home at Decorah, Iowa. He expects to be gone about two weeks.

The young folks dance at Ericsson's Hall last Tuesday evening was a very pleasant affair. There were about twenty couple present.

Tollef J. Farden was in from Maple Lake this week. Reports crops doing splendidly. Saw a man cutting barley on his way down.

Wm. Watts and Sheriff Zwickey, of this city, were over at Grand Forks this week attending the trial of the murderers of the Ward boys.

A man was brought to this city last Monday, and was pronounced by the Judge of Probate to be insane. He is now on his way to St. Peter.

Upon receipt of the news of the nominations the Democrats of Crookston, headed by the French band, paraded the streets of the city until a late hour.

Just received a new invoice of canned goods at Bauchman & Milette's.

Mrs. Fred Wild, Mrs. R. B. Reilay's mother, and her son and daughter, Miss Frank and Master Ed. (Ed. the engineer, we mean) arrived in this city last Monday.

Rev. S. L. Boston, of Fisher, will occupy the pulpit of the Presbyterian church morning and evening, Sabbath next July 20th in exchange with the pastor, Rev. R. L. Adams.

Teas, coffees and spices a specialty at Bauchman & Milette's.

We received a pleasant call this morning from Dr. C. S. Smith, of Donaldson, Kittson Co. The doctor has just returned from the convention at Moorhead and reports an interesting meeting.

The new saw mill is now running every day. Crowds of people go to see it run, and it won't be long before the land between Crookston and Carman will be covered with large piles of lumber.

W. H. Jenne narrowly escaped from having one of his legs broken last week. While trying to get into the saddle his foot slipped and he fell and it is thought one of the bones of his foot is fractured.

Ole P. Renne brought in from his wheat field in the town of Garden, on Wednesday, a sample of wheat that stands four feet and eight inches high. He reports crops in that town the best he ever saw. Expects to commence cutting barley next week.

Mrs. I. U. Jennings left on Wednesday evening for an extended trip east. She will go to Norwalk, Ohio to visit with her daughter, Mrs. I. M. Underhill, after which she will go to Marshall, Mich. to visit with her mother. She expects to be gone until Sept. 1st.

Mr. Ira D. Blanchard has received a new well boring machine and has started after a flowing well on the farm of Mr. M. R. Brown. He has gone down 100 feet and struck a rock which does not discourage him a bit as he has a drill that will go through it like sand.

By reference to the big ad. on our first page it will be noticed that the date of the Farmers' Mass Convention has been changed slightly. Last week we were instructed to announce it for Thursday and Friday, July 24th and 25th. It has been changed to Friday and Saturday, 25th and 26th. Every [illegible] in the business should [illegible] delegate and be there.

[illegible] of N. Barrette, aged [illegible] drowned last Sunday between 12 and 1 o'clock. It seems that he and another boy larger than himself got into a boat and started across the river in search of berries. When they reached the opposite bank the larger boy started away to look for berries and left the smaller boy in the boat; he did not want to go, being [illegible] he was afraid of thistles and rank grass. When the boy returned to the boat after his search for berries the little Barrette boy was gone. He called [illegible] for him, and finally noticed his hat out in the river and then noticed that the stern of the boat was all wet [illegible] he had fallen in and in trying to [illegible] had splashed [illegible] over the boat. The boy [illegible] and crossed the river, ran and told Mr. Barrette. Several men then started out to drag the river, and about 4 o'clock they found the body about [illegible] from where he had fallen in.

Frank E. Hunt and Mr. McCarty of Red Lake Falls, were in the city last Tuesday.

Will Ellis returned from Minneapolis last Thursday morning and reports times lively below.

Cleveland and Hendrick's cigars are on sale in the city but the boys say they burn out too quick.

The State Editorial Association meets in St. Paul on Tuesday, July 30th. They will excurt to Lake Superior this year.

Some part of the machinery at Lee & Herrick's mill was broken Thursday morning and the mill will not run for several days.

On account of the storm Wednesday night the races Thursday had to be postponed. As yet we do not know what day they will take place.

The Democrats of our city had quite a torchlight procession last Tuesday evening. That is right, boys, have your fun while you can, for it won't last long.

The Democrats held a ratification meeting at the Opera House on Tuesday evening preceded by a street parade. On both occasions the small boy, to the number of a hundred or so, followed closely in the wake with tin pans and every conceivable noisy thing and shouted themselves hoarse for "Blaine and Logan!" Among the speakers who "whistled in the graveyard," were John Leo, Esq. Lilly and Mr. Wilkinson. Considering the subject, their efforts were good. The Democrats have trotted out their best timber and are making desperate efforts to get there but, as usual, have undertaken too big a contract.

Just received. A car-load of Buggies selected by an experienced carriage-builder all warranted. Call early and select one. McKinnon Bros.

I would say to the people of Polk County that I have on sale some of the most desirable lots in the city of Crookston.

Notice of Mortgage Sale by Advertisement.

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Theophile Painode and Cordelia Painode, his wife, mortgagors, to John Cromb, mortgagee, dated the fourth day of September A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-two, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the 4th day of September A. D. 1882, at 1:45 o'clock p. m., in book "H" of mortgages, on page 218 on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the amount of fifty-six and 17-100 dollars, and there is yet to become due thereon four hundred and twenty-five dollars and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction by the Sheriff of said County, on Saturday the 30th day of August A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-four, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage, and so to be sold, are the lots, pieces or parcels of land situated in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to wit: Lots number four (4) eleven (11) and twelve (12,) and the southeast quarter (se¼) of the southeast quarter, (se¼,) all in Section number eighteen (18,) in Township number one hundred and fifty-one (151) north, of Range number forty-three west, of fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and seventeen (117) acres more or less according to the United States survey thereof.

Dated July 2d, 1884. JOHN CROMB,

MINNESOTA NEWS NOTES.

The lumbermen of Minneapolis have acquiesced in the proposition to shut down their mills the first of September.

Gen. Terry and the officers stationed at Fort Snelling have accepted an invitation to attend the national encampment of the G. A. R. at Minneapolis.

Minneapolis people are holding meetings with a view of abating the tramp nuisance.

The secretary of war has ordered an engineer board, composed of Lieut. Col. Poe, Maj. MacKenzie and Maj. Allen, to meet at Duluth, Minn., to determine the questions concerning the bill authorizing the Northern Pacific railroad to build a bridge across the St. Louis river.

The Congregational ministers of Minneapolis and St. Paul, with their families, enjoyed their annual excursion to Lake Minnetonka Monday, about ninety persons.

A man named William Elliott was run over and killed by a train near Frazee City on Saturday. He was evidently about forty-five or fifty years of age. Upon the body was found a note for $10, dated at Minneapolis, April 9, signed by G. W. Adrian, and also a Nothern Pacific express receipt for a watch sent to Miss Mary Jane Elliott, Portage City, Wis., dated June 5.

Pap Thomas Post, G. A. R. of Brainerd, being dissatisfied with the railway rates will visit the Minneapolis reunion on a flatboat, capable of carrying 200 persons.

At the trial of P. B. O'Connell, at Hallock for selling whisky on Sunday, O'Connell and his crony, Charles Plan, attacked County Attorney Kouzen, hurling ink stands and other heavy things at him, until he was obliged to use a revolver to defend himself.

The republican state central committee met at St. Paul on Tuesday, the 8th. A letter was received from Mathew G. Norton of Winona, resigning his position on the national committee, on account of private business. Ex-Gov. Davis was unanimously elected in his place. Mark D. Flower sent in his resignation of membership on the state committee and Maj. John Espy of St. Paul was elected Flower's successor. Gen. Flower stated that his resignation was given because he wished to abide in letter and spirit by the conditions of the amended civil service law.

A committee of citizens consisting of T. H. Loyhed, Gordon E. Cole, T. B. Clement, J. D. Greene and Donald Grant, at Faribault have been chosen to ascertain upon what terms the Minnesota & Northwestern road could be brought to their city. The country through which the road passes is considered a tributary to Faribault, and the citizens do not wish to be cut off by a railroad, and they will use all possible and honorable means to induce the company to change its route so as to take in their city.

The First Methodist church of Minneapolis celebrated its thirty-fifth anniversary.

Ben Lord of Sauk Center, who has for several weeks been suffering fits of temporary insanity, jumped from the third story of the Sauk Center mill into the river. His leg was twice broken near the knee and between the knee and ankle, the latter a comminuted fracture, and the right ankle broken, but he will recover.

The fishing season is now fairly under way, and every evening at the St. Paul union depot may be seen numbers of fishermen returning from the lakes, with large strings of various kinds of fish. The sight of these calls to the mind that Minnesota is the fishiest state in the Union, and that more of the finny tribe are taken out of the water within her limits than in any other state or territory. There are in Minnesota more than one and a half millions of acres in over seven thousand lakes, in all of which are to be caught some variety of game fish.

At Herman the furniture store of Nels Schroeder was struck by lightning on the 4th and with the entire contents is a total loss. The fire then spread to the carriage and paint shop of I. D. Mullen and A. J. Eaton. Most all of the stock was burned, but the new work was saved. The fire then attacked the Herald office, where it was finally got under control, after demolishing the building, but the contents were mostly saved.

The wife of Rev. J. W. Bay applied to the Congregational church of Lake City, of which she was a member, for a letter of dismissal, which was granted with a recommendation. In a caustic letter she declined the recommendation, saying the Congregational society in Lake City was the laughing stock of all the other churches, it being governed by impulse rather than by Christian principle. A simple letter of dismissal was then given to her, and Pastor J. W. Horner remarked that it was better to be a subject of laughter than groans and tears.

J. W. Haugus, Pittsburg, has been disbarred from practice as a pension attorney before the interior department. His offense consisted in receiving illegal fees.

The residence of Dr. F. A. Williamson, Red Wing, was burglarized and a watch and chain taken. The thief was no doubt an expert. He effected an entrance into the house through a window, but before beginning operations he opened an outside door in case he had to leave in a hurry. The doctor awoke, sprang out of bed, and the intruder [illegible]

Personal Gossip.

The ex-queen and king of Naples, who have been in wretched circumstances since they were driven from their kingdom, are now restored to opulence by the death of the dowager empress of Austria, who has bequeathed to them a fortune of $6,000,000.

The record of young Irving Hale, of New York, who carried off the highest honers at West Point this year, beats any record that was ever made at that famous institution. The boy commenced at the head of his class. He was first in every study in the first year he entered the academy. In the second year he held his first position in all his studies but one, and in the third year he found himself again at the head in every branch of study. He now stands first in the graduating class in all but one study, Spanish, and in that there is but one-tenth of a mark between him and Cadet Sanford, who is first. Hale is the son of a school teacher. He will be assigned to duty in the engineer corps United States army.

A Vassar College girl-graduate thus treated the "dude" in her recent commencement essay: "God made the dude, therefore let him stand for a man. Man wants but little here below, nor wants that little long. The dude is a curious specimen of the genus homo, made over a year ago. The brain of a dude is not the real brain—it is only something like it. The object of the dude is to render himself agreeable to society. Had Darwin lived he would have used the dude as an illustration of the development of the species. His plumage, though not brilliant, is abundant. All the sensible of both sexes tire of him. In the future he will exist only in a museum of anatomy."

United States Minister Lowell presented a gold medal to George Read, formerly chief of the life-boat brigade at Deal, Eng., for an act of heroism performed by him nearly twenty-two years ago. In October, 1862, the American ship Annie Hooper was wrecked off the Kentish coast near Deal, and Read and his men by the exercise of great skill and daring, in which Reed especially imperiled his life, succeeded in rescuing the whole crew of the doomed vessel. In replying to Mr. Lowell's eulogistic speech and accepting the medal, Read said that he had only done his duty, and that in fact the circumstance had made so little impression upon him that when he was notified that he was to receive a medal he had almost forgotten the occurrence of the wreck.

The marriage of Mr. Hallam Tennyson to Miss Audrey Boyle was solemnized at Westminster Abbey, proved to be the leading society event of the season. The bridegroom is the eldest son of the poet laureate, and was named for his father's earliest and warmest friend, Arthur Hallam, whose untimely death inspired the poem, "In Memoriam." In addition to the poet laureate and scores of lords, both temporal and spiritual there were present Premier Gladstone, Minister Lowell, Mr. Henry Irving, and a host of other celebrities. The bride was charmingly attired in a robe of ivory-colored satin covered with Brussels lace, and a rich bridal veil with pearl and diamond ornaments. There were ten bridemaids uniformly dressed in silk of the palest blue, with India muslin overskirts. The bride received over three hundred presents, including the inevitable India shawl.

Princess Elizabeth, of Hesse, and Grand Duke Sergius, of Russia, were married in the chapel of the Winter Palace, St. Petersburg, recently, with the customary pomp. Two services were performed, the first in accordance with the orthodox ritual and the second according to the Lutheran rites. At the conclusion of the services a salute of 101 guns were fired in honor of the newly-wedded couple. A state banquet was given in the afternoon, at which toasts were offered in honor of the Czar and Czarina, the bride and bridegroom, and the Grand Duke of Hesse. In the evening there was a grand ball. All the festivities were on a scale of unusual magnificence. The Grand Duke Sergius is brother of the Emperor, and was born May 11, 1857. The Princess is the daughter of the late Princess Alice, second daughter of Queen Victoria. She is 20 years old.

Facetious Paragraphs.

"What has become of our wonderful crimson sunsets, I wonder?" said Tom. "Why," replied Laura, thoughtfully, looking up from the Bazar, "I suppose they have all gone out of style. Everything is very quiet and elegant this spring. I knew those winter sunsets were too high-colored to last long. They might do for the evening," she said presently, in a reflective mood, "but they were too loud for the street." And, bending over the description of a new walking suit, she did not see Tom, fallen from his chair, staring wildly at her, and painfully grasping for breath.

A Vassar girl writes: "I haven't seen a man in a month of Sundays. We were out taking a 'constitutional' Saturday and came across a scarecrow in a corn field. All the girls ran for it at once, and I only managed to secure a part of one of the skirts of its coat. Still, it was something."

Just from Boston—"Do, Imogene keep away from the piano, please. Your attempted playing tires me." "Why, now Clotilide, you said only week before last that I was playing remarkably well." "I know, Imogene. But my judgment was immature. You do play some of Liszt's simple music quite well, but since I was in Boston my soul cries out for Wagner. I would learn the 'Wedding March' from 'Lohengrin' if I were you." "I'll learn my wedding march from this house before you will. Yours will be music of the distant, very distant future." Conversation followed by true sisterly silence.

Mrs. B. (reading)—A distinguished author remarks that it is a greater compliment to be trusted than to be loved. Does not that seem odd? Mr. B.—Not odd at all. Mrs. B.—Why, what could be a greater compliment than to be loved? Mr. B.—To be trusted, just as that author says. I am loved, am I not? Mrs. B.—Of course you are. Mr. B.—But I can't get trust at the grocery stores.—Philadelphia Call.

Court (to prosecutor)—Then you recognize this handkerchief as the one which was stolen from you? Prosecutor—Yes, your Honor. Court—And yet it isn't the only handkerchief of the sort in the world. See, one I have in my pocket is exactly like it. Prosecutor—Very likely, your Honor. I had two stolen.—Kenney's Gazette.

A Stranger in Arizona.

"Oh, we ain't entirely without amusements and sports in Arizona," said a bearded passenger from the southwest. "Of course, theaytres and circuses are pretty sca'ce, and there hain't 'nough level ground in the territory to play a game of base-ball on. But we has our fun all the same. In the town where I live—mind you, we are gettin' civilized out there, and have towns now instead of mere camps—in my town our best sport is with a colored man named Sam. He's a big, strong jack—that is, he was. Poor fellow, he tempted fate too often and got took in finally. Sam made his livin' furnishing fun for the boys. He would draw a chalk line on the floor, get down in front of it on all fours, and for ten cents let any man take a big bag of sand and crack him one from behind. If the striker knocked Sam over the line he got his money back. Well, this sport went along several months, until one day a wicked-looking stranger comes to town. He saw Sam taking in the dimes in the hotel bar-room, where the stranger was a pretty good customer himself already: 'Will ye let me have a lick at ye for a dime?' he inquired of Sam. 'Sartinly, sah; three for a quarter. Take a quarter's wuth?' The stranger said he guessed one would be enough. Sam got down on all fours. The stranger then picked up the sandbag. Sam lopped his head down and grinned between his legs at the striker. The sandbag is raised high in the air, the wicked-looking stranger looks wickeder out of his eyes, and we get on to his powerful frame and arms all of a sudden. Like a stroke o' lightning down comes the bag—poor Sam." "Did it hurt the nigger much?" "Hurt him? Nobody knows. The fact is, when he got down on the floor his head was pointed toward the wide-open door of the bar-room, out of which we could look down the mountain side. Sam catapulted out o' that door and hain't been seen since. One o' the boys said he believed the coon had never stopped till he got back to 'ole Alabam' he used ter talk so much about." "Did you find out who the stranger was?" "Well, I should say we did. His name was Sullivan, a prize-fighter from down east somewhere."

Something is constantly troubling Mr. Hebert Spencer in his mind. In an article in the July Popular Science Monthly he proves to his own satisfaction that popular government is merely mob rule. Well, now, Mr. S., suppose it is—why should it disturb you so much? Suppose the United States is a mob government, if you please. The people thereof are satisfied they have a good government, one that has grown better and better all the time since it was first organized. The Nation, too, has made some progress, and ranks as tolerably respectable among the other nations of the earth.

The traveler needs acids and nerve-stimulants much more than quantities of heavy food; and there is no sense in eating a heavy meal with a digestion all shaken and demoralized with jarrings and fatigue. A flask of claret and biscuits, the appetizing form known as "fruit" biscuits, is better than "squarer" meals. If a lunch-basket is taken, a bottle of cold tea with milk and sugar, or coffee ditto, provided that the coffee is good, will be found most refreshing.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Save the Children—Croup will Come—Be Prepared for it.

Croup will attack the children; it cannot well be avoided, but the "little ones" can be saved terrible racking pain and torture, and the parents sorrow and angulsh, by having a bottle of Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil at hand to give them on the first appearance of Croup. It never fails to give relief. One mother writes: —"My little girl had Croup of the worst form, and Thomas' Eclectric Oil relieved when everything else failed. Five Minutes After the first dose she was quite easy."

Take a child screaming with pain from a burn, and you can immediately stop the pain with Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil. As it is almost impossible to protect the rising generation from an occasional burn, fathers and mothers should provide for the emergency by keeping Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil handy. It is just as good for a scald, a frost bite, a bruise, a strain, and heals a cut quickly.

When the children cough, Eclectric Oil will at once stop the cough.

When they have colds, it will cure them quicker than anything you could use.

If throats are sore rub Eclectric Oil around the tonsils, and a few drops given internally will cure in 12 hours.

Ex-Mayor Powderly of Scranton, Pa., says he never believed such degradation possible as he has just witnessed in the Connellsville coke region of Pennsylvania among the Hungarians. At one of the ovens he saw a woman half naked drawing the hot coke from the chamber. She had no covering on her head and very little on her person. Her appearance was that of one whose spirit had been broken by hardship and hard work. Her attire consisted of a coarse chemise and a pair of cowhide boots. In a freight car close by stood another woman stowing the coke as it came to the car. She stood in the doorway and was dressed in a rough, loose-fitting outer garment and an apron. Her person from the waist up was exposed. Her feet were encased in a pair of heavy shoes, and her legs were exposed from the knee down. Other scenes were worse than these. These women are not employed by the corporations, but assist their husbands and fathers in their labor.

A Lucky Kangaroo Hunter.

One of the most daring Kangaroo hunters of Australia, and his stag hounds, were terribly lacerated by a wounded Kangaroo, on the great sheep ranche of Mr. Alfred Hay, Boomanoomana, N. W. S., and were entirely cured by the use of St. Jacobs Oil. Mr. Hay writes that it is the greatest pain-cure ever introduced for man or beast.

The effect that the disappearance of forests has upon climate receives fresh illustration almost every day. In Italy the clearing of the Apennines is believed to have seriously changed the climate of the Po valley, and now the African sirocco, never known to the armies of ancient Rome, breathes its hot, blithing breath over the right bank of the river in the territory of Parma. The removal of the pine forests near Ravenna induced the same desolating wind, and the same destruction of the old forests of Vosges and of the Cevennes has had like deteriorating influences upon the climate. In Egypt, where during the French occupation in 1798 not a drop of rain fell for sixteen months, and where from time immemorial the country has been a rainless bed of sand, Mohammed Ali, by planting his millions of fig and orange trees, has seen his country blessed with an annual rainfall of several inches.

Perhaps those who want to go to Europe without crossing the ocean may some day have their wishes gratified. A correspondent says it is proposed that a railroad shall be constructed along the Pacific coast to the extremity of Alaska, where a ferriage would connect the tourist with the Russian railway system, which would be extended to the Siberian side of Behring's strait. As the strait is only 45 miles wide between East Cape and Cape Prince of Wales, the distance in a swift steamer would be trifling, even for the victims of sea-sickness. Parlor cars transferred to the steamers might practically give an overland route from New York to St. Petersburg without change.

Dr. Koch considers opium the best preventive of cholera. He believes no genuine remedy exhists. He considers phenic as the best disinfection. He has a poor idea of the spirit of the Marseilles population.

"What Hon. J. C. Burrows Says."

For more than five years past a member of my family has been afflicted with Hay Fever, culminating late in the fall with a hacking cough, which would increase in severity until the return of warm weather. Every remedy proved futile, and relief was only found in a change of climate. There was a recurrence of the difficulty last fall, attended with the usual cough and violent protracted sneezing. Not half a bottle of Papillion Catarrh Cure had been used before the cough entirely disappeared, and general relief followed. It is simply wonderful! Don't fail to try it.

J. C. Burrows,
(Ex-Memb. Congress, 4th Dist., Mich.)
Kalamazoo, Mich., March 12th, 1884.

You Can't Make $500 by Reading This, even if you have chronic nasal catarrh in its worst stages, for although this amount of reward has for many years been offered by the proprietors of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for any case of catarrh they cannot cure, yet notwithstanding that thousands use the Remedy they are seldom called upon to pay the reward, and when they have been so called upon they have universally found that the failure to cure was wholly due to some overlooked complication, usually easily removed by a slight modification of the treatment. Therefore, if this should meet the eye of anybody who has made faithful trial of this great and world-famed Remedy without receiving a perfect and permanent cure therefrom, that person will do well to either call upon or write to the proprietors, the World's Dispensary Medical Association, of Buffalo, N. Y., giving all the particulars and symptoms in the case. By return mail they will get good advice free of all costs.

BEST IN THE WORLD.
Get the Genuine. Sold Everywhere.

Sir Titus Salt, of Saltaire, Eng., has closed a contract for the establishment of an iron plant at Dayton, Tenn., involving an investment of nearly £1,000,000. Sir Titus represents a syndicate of Englishmen who several years ago secured a tract of 43,000 acres of land forty miles north of Chattanooga, on the Cincinnati Southern railroad. This land has been surveyed, iron and coal deposits being found underlying most of it. Here two large blast furnaces are to be built, railroads to the Tennessee river are being constructed, and it is expected that part of Tennessee will speedily be opened to general traffic and settlement.

PAIN!

Pain is supposed to be the lot of us poor mortals, as inevitable as death, and liable at any time to come upon us. Therefore it is important that remedial agents should be at hand to be used in an emergency, when we are made to feel the excruciating agonies of pain, or the depressing influence of disease.

Such a remedial agent exists in that old Reliable Family Remedy,

PERRY DAVIS'
Pain-Killer

It was the first and is the Only Permanent Pain Reliever.

ITS MERITS ARE UNSURPASSED.

There is nothing to equal it for curing

Colic, Cramps, Spasms, Heartburn, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Flux, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache.

CURES CHOLERA!

When Cholera prevailed in the years 1849 and 1850,

GENERAL C. R. WHEAT.

Romantic Career of a Southern General Brought to a Close Early in the War.

Richmond Letter to Phil. Times.

On a gentle knoll, in that part of Hollywood Cemetery which slopes down towards the river near the Old P[illegible] House, there was buried more than twenty years ago a military chieftain whose whole life was mostly spent in war amid constant danger and oftentimes romantic adventures. A Virginian by birth, a Tennesseean by adoption, a lawyer by profession, when a call was made for volunteers during the war with Mexico, nearly forty years ago, he entered the service of his country at the age of nineteen, and, his name being the first enlisted, he was elected first lieutenant of a cavalry company from Memphis. He passed through the Mexican war, being promoted in his company and receiving complimentary notices from the Commander-in-Chief for meritorious conduct and soldierly bearing on the field of battle. And, after this long lapse of time, there still hangs to-day, beneath his faded portrait on the wall of his father's house, a splendid sword, a treasured memento of an act of gallantry and chivalry worthy of "ye knights of ye olden time."

A detachment of troops scouting far in advance of the main army came to a river, a bridge defended by artillery and a little town on the opposite bank protected by infantry. A hot engagement followed at once, the bridge was taken, the artillery captured, the town carried by storm and the routed Mexicans pursued for miles along the dusty lanes by the dashing dragoons. Among the fugitives was a veteran general who had fought bravely against the invaders and overtaken while vainly attempting to rally his men in face of the tide that was bearing him away; but convinced at last that all hope was lost and too old to run he tendered his sword to the officer commanding the cavalry. Not a word of the other's strange tongue could either understand, but there is a language of good manners more eloquent than words, and, respecting the white locks of the venerable patriot, his sword was courteously returned with a sign that he should be permitted to retain it.

Several weeks afterwards, when the prisoners were all collected at headquarters for exchange or release on parole, the Mexican general requested General Scott to send for his captor, and, when he arrived, said, through the medium of an interpreter, he desired to express his thanks in presence of the American commander to the young captain whose valor and chivalrous conduct he had witnessed in action and whose hospitality he had enjoyed after the battle. At the mess table his plate had been the first helped with the most savory bits; at night he had rested upon a couch while its owner, wrapped in a blanket, slept upon the ground. To protest against this or attempt to utter words of gratitude in a strange language seemed alike misunderstood by one who persisted in paying him all the respect and kind attention due to a parent, one who treated an unfortunate prisoner more like a conquerer than a captive and to whom he wanted to present here, as a gift in token of his friendship and high regard, that sword which he had declined to receive as a capture from a vanquished foe on the field.

Returning home at the close of the war he followed for a time the practice of law in New Orleans, but a revolution breaking out in Mexico we find him after a few years back in that distracted country on the side of the Liberals against the Imperialists. Many battles were fought with varying success, and the American captain, during four years' service, rises to the rank of general.

We next hear of him in Cuba, then Central America, then with Garibaldi in Italy, where his steady courage and daring charge attracted general attention and excited the wonder and admiration of all the foreign correspondents, who, in frequent mention of his name, describe him as galloping over battlefields, through storms of shot and shell, as gaily as most men ride to a banquet.

When the tocsin of civil war was sounded its echo reached him in a far-off land, and though suffering from wounds he returned home to meet the invaders of Virginia upon his own native heath. Hurriedly organizing a battalion of troops he hastened on to Manassas in time to take a conspicuous part in the great battle of the 21st of July. Placed in position on the extreme left of a line of battle eight miles long, it fell to his lot to meet the first advance of the Federals and for more than an hour, with only two pieces of artillery and 394 men, fought a desperate battle and held in check Heintzleman's Division of 9,000 men. General Beauregard says: "This man has won for himself and his commands the proud distinction of belonging to that heroic band who saved the first hour, at the battle of Manassas."

When reinforcements at last reached this part of the field the battallion was found cut to pieces and its gallant leader lay prone upon the crimsoned sod with a bullet hole through both lungs, from which bloody air bubbles were escaping on each side as he breathed. Hauled away to the Junction and stretched upon a bed, he was informed about midnight by a very eminent surgeon that "he could not live to see day," to which he replied in a hoarse whisper, "I don't think you know much about it. I don't feel like dying yet." "But," said the surgeon, "there is no instance on record of recovery from such a wound." "Well, then," he rejoined, "I will put my case upon record." And to the surprise of everybody he did recover in time to join Jackson in a very active campaign in the Valley and came down with him to begin the "Seven Days' Fight Around Richmond."

But, after all his wonderful escapes our patriot, hero and martyr fell in the bloody battle of "Gaines' Mill," near Cold Harbor, on the 27th of June, 1862. The handsomest man, most splendid physique, six feet seven inches high and three hundred pounds weight, the most superb horseback rider in the army, at the age of thirty-six was dead. His request, "Bury me on the field, boys," was complied with; but his body was afterwards taken up and moved to Hollywood and reinterred in this spot. Among magnificent vaults and tombs, massive beautiful shafts and marble slabs carved and capped by exquisite [illegible] designs of angels, lambs, lillies and doves, emblems of love, purity and innocence, rise in profusion on every side [illegible] the landscape around this neglected grave. No rank, no title, no date of birth or death, no record of the heroic deeds in his eventful life, and [illegible] made doubtfully by [illegible] by a people of a distant land, who, perhaps, loved him more because they knew him better. A pine at his feet, through which the gentle breezes seem to sigh, and a small chip of marble ten inches high, planted at his head, with this inscription on its face, C. R. WHEAT, LA. is all that marks the last resting place of this remarkable man.

Sequels of Disease.

A disease is often followed by other diseases,—one or more,—resulted directly or indirectly from the first sickness. Sometimes these come from the debility that caused the first disease, whereby inherited or other tendencies gain power to develop themselves.

Thus malaria, a fever, diphtheria, or even a severe cold, may give rise to consumption—which might otherwise have been delayed for years, or, perhaps with care, wholly escaped.

Sometimes these secondary diseases due more directly to the primary disease. They then caused either by the destructive effects of the first sickness, at different points of the system; or by the clogging of the eliminating organs with great quantities of debris; or by inflammation of these organs through the stress put on them by the excessive work of elimination. It is to these sequels of disease that physicians apply the word "sequelæ." They are often more dangerous than the original disease.

One of the familiar sequelæ of measles is inflammation of the eyes, sometimes of a very persistent kind. Another is consumption.

A frequent sequela of diphtheria is paralysis, which may last for a year or more. That of typhoid fever is sometimes a congested condition of the bowels—the latter not fully healing from the ulcers that characterize the fever. The patient should not therefore dismiss the doctor too soon.

One of the sequelæ of scarlet fever is rheumatism. And as the latter often gives rise to heart-complaint and pleurisy, so these last are also among the sequelæ of scarlet fever. They may come on either during the progress of the disease, or during convalescence. They may even be overlooked at the time, to reveal themselves—especially heart-complaint—perhaps years later.

Still another sequela is kidney complaint,—chronic or acute,—and varying from slight inflammation up to bright's disease. A child may have had a mild attack of scarlet fever and be wholly over it, apparently doing well, yet suddenly die from total inaction of the kidneys.

The ablest physician may not be able to prevent such a result. But he, and he alone, is aware of the hidden rocks, and any thoughtful person can see that it is vastly safer to let him pilot the case.—Youth's Companion.

Wine.

It should never be forgotten that the ancient wines were all of them quite different from our modern wines. They are simply the product of fermentation, like our home-made currant wine or cider. Of course, they contained alcohol and could intoxicate, if taken in sufficient quantity. Hence a drunkard was one who "tarried long at the wine."

They might have different names, from their age, their color, their taste, their weight, the locality of their production, or as mixed with honey, or with myrrh, or as made from dried grapes, or as being simple, unchanged grape-juice, or the latter as boiled down. But with the exception of the last three, which contained no alcohol, the other wines contained very little, the stongest of all only twelve per cent.

Our modern wines—the wines of commerce—are strengthened by the addition of distilled alcohol. Few of our wine-bibbers would care to drink wine which had not thus been "reinforced." Port is made to contain twenty-four per cent., and sherry twenty-seven. As the strongest French brandy contains only fifty-five per cent., one needs only to double his draught of the latter to secure the full effect of brandy.

But this is not all. The alcohol sometimes employed is amylic alcohol. This gives it a soft, fruity taste. But the effect on the system is exceedingly injurious.

It is eliminated from the body with great difficulty. Hence it accumulates in the system, rendering the blood heavy and tar-like. After a fit of intoxication from it, it may take two or three days for the normal temperature to be restored.

Some wines are treated with lime to neutralize their acidity, and thus they introduce into the body an excess of salts of lime. Some have not ceased to ferment, and the process is completed in the stomach, thus producing dyspepsia. Others are charged with volatile substances to impart what is called "bouquet;" others are "beaded"—by the addition of a mixture made from oil of sweet almond, and sulphuric acid, rubbed together with loaf sugar.

All these additions are injurious, especially when long continued. Further most of our wines are now not the fruit of the vine in any sense, but of the chemist's laboratory.—Youth's Companion.

THE HOLY CITY.

Lights in and Around Jerusalem—The Mosque of Omar—Oriental Cave Dwellings—The Pools of Bethesda and Gihon.

From the San Francisco Evening Bulletin.

A visit to Jerusalem is at first disappointing and unsatisfactory. However well read up upon its present condition one may be, it is still to the mind an ideal city. The sight at first absorbs attention, dispelling the ideal and filling its place with the confusion, jargon and moral and social debris of a hundred Oriental cities, and crowding or covering the sacred places with the ruins of structures of later ages. It is not till one has made himself familiar with the sites and defined the localities, and torn off the accumulations of centuries, and spirited away the living populations and slowly reconstructed the past, that the ideal city rises grand and beautiful and sacred before him. But it comes— slowly comes—under fixed, well-directed, sympathetic looking, like the sight of a bright planet, in the daytime, or like the soft strains of sweet, enchanting music across the harsh sounds of a thronged street. Then the sight of Jurusalem is regarding and grand. You see it, and you do not see it. You see what was, not what is. You see the sites; you reanimate the scene. If you can not do this, do not come to Jurusalem. If you are there and do not do it, hurry away as soon as possible. It is a place of mockeries and lies to you, and can do you no good.

I am not presumtuous enough to attempt any description of Jerusalem, either of the real or the ideal city. Too much has been well written about both, and is familiar or accessible to make this necessary. I shall merely speak of a few points which especially interested me, for this side of the higher associations and emotions which stirred in me as I thought of the wondrous scenes of the past which had been enacted in the very places where I trod.

I visited what is popularly but erroneously called the Mosque of Omar. The real shrine of Omar is now supposed to be part of the Mosque El Aksa, in front of the reputed mosque of that name, and nearer the city wall and the valley of Jehesephat. The true name of the latter is "The Dome of the Rock." This rich and grand mosque—second only to that at Mecca—is octagon in form, and is built around and over the great circular rock (60 feet long, 50 feet wide, and rising 17 feet high at the apex), which is now pretty generally regarded, I believe, by the best authorities, as the basis of the altar of Solomon's Temple. The celebrated dome rises exactly over it, and passages cut through the rock and leading to a tunnel dug through the rock below, and leading out to the foot of Mount Moriah in the valley, are so arranged that the whole could be abundantly flushed with water, showing most admirable preparation for cleansing the premises of the altar and keeping them pure. The temple itself stood west of the altar. This left a very large space for the courts of the temple between the court occupied by the altar and the city wall on the east, but a great area was necessary, in as much as the courts of the temple were sometimes thronged at the great annual feasts by the hundreds of thousands of Jews who went up from all parts of the land to attend the sacred rites.

The vaults under the temple area are something wonderful. There are great chambers, and chambers leading into chambers, and passages leading into a yard built up to furnish a level for the court above Rock also was doubtless taken out for, building into the walls, and at subsequent times the chambers and passages were utilized for various purposes. Under the "Dome of the Rock great living fountains of water were struck, the source of supplies for the temple; thence running through the canal to which I have already referred, and terminating in the pool of Siloam.

There are other subterranean excavations under the city which astonish one. In the northwestern part of the city there is a small opening under the wall on the outside, through which I entered, which soon opened out into a succession of great chambers, which seem to ramify under half the area of the city. Of course, groping with a poor light over the irregular rocks, with the mystery of the place and the sound of water dripping into echoing vaults below, which I could not see, was calculated to emphasize the sense of distance. But there is no doubt that the city for one purpose and another is honeycombed with subterranean vaults.

Nor is Jerusalem singular in this respect. Palestine and Syria is a land of caves and excavations. In no one particular have I been more surprised than in the signs that the inhabitants of this land, from the time of fixed habitations have been cave-dwellers. After they gave up tents and a nomadic life, they burrowed in the rocks. There are many natural caves, and where these did not exist or were too small, the soft chalking limestone, which underlines or crowns the whole country, could be easily cut into dwellings, and the scarcity of timber and material for brick made this the easiest thing to do. The rock could indeed be easily cut into regular blocks, and there was no want of surface loose stones to be erected into houses; and houses were often built in this way. But they were caverns still—caves above ground and made by human hands. They were dark, windowless, one story, low, the roofs flat, and covered with gray limestone earth, which was packed, rolled and dried in the sun, and had but a single opening, which served as door, window and chimney. This looked like another rock on the ground, only a little more regular—a hollow rock or protuberent cave. The cave was the type, and they hugged the ground, and sometimes crept half way into it, so as to look as much like a cave as possible. We shall not be able to reproduce the old inhabitant of Palestine till we conceive of him as substantially a burrower in the rocks—a cave dweller. He not only had his home in the rocks, but he sought natural crypts or chiseled artificial ones in them for resting places for his dead and he dug deep wells through the same matrial and constructed long tunnels through cliffs and hills for aqueducts. Jerusalem was not alone in its subterranean activity and life.

THE POOLS OF BETHESDA AND GIHON.

The pool of Bethesda is not outside of the city, but inside, not far from the northeast corner of the temple area, which is about 1,500 feet long and 1,000 wide. It is now a large, deep hollow or pit, upward of 60 feet deep, 100 wide and 800 long at the top, and but 20 or 80 across at the bottom. It has sometimes surface water; but, as I saw it, there was nothing but mud and filth in it. It seems to be a receptacle for neighborhood city waste, and was anything but an attractive sight.

The pools of Gihon are simply reservoirs in the valley of Hinrom, made by excavating the earth and running a dam across below, for the storage of the water, like a reservoir in the mining regions of California.

From the Mount of Olives one gets the most general view of Jerusalem that can be had from any one point. From the minaret of the mosque, which stands on the summit I could see and trace very distinctly the great natural outlines of the city. I am standing 140 feet above the city at its highest point. Right below my feet is the valley of the Keydron, running nearly due south. Above its steep northern bank rises the massive and high city wall. Just over the wall is Mount Moriah, the temple area, on the left-hand eastern corner of which is the broad and spacious mosque, El Aksa, on the central and western portion the grand imposing mosque, "The Dome of the Rock," known as the Mosque of Omar. Beyond the temple area is the depression which was once a deep ravine, running nearly south, called the Tyropoean. Above this to the northwest rises Mount Zion—quite a high and steep eminence—from which to any other part of the city within the walls, is a very perceptible descent. Except the large area of the temple, which covers about one-sixth of the whole city, within the walls, the rest is one compact, undulating mass of buildings, having winding or irregular seams between them here and there, marking the supposed course of streets, and broken, here and there, by domes and minerets and towers, and the imposing roofs of churches. I see it all under my eye, over on the hill-side yonder. It is a stirring spectacle; not altogether beautiful, not wholly sad. It is a spectacle whose deepest interest is hinted by two facts.—Christ looking upon it and Christ weeping over it. But as I turn round and look in the other direction, my emotions are less mingled. There is only the wildness and majesty and beauty of nature. I look down into the deep valley of the Jordan, 4,000 feet below me, and see the Dead Sea stretching out now as a mirror of glass, and on the other side the dark mountains of Moab and Mount Nebo, and close to me on the south the green fields of Judah covered with flowers. No other sight have I seen of such mingled and contrasting interest in my life as from the top of the Mount of Olives.

Would Not Drink.

There is nothing which the enslaved drunkard will not do to get his liquor. Sometimes, however, the spectacle of one who has lost all his will and his fine feelings, and who has degraded himself below the level of the brutes, makes other men who are on the road to the same degradation pause and reflect.

"No, I won't drink with you to-day, boys," said a drummer to several companions, as they settled down in the smoking-car and passed the bottle. "The fact is, boys, I have quit drinking; I have sworn off."

He was greeted with shouts of laughter by the jolly crowd around him; they put the bottle under his nose and indulged in many jokes at his expense, but he refused to drink, and was rather serious about it.

"What's the matter with you, old boy?" sang out one. "If you've quit drinking, something's up; tell us what it is."

"Well, boys, I will, though I know you'll laugh at me. But I'll tell you all the same. I have been a hard drinking man all my life, ever since I was married, as you all know; I love whiskey,—it's as sweet in my mouth as sugar,—and God only knows how I'll quit it. For seven years not a day has passed over my head that I didn't have at least one drink. But I am done.

"Yesterday I was in Chicago. Down on South Clark Street a customer of mine keeps a pawn-shop in connection with his other business. I called on him, and while I was there a young man of not more than twenty-five, wearing threadbare clothes, and looking as hard as if he hadn't seen a sober day for a month, came in with a little package in his hand.

"Tremblingly he unrapped it, and handed the article to the pawnbroker, saying, 'Give me ten cents.' And, boys, what do you suppose it was? A pair of baby's shoes, little things with the buttons only a trifle soiled, as if they had been worn once or twice.

"'Where did you get these?' asked the pawnbroker.

"'Got 'em at home,' replied the man, who had an intelligent face and the manner of a gentleman despite his sad condition. 'My—my wife bought them for our baby. Give me ten cents for 'em; I want a drink.'

"'You had better take these shoes back to your wife. The baby will need them,' said the pawnbroker.

"'No, s-she won't, because she's dead. She's lying at home now; died last night.'

"As he said this the poor fellow broke down, bowed his head on the showcase, and cried like a child. Boys," said the drummer, "you can laugh if you please, but I—I have a baby of my own at home, and I swear I'll never drink another drop." Then he got up and went into another car. His companions glanced at each other in silence. No one laughed; the bottle disappeared, and soon each was sitting in a seat by himself reading a newspaper.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Miscellaneous Household Matters.

A messenger has at last arisen with the good tidings that a sponge soaked in creosote not only drove away the red ants for a time from a haunted closet, but for all the time since, which is lucky for people who would as easily choose the ants as the creosote smell constantly among their sweet things and food. Ants do not swim canals. Make a moat of a yellow nappy, or other flat dish, around cake box or open preserve jar, and you are secure. It is not convenient, certainly, to keep up the reservoir system, but it is sure.

Many of the pieces that compose crazy quilts are now painted. A square of white silk has a corner spray of violets and one of cardinal, a couple of half-blown tea-rose buds. A stripe of white satin ribbon is adorned with a graceful spray of arbutus blossoms, and one of palest blue is decorated with pink heath. An octagon-shaped piece of black plush has painted upon it a little circular landscape surrounded by sprays of flowers, another has a gilded horse-shoe suspended from a flowering spray of an apple tree, while from the very bottom of the piece spring daisies and grasses. Pretty "memorial" blocks have the initials of the donor in gilt frosted over with diamond dust and entwined with sprays of flowers.—American Queen.

REMODELING A LOUNGE.—I have been remodeling an old lounge, and am so pleased with the result that I will give a description of the process, as it might help some of your readers to do as I am trying to do, and that is to make home pleasant and comfortable, with very little money to do it with. Having an old frame of a common straight lounge to begin with, my husband kindly nailed it solid, and made a headboard 18 inches high; I then padded it to resemble a couch, using straw for the filling, covering it with gay cretonne; and lo! the result is a piece of furniture which is nice looking, as well as very comfortable.

TO CAN CORN.—Use glass cans. Cut the corn from the cob, press it into the cans till the milk flows over. Put on the tops, screw down tight. Place them in a boiler with sticks on the bottom, pour in cold water enough to about two-thirds cover them. Boil five hours. When about half-cooked, remove a can at a time, tighten the tops and replace.

A FLY PREVENTIVE.—An Iowa lady writes to an exchange, "For three years I have lived in town, and during that time my sitting-room has been free from flies, three only walking about my breakfast table, while all my neighbors' rooms are crowded. I often congratulated myself on my escape, but never knew the reason of it until a few days ago. I then had occasion to remove my goods to another house, while I remained on for a few days longer. Among other things removed were two boxes of geraniums and calceolarias' which stood in my window, being open to its full extent, top and bottom. The boxes were not gone half an hour before my room was as full of flies as those of my neighbors around me. This, to me, was a new discovery, and perhaps it may serve to encourage others in that which is always a source of pleasure, namely, window gardening. Mignonette, planted in long, shallow boxes, placed on the window sill, will be found excellent for this purpose."

ROUND SHOULDERS.—N. A. writes: "Perhaps my experience will be of benefit to some one. When twelve or fourteen years of age I was so round-shouldered and hollow-chested that my parents feared I might have consumption. They required me to straighten up, throw back my shoulders, and at the same time inhale slowly as much air as my lungs would hold, retain it as long as I could without too much effort, then exhale in the same manner. This I did many times a day. I soon became stronger, my chest expanded, and in a year or two I stood erect. It is difficult for children who are growing fast and have become much stooped to retain an erect position. No one knows how tiring it is until he has tried it. Lifting and otherwise caring for babies is apt to draw the shoulders forward, and mothers would do well if they would frequently inflate the lungs as above suggested."

Mother Speak Kindly.

Children catch cross tones quicker than parrots, and they become permanent habits in them. When mothers set the example, you will scarcely hear a pleasant word among the children in their plays with each other. Yet the discipline of such a family is weak and irregular. The children expect just so much scolding before they do anything they are bid, while in many a home where the low firm tone of the mother, or the decided look of her steady eye, is law, they always think of obedience, either in or out of sight. Oh mother, it is worth a great deal to cultivate that excellent thing in woman a low, sweet voice. If you are ever so much tried by the mischievous or willful pranks of the little ones, speak low. It will be a great help to you to even try to be patient and cheerful, if you cannot succeed. Anger makes you wretched, and your children also. Impatient angry tones never did the heart good, but plenty of evil. You cannot have the excuse for them that they lighten your burdens at all; they make the monly ten pounds heavier. For your own as well as your children's sake, learn to speak low. They will remember that tone when your head is under the turf. So too, will they remember the harsh and angry tone. Which legacy will you leave to your children.—

Dr. Hall, in his Journal of Health, says: "The essential, the fundamental, the all controlling agency in the arrest of any case of consumptive disease, and return to reasonable health for any considerable time, is an active, courageous and hopeful out-door life, in all weathers and in any latitude, with some rousing motive, other than regaining the health, beckoning them on, to do and to dare.

Training Tomato Plants.

Most growers agree that keeping tomatoes off the ground is a great advantage. Stakes or trellises are now used to a great extent to train them to. A common way is to train to single stakes of about four feet in height tying the plant to the stakes as it grows. This is little or no improvement over the old way of letting them lie on the ground. A much better plan is to set the plants in rows of three or four feet apart, and the plants three feet in the row. Before setting the plants, dig out a couple of spits of earth, and set in three branches of trees—twiggy ones are best—in triangular form, with the tops spreading outwards. Set the plant in the centre of this, and as it grows keep the shoots inside of the stakes by passing a string around them. There is no better way to get good, clean fruit tomatoes. As everything gererally has some disadvantage with it, so this way of growing tomatoes is not perfect. When the plants are allowed to run over the ground they keep the soil cool and moist. It follows that tying up to stakes produces the opposite effect, and the plants suffer the sooner from summer droughts. This can be easily remedied by mulching around the plants with something to break the sun's rays. If nothing else is at hand cornstalks answer admirably. Tomatoes produce such a mass of foliage that they require much moisture, and it is surprising how they thrive when by mulching or other means the ground is never allowed to become too dry.

Save the Chicks.

Fully one-half the chicks are sacrificed to the carelessness or ignorance of their owners. Well may they say, with the reported epitaph: "If so soon I'm done for, what was I begun for?" for surely it is a great waste to have the little things hatched and then permit them to be lost for want of care. Some are killed with kindness; overfed and fussed to death. At this season they are better without the hen as soon as they are four weeks old. Having a warm, dry coop they will nestle there alone, and be free from the filth and overcrowding of the hen. They should be fed three times a day, and supplied with fresh clean water morning, noon, and evening, and coarse corn-meal, not the cracked meal, but the ground meal, scalded with sufficient water to swell it, but not to make it mushy, is the best food. Wheat screenings for a change and a feed of crushed or pounded fresh bone will be found healthful and satisfying. Then a run in a grassy or weedy field, where they can find insects and some green food, will keep them in health and growing. At 8 weeks old they are large enough for broilers, and just now sell for 40 to 50 cents a pound, or 75 to 80 cents each. The poultry-keeper who has a lot of such chicks will be the one who finds there is profit in poultry.—New York Times.

Farm Notes.

Recent frosts have injured the growing crops to some extent throughout the country, but not so much as was at first supposed.

Wisconsin's dairy products, the largest of any State in the Union, amounted last year to $19,500,000. There are in the State one thousand creameries and cheese factories and 500,000 cows.

A Maryland poultry raiser thinks that a pint of epsom salts to a half peck of meal, fed to chicks, is the best remedy for gapes.

Mr. George H. Lee, Greece, N. Y., has averaged thirty five bushels of wheat per acre on a 100-acre field, and sometimes on smaller surfaces harvested as high as forty-eight bushels per acre.

Mention is made in The Poultry World of a farm where Leghorn fowls are kept, only hens which lay large eggs are bred from, "and as a natural result all eggs are of good size."

Cucumbers intended for pickling purposes need not be planted till July. The land for them should be such as has been well cultivated the year previous, and the manure should be fine and well rotted. In order to guard against the attacks of birds and insects an excess of seed should be used, thinning out the extra plants after they are up.

Dr. N. H. Paaren, State Veterinarian of Illinois, well says that the periodical "epidemic alarms" do great injury to cattle interests, and he reminds those who start such reports that "the pluro-pneumonia scare of a few years ago was the cause of England placing an embargo upon our beef."

There is a strong feeling in various portions of the United States in favor of the total abolition of fences. It is stated that the cost of the maintenance of fences annually in this country is not far short of $80,000,000, a pretty snug sum if it might be saved to the farmers. It is estimated that there are 6,000,000 miles of fencing in all in this nation.

Profits of Poultry.

We hear a great deal about the difficulty of making poultry pay when kept in large numbers, and numerous failures to do so serve as warnings to novices thinking of undertaking the really difficult, though apparently easy enterprise. That with the right sort of knowledge and a fair amount of gumption it can be done is, however, shown by the example of D. W. Andrews, of Essex County, Mass., who, in a note to us, thus epitomizes his experience: "I started poultry keeping in 1868, and it took me a few years to 'get the hang' of the business; but now I am master of it, and can make it always profitable. In 1872 I had 500 hens, and my total receipts from them were $2,296.40, while their feed cost me $1,099.78, leaving a clear profit of $1,196.62 over the outlay for feed. In 1881 I had 1,500 hens; my total receipts were $4,425; the feed consumed cost $1,656, leaving a clear profit of $2,769.02 for my labor. The profit depends on the grain market, the egg market, and the skill of the poultry raiser." He closes with the remark, which has more than once been made in our columns, that it is absurd to be sending abroad every year vast sums in payment for eggs, while the business of producing them at home "is perfectly simple, honest, healthful and profitable."

Watering Plants.

Yes, during a dry spell, you may water your tomato, egg, pepper and other plants to-night and to-morrow night they will appear as thirsty and the ground about them as dry as ever. But in the morning after watering, if you stir the soil a little, and mulch the plants with some rank manure, salt hay, lawn-mowings, or other come-at-able material, the earth will retain the moisture you gave it, the plants will be much benefitted, and you wil not have to water oftener than once a week where before you had to do so every evening. In the case of young stuff, as lettuce, beets, and radishes in rows, give them lots of water in the evening, and run a long-toothed iron rake between the rows in the morning, and they will respond most cheerfully to your indulgence.

Lightning-Rods.

It is a general impression that the chief value of lightning-rods is to shield buildings from harm by conducting electricity from the clouds to the earth. Even intelligent people are often surprised when told that the rods secure safety by allowing the electricity to escape which gathers on the roofs and sides of buildings. But the cases where the electricity goes upward from the earth to the air, largely outnumber those in which the current sets in the opposite direction.

The process is a very simple one. The electric equilibrium in the air is disturbed, and one kind of electricity gathers in great force on the earthward surface of the clouds. This at once disturbs the equilibrium of the earth, and attracts the opposite kind of electricity to the earth's surface. When the tension becomes too great—or the mutual affinity becomes irresistible—electricity leaps either from the clouds to the earth, or reversely, and for the moment the equilibrium of both at that point is restored.

But if conducting points, such as lightning-rods present, are numerous enough to dissipate steadily the force gathered on the earth's surface, there will be no sudden leap, and no lightning shock. In the famous experiment of Franklin with his kite, if the lightning from the cloud had run down the string to the key, the bold experimenter would have suffered the penalty of death for his rashness. But it was only the electricity of the kite and the string, decomposed by the attraction of the electricity in the cloud, that escaped by the key, and therefore the shock was a light one.

The Day of Lavish Expense Gone by.

From the San Francisco Bulletin.

It was formerly expected that a Californian would pay more for everything he wanted to eat or wear, for his amusements, and even for his religion, than was paid in any other part of the country. That theory was nursed when it was supposed that a pioneer would scorn to work in the mines for less than an ounce of gold a day. The pick and pan have well nigh disappeared. Here and there a high strike is made. But for the most part the Californian has come down to very sober ways of making money, if indeed he makes any at all. Yet even now his name recorded on the books of any hotel in an eastern city carries with it a hint that he will stand top prices. Californians learned the art of living expensively in the early history of the state, because money was easily obtained and there seemed to be no limit to the fortunes which it was possible to acquire. There was not much art in all this. The prodigal expenditure of money still goes on in a restricted way. But for the most part, lavish personal expenditure has resulted in this state in many radical reverses. It is the old story repeated, one would think in a more pathetic way. There was no art in this reckless expenditure. The real art has been born of necessity. In a gross and plethoric way a great deal can be got out of life when there is no limit to expenditure. Rich, coarse, and vulgar Americans are known all over Europe. It is not creditable to the country that they are better known than people of refinement and unobtrusive ways.

A JULY EPISODE.

Two easy chairs, a veranda wide,
A corner hid from the light inside;
Rare roses around—above a star,
And hark! the sound of a sweet guitar.
The lights are bright, and the waltz is warm,
'Tis a night in July, and it is no harm
To wander away to a quiet nook,
To read one page from the old, old book—
The story old. And he holds her hand;
With perfumed zephyrs her cheeks are fanned,
All honeyed words are the words she hears,
"Will he, to-night?"—and she hopes and fears,
Then all is still, and old Time is fleet;
All that she hears is her own heart beat,
As the lights go out in deserted halls.
Gently a head on a shoulder falls,
Gently an arm steals round a waist,
A lock and a ringlet are misplaced.
"He'll surely speak, oh, that little word!"
Her willing soul with a thrill is stirred.
"Are you fond of cod-fish balls?" said he;
"I never attended one," said she.

THE SPECTRAL RIDER.

At Baden-Baden a horse race was to take place; a great many spectators had assembled. The elete had not yet arrived, and as therefore the races had not begun the sportsmen were standing in groups. Among these were two officers of the army.

"Do you really intend to let Devil's Daughter take part, Poseneck?" asked one of them.

"Undoubtedly; she has the best chance."

"But who will you get to ride the mare?"

"I shall find some one; if not I shall ride her myself."

"If your Cousin Arno would ride her there might be a chance of winning, but as he is engaged to be married his affianced probably will not allow it; and she cannot be blamed for doing so, for on that horse one risks breaking his neck."

The steeplechaser spoken of, Arno von Hohenstein, was present, and therefore Kurt von Poseneck hoped to gain his aid, for he knew how passionately fond his cousin was of this sport.

He found him, accompanied by his intended and his future father-in-law.

"I suppose it grieves you not to take part to-day," said Poseneck, and turning to the young lady he added: "You may feel flattered that he intends to give it up for your sake."

"I suppose we now will try to get seats, for soon all will be taken," said Arno, with a sigh.

While he led the way Poseneck whispered to the young lady: "Have you not a word of comfort for me, Victorine?" Unseen by others, she slipped a little note into Kurt's hand. He escaped as soon as possible to read it undisturbed.

It contained the following words; "Forgive me I was forced to comply with the wish of my parents; my entreaties, tears, remonstrances were in vain; therefore I am the affianced of Arno von Hohenstein. I am lost to you forever, but I shall never forget you."

Poseneck's lowering glances rested upon the woman he loved, the affianced of another. There she stood, a stately figure, with a clear, dark complexion and lustrous black eyes, beside the insignificant blonde, her future husband.

Shortly before the steeplechase began he appeared in the paddock accompanied by Arno. Notwithstanding the opposition of Victorine's father he had succeeded in persuading him to ride the mare. Victorine had greatly influenced the decision, for when Poseneck whispered to her to assist him she without hesitation did so.

It was a beautiful sight when the eleven horsemen who were to take part with the races took their positions. Devil's Daughter, a powerful, dark-brown, thoroughbred mare, and under Hohenstein's guidance, attracted all attention. The more restless she was, the more composed and immovable sat her rider. As Victorine heard the admiring exclamations she felt for the first time a certain interest in her future husband.

She was roused from her thoughts by Poseneck's voice saying rather ironically:

"You are looking at your intended with great interest," and as she looked up he continued, lowering his voice, "You shall be mine," and to himself he murmured, "This decides his fate."

Victorine cast a frightened glance at the tall, commanding figure of Poseneck, as he slowly moved on. What could he mean? Death and destruction to the unfortunate Hohenstein? She knew that two years before Poseneck had killed in a duel the Count of Pruckwitz, a suiter of hers, who was favored by her relatives. When he returned from the fortress, where he had been confined for several months, he found her still true to him. But her passionate love was now mingled with admiring awe. His demoniacal and authoritative manner, instead of repelling her, attracted her and ruled her entirely.

Kurt von Poseneck combined an imposing and distinguished appearance with the most agreeable social qualities. He also had won the reputation of being reckless and daring on the battle-field. All this made him a general favorite with the ladies.

He had easily won Victorine's love. But her parents wished another husband for their daughter, for they thought the dashing young officer was not the man to make her happy; so Poseneck's offer was declined. But, being assured of Victorine's affection, he did not give up his hopes. He succeeded in keeping up a secret correspondence with her, which was only discontinued when Victorine, forced by her parents, was betrothed to Arno von Hohenstein. Poseneck's rage and grief at this were extreme; but, with the self-command peculiar to him, he controlled his feelings.

Under these circumstances Victorine also suffered inexpressible anguish. The affianced of one whom she did not love, cherishing love for another, wavering between duty and affection, carried away by her passions—she wrote that note which she had given Poseneck.

The race began, and all but Hohenstein dashed on; he purposely kept back only to give the mare the rein afterwards. First they went over the water jump. Then came a stone wall, one of the most dangerous obstacles. At this place Poseneck had taken position to await Devil's Daughter. The mare came on. Arno was already prepared for the leap when Poseneck uttered a peculiar hoarse cry. The noble animal startled, stopped, and the rider was thrown forward his head striking against the wall.

The next moment Poseneck knelt beside a corpse. As he saw the fixed glassy look of the dead man's eye he shivered with horror. The violence of [illegible] his passion for Victorine had led him to commit a deed which resembled a cowardly assassination. That moment was impressed on his memory never to be forgotten. The accident had been seen from the stand; and the spectators hurriedly approached. Poseneck went to break the news to Victorine and her father. But he only said that he was seriously hurt; that he was dead he did not dare to tell them.

"The poor, dear boy!" exclaimed the old gentleman. "When I saw him thrown I immediately thought something serious had happened. I must see him. Count von Poseneck, please conduct my daughter to her carriage."

He hurried away and left the two alone. With indescribable anguish Victorine read the terrible truth in his pale face.

"He is dead!" she gasped, and as his looks affirmed it, she continued. "I am to blame—I persuaded him to take part."

"It was I who caused his death. I did it out of love for you. I have not only loved you more than my life, but more than my honor, my conscience! The price paid to win you was fearful; but mine you shall be."

Did Victorine surmise the truth? She seemed as if petrified; she dared not think. Her love outweighed her loathing.

"You dare not reject me," he continued, passionately. "You are mine, body and soul. I would be driven to despair if I did not possess your love—the only ray of light in the darkness that surrounds me."

Who could describe Victorine's feelings! Could she overcome her horror or did this terrible proof of his passion kindle her love?

Two years have passed since Arno von Hohenstein has been numbered with the dead. Few remembered him. His parents he had lost when a boy. The comrades with whom he had been a favorite, his former friends, the cousins who had inherited his estate, thought of him no more. So no one seemed to be astonished when Victorine was betrothed and married to Poseneck, whose financial circumstances had been bettered by an unexpected inheritance.

Time had not taught Victorine to forget Hohenstein's tragical death. Often he seemed to appear before her, menacing and threatening, and at night she often started from her sleep with a shriek. But when Poseneck was at her side her happiness was so great as to obliterate the dark past.

That day, the second anniversary of Arno's death, races were again to be held at Baden-Baden. Kurt's father-in-law had asked him to attend. He acquiesced rather unwillingly. His thoughts turned continually to the moment when he had knelt beside Hohenstein's corpse. Even the presence of his beloved wife could not make him forget. He had to summon all his strength to maintain his outward composure. But Victorine's loving eyes read his inmost thoughts.

He was restless; he passed from group to group, and at last went into the paddock to take a look at the horses. One of his comrades stepped up to him and said:

"Poseneck, you must ride Creve-Cœur to-day."

"Don't you know that I have given up steeple-chase riding altogether?"

After a great deal of coaxing and bantering he at last consented.

"Seems a fever has seized me," he muttered to himself, for, in spite of the warm weather, he felt chilly.

As the moment of action arrived, knowing that he needed all his nerve, he regained his self-command. Just as he was putting his foot in the stirrup he heard some one say:

"Have you heard that at Hamburg day before yesterday Devil's Daughter broke her neck?"

He felt as if he had received a blow. The horse that had been his tool was dead. She had passed from one to another, having brought nothing but misfortune to her owners. Another in his position, perhaps, would have silenced his conscience by saying that it had been the horse's fault. Poseneck could not do so. Only too well he knew that he had deliberately caused Hohenstein's death. He did not repent the deed, but still he was often haunted by his victim.

As the race was proceeding, it was easily seen what Creve-Cœur could do. He was gaining ground constantly, and each obstacle was cleared without effort. Soon he was in front. Suddenly Poseneck saw a shadow, without hearing the tread of a horse. He turned and saw beside him Arno von Hohenstein, mounted on Devil's Daughter.

Was the terrible apparition a creation of his excited imagination?

"Who is the rider next to Kurt?" Victorine asked her father.

"A rider? I see none! Poseneck is leading the race."

"There, on the dark horse. I see him plainly. Merciful God! It is Hohenstein!"

Her father turned hastily toward her—she had fainted.

In the meantime the two riders sped away.

Poseneck could not avert his eyes from that ghastly face that was close behind him. Now the horses neared the stone wall, and he prepared himself involuntarily for the leap.

Suddenly the phantom turned and fixed his glassy look full upon his face.

With an inarticulate cry he let go the reins and covered his face with his hands. Creve-Cœur, suddenly deprived of his master's guidance, fell, throwing his rider.

His comrades, rushing toward the spot, found Poseneck's corpse. No one but he and Victorine, the only one who knew of the foul deed, had seen the spectral rider.—Federal Australian.

WOE IS ME.

Though we were parted, as though he had died,
She said, I could bear the worst,
If he had only loved me at the last,
As he loved me at the first.

But woe is me! said the hapless maiden,
That ever a lover came,
Since he who lit in my heart the fire,
Has failed to tend the flame.

Ah! why did he pour in my life's poor cup
A nectar so divine,
If he had no heart to fill it up
With a draught so pure and fine?

Oh! if he were either true or false,
My torment might have end;
He hath been, for a lover, too unkind—
Too loving for a friend.

And there is not a soul in all the world
So wretched as mine must be;
For I cannot live on his love, she said,
Nor die of his cruelty. —Boston Transcript.

THE CAPTAIN'S STORY.

From the Youth's Companion.

"I can never pass that spot without thinking of an event that happened two years ago," said the captain of the Fly-by-Night, a lake passenger-boat trading between Detroit and Port Huron, as he pointed to a small house two miles away on the American shore of Lake Huron. It was a trim white cottage with green lattice-work, a well-kept little lawn, and in front of it a tall flag-pole set into the roof of a pagoda-like summer-house. Below it, at the lake, was a dock, and on a huge sign-post one could read, "Warner's Landing."

"It belonged," continued the captain, "to old Capt. Warner, who sailed the Boscobel. He died and left the property to his nephew, in the state of New York, who brought his wife and little boy with him to live there. He was a gentlemanly young man, well educated, and on the right side of thirty. His wife was as trim a little lady as I ever saw; pretty as a picture; and as light-hearted as a school-girl. Not one of your namby-pamby fashionable young women, but a fresh healthy New England girl, with a woman's heart and a man's courage.

"But the gem of the family was their boy Willie, who was nearly seven years old, and I do think the cheeriest and most sensible little fellow in the State. Sailors have always a soft spot in their hearts for children, and the way that youngster carried on during the trip from Detroit, when we brought the family up here, was a constant pleasure and surprise. He was the king of the boat. The Steward's cabin, the pilot-house, the porter's pantry, the ladies' parlor—he appropriated to himself a free pass everywhere, and used it liberally. He found a snug corner for himself in the hearts of all on board. Why I remember one day, after the family had been in the house for about three months, a deck-hand, a surley fellow who had never a civil word for any one, lugging out of his pocket a colored picture-book and leaving it at the Landing, with 'For Willie, with Joe Price's love' written on it.

"It was a lonesome spot for such people to settle in; and I often wondered how they could reconcile themselves to it, until I learned that Capt. Warner had made it a condition of his will that they must live at the Landing for two years.

"One day, when they had been there about six months, we took up the river to them a small pleasure-skiff with 'The Willie' painted in gilt letters on the stern.

"I never saw a child so pleased. He took to the boat like a duck to water. We used to see him on every trip as we passed, sculling himself about in the ship like a born sailor. I don't believe in allowing children to be too venturesome on the water, so I told his father; but he laughed, and said he thought Willie was sensible enough to take care of himself.

"One day we were signalled to stop at Warner's Landing. William Warner was going to New York. His wife and boy were on the dock, wishing him as tearful a good-bye as if he were on a two years voyage to Greenland.

He too was in low spirits. He came and sat by me in the pilot-house, and looked as glum as if there'd been a death in his family. At last he said very solemn and earnest, 'Do you believe in presentiments of evil, Capt. Kenyon?'

"'No!' I said, quite sharply, for I don't like to see a man give way to such nonsense.

"He went down on deck then, half offended, and left the boat at Detroit without even bidding me good-by. We were late leaving on our return trip that night, and I was surprised to see, just before we started, Warner came on board. He had a small parcel in his hand.

"'Captain,' he said, 'I want you to be sure to leave this at the Landing on your way up.'

"'I can't,' I said, for I saw it was only an excuse to get me to call and see that his folks were all safe. 'We're late here, and at Port Huron we've a lot of staves to take on, which will make us later still.'

"But he persisted, and when I saw how down-hearted he looked, I told him to give the parcel to the clerk and I would see what I would do when we arrived opposite the Landing. We left Port Huron in the middle of the following day. It had been very hot all the morning, but as the afternoon advanced, a stiff west wind, accompanied by a drizzling rain, began to blow.

"It was so late when we approached the Landing that I had quite determined not to call; in fact, we stood out in the lake a mile further than our usual course. I was taking a dog-snooze in my berth, when the mate awoke me.

"'There's a woman, sir, on Warner's Landing signalling us, and I think something's wrong there.'

"I was on deck in a minute. 'Give me the glass,' said I, and I soon made out that it was Mrs. Warner, making frantic gestures to catch our attention. She was bare-headed, and stood in the rain at the end of the landing. Then she ran into the house and began to wave a white table-cloth from one of the upper windows.

"'Very likly she wants to know if her dear William got to Detroit safely,' I grumbled, 'but I suppose we'd better round to.' [illegible]

"As the boat made the dock, the clerk [illegible] sprang ashore, and in a few minutes we had the whole story. Willie had been playing with the skiff in the slip, as he had done scores of times before. Mrs. Warner had been busy over some household duty and did not notice that it rained. When she did, she went at once to call Willie in. But she could not find either the boat or the boy. Both had vanished as though the lake had swallowed them up.

"She had not dared to go inland to the village to seek help, for fear of missing our boat as it passed, but she had for hours been running up and down the shore calling in vain to her darling. Some of the lady-passengers wrapped the distracted mother in shawls for she would not delay a moment, and we put out into the lake.

"I followed the course of the wind as well as I could, for I knew well enough that the little fellow had been blown out into the lake, where there was but a small chance that we should find him, for it was unlikely so frail a boat could live long in such a heavy sea.

"For an hour we beat about without seeing an object on the water, when away in the distance there was a dark spot that came occasionally in sight on the top of the waves. 'Tom,' said I to my mate, 'can you make out what that is on the starboard quarter? Is it a log or a boat?'

"'It's a log adrift, sir.'

"'It's not! I'm sure it's not! It's a boat!' shrieked a voice close by me, and I saw to my surprise, Mrs. Warner, who I supposed was in the cabin, peering wildly into the drizzling rain. To all my appeals to her to go below, she kept crying,—

"'It's a boat! it is a boat! He is saved!'

"Without a glass to aid her vision, her strong mother-love gave her keenness of sight denied to us. It was a boat. But it was only on my threatening to abandon the search that the wretched woman consented to go below.

"Two minutes later the mate cried, 'Yes, sir, it is a boat, but it's empty so far as I can see. There's nobody sitting in it.'

"It was true. There the little skiff was tossing about, like a cork on the waves, with one scull dangling in the row-locks, but not a soul could be seen in her.

"'Tom,' said I, nervously, for I felt sure the boy was not in the boat, and I actually trembled with apprehension lest the sad news would kill his mother, 'will you go down and tell that poor woman what we have seen?'

"'Not for all the gold in California!' said the mate, decidedly; and yet he's as brave a fellow as ever sailed the lakes.

"We passed the word to have Mrs. Warner taken into a cabin as we neared the skiff. I felt so angry with that poor painted toy of a pleasure-boat, that I had half a mind to run it down. But of course I wasn't quite foolish enough for that. The mate and two of the deck-hands put off in the yawl, for our wash would have capsized the skiff had we gone any nearer. With a listless eye I watched them approach the boat, for I felt a leaden weight at my heart because I was sure I should be obliged to tell the young mother of her loss. I saw Tom get hold of the painter, and then spring into the skiff. Then,—

"'Safe! safe! The boy is here!'

"It appears that the little fellow, tired of play, had lain down under the seat, and had gone to sleep. In the meantime the boat had drifted into the lake and it had begun to rain. The drizzling rain did not wake him, and he lay in as sound a slumber as if he was in his bed at home, and not a hair of his head hurt.

"But what a fuss there was aboard! The women were all crying, and the men, too, for that matter. And the young mother, clasping the boy to her heart, went straight down on her knees and thanked God before them all for sparing his life. I don't think words ever came from a minister's lips that went straighter up to the throne of grace than that young woman's prayer.

"The family are living East now. William Warner is one of the few men I claim as personal friends, and as for his bright little wife, if she were my own child, I couldn't have a deeper regard for her. And the presents they send me! There is no use in my trying to choke off their gratitude. Not the least. And every parcel comes marked, 'with Willie's love.'"

BERNARD BIGSBY.

Learned the Virtues of Champagne.

From Texas Siftings.

At a Tennessee banquet the other night an old fellow who had been invited, and who knew nothing of wine, sat drinking champagne. Looking up with an expression of disgust he said: "Here, nigger, I don't want no more o' this stuff." "What's de matter wid hit, boss?" "Got no body to it. I want somethin' that'll jolt me like I was hit with a maul." "Wall, boss," turning and grinning at his companions, "you stick ter hit an' hit'le stick ter you." "Here, what is the stuff—sweetened rain water?" "No, sah, hit's champagne." "Got no whiskey?" "No, sah." "Say this'le stick to me?" "Do hit sho, boss, ef you stick ter hit."

The next day, after some one had kept the old fellow from committing suicide, he found the negro waiter and said: "Say, can't you get me some of that blamed stuff to take home? Thar's a fellow up in the mountains that I have shot at six times. I want to give it to him. Russle roun' an' git me a gallon er so, an I'll pizen the county judge an' kill the feller I shot at."

Carlyle on Webster.

Daniel Webster's personal appearance was so striking that people would turn and gaze at him as he walked the streets. Even that grim, cynical critic, Carlyle, seems to have been impressed by the American statesman. In writing from London to Mr. Emerson, he thus speaks of him:

"Mot many days ago, I saw at breakfast the notablest of all your Notabilities, Daniel Webster. He is a magnificent specimen; you might say to all the world, 'This is your Yankee-Englishman; such Limbs we make in Yankee-land?'

"As a Logic-fencer, Advocate, or Parliamentary Hercules, one would incline to back him at first sight against all the extant world.

"The tanned complexion, that amorphous, crag-like face; the dull black eyes under their precipice of brows, like dull anthracite furnaces, needing only to be blown; the mastiff mouth, accurately closed—I have not traced as much of silent Berkserkir-rage, that I remember of, in any man. I guess I should not like to be your nigger!" [illegible]

FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE.

Home Hints.

The Following Receipt for making "cold cream" is said to be excellent. To one ounce of glycerine allow ten drops of carbolic acid; add one ounce of rose water.

Flesh Color and Gray combined, are the new tints in furnishing. For wall papers and ceilings, in furniture covers of plain linens, or in earthenware and stoneware for the mantel-shelf these two cool tones combine well. Even gray "flax" dresses are made up with flesh-colored lace.

A Delicious Whortleberry Pudding is made of one pint of molasses, one teaspoonful of soda, one cup of sweet milk, one quart of berries, flour enough to make a stiff batter; add spices if you like the flavor. This pudding is to be boiled for two hours and a-half. A good way to prepare it for boiling is to butter the inside of a tin pail, put the pudding into it, cover it, and set into a kettle of boiling water. Replenish from the tea kettle when the water evaporates.

STRAWBERRY SYRUP.—Take four pounds of the best double-refined sugar and one quart of filtered strawberry juice; put them together in the bain-marie; stir until thoroughly dissolved, take off the scum and bottle. In my opinion the flavor of this syrup may be heightened by the addition of a gill of orange-juice to the above quantity.

A novel way to serve lettuce is, after washing and looking over carefully, to pour a dressing over it made by frying out the fat from a slice of ham, cutting the ham in small pieces before frying; when the fat is at the boiling point add a cup of vinegar, let it boil for a minute or two, then pour over the lettuce; garnish with cold boiled eggs cut in rings.

Cauliflower salad is an excellent entree. Boil the cauliflower in salted water; when tender, which will be in about half an hour, drain every drop of water from it, let it become cold, then arrange it in a salad bowl with a rich mayonnaise dressing poured over it. It may be garnished with small rings of pickled beets, or with slices of pickled cucumbers, and, by the way, it is a good plan to pickle a jar of large cucumbers so that you can have them to use for a garnish, and to chop and add to the dressing served with boiled fish.

THE NIGHT-CAP "CHLORAL."—"A Woman" writes that she too finds a perfect cure for sleeplessness in tying "a large hankerchief, a gentleman's tightly round the temples, under the ears, in a small knot at the back of the head." The knot at the back may be adoyted or not, to suit the wearer's comfort. It gives the requisite pressure on the outer surface of the head, which is one cause of sleepiness. Since the Household suggested the "night cap cure" for insomnia some two years ago, it has been very interesting to note the responses and gratitude of bromide and chloral victims who have been enabled to do without their doses, and secure healthy sleep by such simple means.—Phila. Ledger.

Pickling and Packing Cucumbers.

These may be pickled in various ways, and all are good. One is to put them, when freshly washed and picked, into vinegar, and let them stand three or four weeks; then drain from this and put them into fresh vinegar, covering the whole with horse-radish leaves; put a dish over them, to keep all under the vinegar. A little horse-radish root may be put in to flavor. Cider vinegar is the best.

Another way is to pour boiling water over them as they are gathered, putting in a handful of salt. Let them stand until cold; then drain and cover with hot vinegar, and, in an hour or two, they are fit for the table. If the pickles are large they may be quartered, and the vinegar will strike through them more quickly. A friend of mine tells me that she prepares all her pickles for the table, and puts them up in glass cans as she does fruit. In families where pickles are consumed freely it would take considerable storage to do so.

Another way is to pack cucumbers in salt after they have been scalded and have got cold. They will make their own brine, and will keep several years if needed, and may be prepared any time when wanted, and, all things considered, this is very convenient.

Another way, which is as little troublesome as any, is to take alcohol (provided you can get it pure), and put about five or six parts of water to one of alcohol; put the cucumbers in this liquid as they are gathered; stir them up every day, and stir in any scum that rises. Keep a cloth over the top to keep the cucumbers in their place. In a few weeks this will be fine vinegar, and the pickles will be sharp enough to suit the greatest lover of pickles. They should be set, while making, in a tolerably warm place—a cellar would be too cool.

Once having a surplus of smooth, green tomatoes, I put up a quantity of them in the same way, and they were very fine.

Some take about three parts soft water to one of molasses, mix and put in the cucumbers and pickles and vinegar together, but sometimes the cucumbers will become soft. They should be stirred now and then.—Rural New Yorker.

Graham Bread.

The days of catsup-making will soon be upon us; cut out these directions for making it: To make green cucumber catsup, take three dozen good sized cucumbers and six small, white onions; grate the cucumbers; sprinkle pepper and salt to your taste over them. Put in large mouth bottles, and pour melted wax over the cork. If the air is kept from them, when you open a bottle in midwinter, the odor will be delightful to the lover of the sometimes dangerous cucumber. By the way, if plenty of salt is put into the cold water in which the sliced cucumbers should lie for an hour before dinner, no bad effects are likely to ensue from eating them. If you have not the hour, and have the cucumber for dinner, after slicing it put it between two plates, scattering salt plentifully over the slices; then shake them well for five minutes between the plates.

Farming Items.

Peter Fay writes to the New England Homestead that, arter experimenting for a number of years, and trimming every month in the year, he has come to the conclusion that from May 25 to June 25 is the proper time. There is a full flow of sap then, and the wound begins to heal immediately. The two worst months in the whole year are March and April.

A. B. Allen states that he finds wheat bran an unprofitable feed for swine. They do not seem to possess the power of digesting it, consequently much of it passes through them only partially assimilated. If mixed with corn meal it does better, and can be fed with advantage to cattle along with cut hay, if mixed with it and well wetted, as it then undergoes a second mastication.

A Canadian correspondent of Vick's Monthly grows excellent radishes in this way: He selects a piece of ground in the corner of his garden and keeps it especially for this purpose. He covers the surface with about two inches of leached wood ashes every spring, and spades in thoroughly. His soil is sandy. His radishes are not troubled with worms and are smooth and brittle.

Mention is made of an Ohio boy whose far-sighted father gave him last spring the use for the season of a quarter-acre of good land, which the son had ploughed and harrowed, and then himself planted to peas, potatoes and other crops, all in straight rows for easy tillage. He will tend it alone, market the entire product and retain the money. Other children of both sexes might do likewise.

An overproduction of any crop renders it unprofitable for a time, but the man who "keeps his grip" is as likely to win as the one who goes by "fits and starts." Fear of competitors never made a successful farmer or fruit grower. If the prices of our crops are low we must endeavor to produce them at a cheaper rate. Low prices of fruit create a greater demand and consumption and a consequent increase in price in the future.

The United States Agricultural Report says that hot water at a temperature of 130 degrees Fahrenheit seems to be the best remedy for the cabbage worms, where it can be conveniently applied. It may be boiling hot when it goes into the watering can, as it will cool before it falls upon the plants. If a few of the outside leaves get scorched, it will do little harm, as the cabbages will continue to grow from the heart.

In building a poultry-house the amount of actual room for roosting is a very small item compared with the purposes for which a poultry-house should be constructed. The house should be as large and roomy as possible, not only for ventilation in summer, but for exercise in winter, as the fowls are best protected confined at times when the snow is on the ground, and consequently but few should be kept together in one yard. In building a poultry-house all these matters must be considered, as room is required for feeding, roosting, laying and exercise.

Mr. W. J. Fowler, writing against late mowing and over-drying, both of which promote woody fibre and waste of leaves, the most nutritious part—favors storing Hay and Straw in Alternate Layers, a method especially applicable in the case of clover cut, as it should be, just as it comes into blossom and apparently only partly cured. He tells The American Cultivator that many farmers have found this practice "lessens labor while greatly improving the quality of the produce," and the straw so flavored is much relished by stock, and usually eaten clean.

Cut Hay Early.

Too much cannot be said of the urgency of cutting the hay early, before it attains that degree of ripeness when its stems become woody and hard on curing. A correspondent during the past winter, stated that he had been feeding a lot of cows on fairly-cured clover hay, and that they consumed of it eleven pounds night and morning, in addition to bran and grain, eating it all up clean, and needing no more. Having occasion to feed out some other clover hay which had been allowed to stand too long, to get too ripe before it was cut, the feed was increased to twelve pounds, and that of this amount they could be only induced to eat seven pounds, leaving the other five to be wasted. But this probably did not represent the full waste, as the seven pounds consumed were not equal to the same weight of good hay, and an additional ration of grain was required to keep the "things" up to the mark. This is paying very dearly for the neglect to cut in proper time; and, of course, no prudent farmer will place himself and stock at such disadvantage.

Cutting Timothy.

The following method for cutting timothy is that of an educated Indian farmer: Timothy unquestionably makes much the best hay for all classes of stock when well cured, which is more easily accomplished than with any other grass, but which is not always done by any means; and yet is as worthless as need be when cut in an unintelligent manner. My rule for cutting timothy is, when it is in its very best state, if possible, and that is when the major part of the field is in bloom. Some of the seeds were then in milk, and most of them, perhaps, before I was through, for I never cut my grass, wet or dry, before I was ready, as some do. But my rule is to begin the first fair day after I think the gluten, starch and sugar are most abundant in the stalks and leaves, and hurry on the work as fast as possible during the dry weather and while there is plenty of sunshine. I never cut grass for hay when it is wet.

Liquid Manure.

Any sort of manure infused in water, which is then poured over the soil containing the roots of the plants to be fed, constitutes liquid manuring. Nature manures similarly with the water of rain, which, falling on the surface, dissolves a small portion of whatever plant-food may be there, and carries it to the roots. It will be seen that there is great advantage in the slow solubility of the surface plant-food; wet seasons dissolve it faster than plants consume it, and it wastes, so that after wet seasons we usually have reduced crops, and good ones after dry seasons; or (with water) in dry countries. Liquid manuring is largely used in pot culture of plants and fruits. As in feeding animals, moderation and dilution are advisable. It is a means of supplying at any moment, and in any degree, what nature feeds irregularly, and often slowly. With it pure sand alone is a sufficient and excellent soil.

Sensible Lawyers and Sensible Jurors.

The most eloquent advocate is not always the most successful jury-lawyer. The late Jeremiah Mason, of Boston, was not an orator; yet few lawyers could cope with him in a struggle before the twelve men of the jury-box. He never declaimed; his mind was too logical for that, and he cared little for rhetoric. But he talked to the jury as if he and they were engaged in a friendly arbitration, in which both were anxious to get the facts of the case. James Scarlett was the inferior of Henry Brougham in the art of oratory. Yet he won five verdicts to Brougham's one. A countryman, who had served as a juryman in several cases in which the two great lawyers were opposing counsel, on being asked what he thought of them, said,—

"That Lord Brougham be a wonderful man. He can talk, he can; but I don't think nowt of Lawyer Scarlett."

"Indeed!" rejoined the questioner. "You surprise me. Why, you have been giving him all the verdicts."

"Oh, there's nowt in that," replied the simple-minded countryman. "He be lucky, you see; he be always on the right side!"

Scarlett won such compliments and verdicts, too, which were better than praise, by his habit of conversing with the jury. Instead of addressing them collectively, as most lawyers do, he would select one or two, usually one, and reason with him on the subject, until the man apparently was convinced. The one whom he selected was not always the foreman, but the juror who seemed the most intelligent, and therefore most likely to have influence with his colleagues.

Sometimes he would change his tactics, and select the juryman who seemed the most stupid. Once, when he had made an unusually long address to the jury, another lawyer, who had been impatiently waiting to get the ear of the court, joked him on his prolix speech.

"Did you see that fellow in the fustian jacket?" asked Scarlett. "Well, I saw that his head could hold but one idea at a time, and I was determined to get my idea into it, and I did."

The following anecdotes illustrate the good sense with which this great advocate conducted his cases:

In a breach of promise case, Scarlett was counsel for the defendant, who was supposed to have been cajoled into the engagement by the plaintiff's mother. The mother was a witness, and completely baffled Scarlett in his cross-examination of her.

To an ordinary advocate this failure would have been fatal to his client. But Scarlett turned it into a success.

"You saw, gentleman of the jury," he said, "that I was but a child in her hands. What must my client have been?"

In an action for nuisance the plaintiff's chief witness was a lady. She lived near the alleged nuisance and swore strongly in favor of the plaintiff. Scarlett began his cross-examination by inquiring about her domestic relations, her children and their illnesses.

So sympathetically did he put his questions, that the lady became confidential and freely talked about her family affairs. The judge, thinking these matters irrelevant, interfered; but Scarlett begged to be allowed to proceed. On the conclusion of the cross-examination, he said,—

"My lord, I call no witnesses. This lady has sworn that she has brought up numerous and healthy children in the vicinity of the alleged nuisance."

The jury, amused as well as convinced, gave a verdict for Scarlett's client.

The kind-hearted Sir Walter Scott, being anxious to be of service to a friend, promised that he would write a book for his benefit. Before the promise was fulfilled the friend died, and his executors insisted that Sir Walter should write a book for the benefit of the man's widow and children.

On Sir Walter's refusal, the executors sought the advice of Scarlett. "Let us suppose," said he, "the position reversed; if Sir Walter had died, should you have required his executors to write a book for the benefit of your clients?"

"Oh no!" they exclaimed, convinced by this common-sense way of putting the matter that they had no claim on the great novelist.

The moral of these anecdotes he may read who runs. It is this: No learning and no eloquence will be effective where good sense is wanting. Having that a man may succeed though he is not an orator.

Something About Bananas.

From a New York Tribune Interview.

It is astonishing how little is known of bananas, considering the extent to which they are eaten. We get at this market every week an average of 30,000. From Florida? Not a single one. Why, Florida only raises enough bananas for home consumption. All these yellow ones we get from Central America, principally from Aspinwall. Those big fat red fellows are from Cuba. Plantains? Oh, no, that's a general mistake. Plaintains are only edible when cooked; they are more vegetable than fruit. You didn't know there were one hundred and fifty distinct varities of bananas did you? The fruit comes to us quite green; but in the summer will ripen in one or two days. Cool weather compels us to use artificial treatment, and we hang them in a close room and apply heat. Now, that green bunch will not be ripe under four days. With bananas we import, duty free, a good many foreign inhabitants. See that [exhibiting a snake a yard long]. I took him alive from a bunch. And this spider came in an other bringing her nest with her. It contains a hundred eggs. She has come to a cold climate to hatch. I found a tarantula the other day—horrible thing, too. That green bunch goes to Cincinnati to-night. It will be good and ripe in three days.

The prospect for good crops in the Northwest continues excellent in most localities. The recent rains have done a great deal of good in places where it was most needed. No man knoweth what may come hereafter, but the present is full of hope of at least a good average crop of all varieties.

It is said that thousands of Americans are fleeing homeward on account of the cholera scare in Southern Europe, and that a large number of engagements for berths on steamers bound for Europe from New York have been countermanded.

Official returns of the emigration from the British isles during the six months ended June 30, show that it was considerably less than during the corresponding period of last year. The total number of emigrants during the last half year was 82,276, against 114,488 in the first half year of 1883. The emigration to Canada has fallen off in a more marked degree than the general emigration, the number being only 19,496 this year, against 27,346 in 1883.

A New England Meteorological Society has been organized with headquarters in Boston. One of its aims is to expand the capabilities of scientific knowledge of the weather, so that changes of temperature and the approach of storms may be foretold with greater accuracy and at a longer time before their coming. As every one who desires, and can be of even the least practical aid to the society, is eligible to its membership, there is little doubt that its workers will soon number hundreds, and that a good deal of valuable information will be evolved, that is not to be expected from the government signal service as at present conducted.

A paper in a town of several thousand inhabitants lately advertised for a competent boy to learn the printing business and only one boy responded. The editor thinks that if the advertisement had been for a boy to become a clerk there would have been numerous replies, and there is no doubt he is right The incident is significant. It shows that the prejudice against learning a good trade is not confined to the cities, but is permeating the country, and that the boys in villages and towns are growing up to believe that it is more honorable to be a poorly paid clerk than a skilled mechanic. Something is radically wrong when such a theory is coming into general acceptance.

The Texas court of appeals has just rendered a decision which will attract considerable attention. The jury in a county court in the case of a prisoner charged with theft were unable to agree, and the judge discharged them without the consent of the attorney for the defense. On the second trial the prisoner refused to plead, on the ground that he was once put in jeopardy for the offense charged. The court overruled the objections, and the prisoner was convicted. The judgment of the court of appeals is that the prisoner's objection on the second trial was well taken. The decision of the lower court was reversed and the prisoner liberated. This point has been raised many times before in other states and always overruled.

Tourists returning from Europe have long been in doubt as to the amount of wearing apparel they might bring back duty free. The Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, in the case of Astor vs. Merritt, has decided that such passengers may bring—1, wearing apparel owned by the passengers, ready manufactured for wearing; 2, that brought with him for members of his family accompanying him as passengers, ready and intended for wear; 3, that suitable for the season of the year immediately approaching, and, 4, not exceeding in quantity, quality or value that which the passenger and his family are in the habit of providing for themselves in view of their means and habits of life, even though such articles have not been actually worn.

At the opening of a health exhibition in London, Sir James Paget made an address in which he stated that the average time of sickness among males during the working years (from 15 to 65) was 1.814 weeks—that is, a small fraction more than nine days each in each year—and in females it was a small fraction more. The result was that among males there was a loss of 9,692,505 week's work in every year, and among females a loss of 10,592,761 weeks. Thus we might believe that the whole population between 15 and 65 years old did in each year 20,000,000 weeks work less than they might do if it were not for sickness. No one who lived among the sick could doubt that a very large proportion of the sickness and loss of work which he saw might [illegible]

DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION.

The Democratic National Convention began its sessions in the Exposition Hall at Chicago, on Tuesday July 8th. The convention was called to order by ex-Senator Barnum, chairman of the national Democratic committee. Prayer was offered by Rev. D. C. Marquis of the Northwestern Theological Seminary. He prayed for a blessing on this great assembly of representative citizens; that they should be endowed plentifully with that wisdom which is first pure, then peaceable and gentle, and easy to be entreated; that nothing should be done through strife or vain jealousy, but that they should be filled with that charity which is not puffed up and doth not behave itself unseemly. He prayed that their deliberations would be guided to such conclusions as would best promote the glory of God and the welfare of the nation.

The chairman then said: I have been directed by the unanimous vote of the national convention to nominate Hon. Richard B. Hubbard of Texas temporary chairman. [Applause.] As many of you as favor Hon. R. B. Hubbard of Texas for temporary chairman of this convention will say aye. Upon the vote that followed Hubbard was elected temporary chairman, the chair announcing the vote to that effect, saying the chair will appoint Senator B. F. Jonas of Louisiana, Hon. Geo. B. Barnes of Georgia, and Abram S. Hewitt of New York, a committee to wait on Mr. Hubbard and conduct him to the chair. [Applause.]

Gov. Hubbard, in taking the chair, gave thanks for the honor done him, and which he accepted, not as a tribute to himself, but as a compliment to the great state from which he came in state which was absolutely cosmopolitan every fibre. The Democratic party in all its elements was the same as it was when founded by the framers of the Constitution nearly three-quarters of a century ago."

Men died as the leaves in autumn, but the principles underlying liberty and self-government were eternal, and the principles that underlay the democratic party could not perish from the earth, although their authors might cease to be. [Applause.] The democratic party was to-day as much a party organized for aggressive war as when victory perched upon its banners.

The Democratic party had now the House of Representatives, and would have the Senate but for treason in the Senate chamber itself. [Cheers.] It would have had the Presidency, too, but for the hands of robbers who struck down the expressed will of the people by means of perjury, bribery and corruption. The Presidency had been stolen from the Democratic party by men uttering falsehoods through pale lips and chattering teeth. Some of the men who had participated in that crime had passed beyond the river, there to give an account of their stewardship.

That stealing of the presidency was the greatest crime in the nation's history. The great leaders of the party, Tilden and Hendricks, with the dignity which became heroic statesmen and patriots, had submitted with the courage of men who love their country better than self and power. (Cheers). The Democratic party now would reform and should put forth candidates whose names would be in themselves a platform. (Cheers). It wanted a platform, too, that would speak in no doubtful tones, or as a delphic oracle.

It should declare against corruption in the government, against the enormities of the civil service, against the so-called department of justice, against the abuses of the post service, against robbery in high places that the burdens of the government shall be based equally and equitably on all classes of the people, and the hundred millions of surplus revenues shall not be allowed to accumulate. In conclusion, he urged that whatever candidates were nominated should be supported loyally, declaring that he who would not so support would not be a good democrat and hardly a patriot. [Applause.]

Mr. Prince of Massachusetts—The national Democratic convention makes the following report on temporary organization: For temporary chairman. Hon. Richard B. Hubbard of Texas; for secretary, Fredrick A. Prince of Massachusetts; assistant secretaries, E. L. Morrill of Illinois; George O. Guthrie of Pennsylvania, G. L. Johnston of Iowa; Robert M. Bashford of Wisconsin; Charles M. Valandingham of Missouri; H. J. Lynn of Tennessee; Michael D. Barrett of New Jersey. Reading clerks, T. O. Walker, of Iowa; Thomas S. Pettit of Washington, D. C.; N. H. Bell of Missouri; James O. Morrison of New York; H. L. Bryant of Delaware. Official stenographer, Edwin P. Dickerson of New York. Sergeant-at-arms, R. B. Bright of Indiana. The report was unanimously adopted.

Resolved, That the rules of the last democratic convention govern this body until otherwise ordered, subject to the following modification: That in voting for candidates for president and vice president no state shall be allowed to change its vote until the roll of states has been called and every state has cast its vote.

Mr. Grady of New York—Mr. Chairman: I offer the following amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Vermont: When the vote of a state is announced by the chairman of the delegation from each such state is challenged by any member of the delegation, then the secretary shall call the names of the individual delegates from the state, and their individual preferences as expressed, shall be recorded as the vote of such state.

Upon this an animated debate occurred which lasted nearly the entire session. Mr. Fellows, Senator Grady, John Kelly, John Cochran of New York and many others participating. The arguments were the familiar ones for and against the unit rule. The anti-Clevelanders of New York protesting against the unit rule.

The previous question was ordered, and on the passage of the amendment of Grady that gentleman demanded a call of the state. Then came a roll call which in point of importance was correlative with that in which Lynch beat Clayton last June. A roll call compels recesses of quietude through its very interest, but the announcements of the various states are received with cheers. New York, of course, asked to be passed to the tail of the call, and interest awaited her decision. Minnesota's fourteen against Grady was warmly applauded by several thousand, and by the time Texas's division was learned, it was known that the amendment was defeated. The result of the ballot was announced, 332 yeas and 463 nays, amid applause. The original resolution was then adopted by acclamation. The unit rule is maintained. The vote was regarded as a test of the strength of the field against Cleveland, but the result when announced was greeted with slight demonstrations, the previous decision of the chair that the seventy-two votes of New York were to be counted in the negative under the unit rule being regarded as settling the question.

After the appointment of committees on permanent organization, credentials, platform, etc., the convention adjourned.

The organization of delegations from Northwestern States, and members of committees, are as follows:

Wisconsin—Gen. Bragg, chairman; R. M. Bashford, secretary; A. R. Delaney, organization; J. G. Jenkins, resolutions; J. M. Morrow, credentials; J. R. Doolittle, vice president.

Minnesota—Chairman, P. H. Kelly, vice president, R. H. Jones; secretary, W. S. Whipple; resolutions, J. C. Wise; credentials, G. A. Baxter; organization, R. A. Smith; national committeeman postponed.

Iowa—H. H. Trimble, chairman; D. M. Harris, credentials; E. H. Thayer, resolutions; N. B. Hyatt, permanent organization; W. F. Brannan, vice-president; Daniel Farrell, secretary; M. M. Hall, member of the national committee; L. G. Kinne, committee on notification.

SECOND DAY.

The convention was opened by the Rt. Rev. Bishop McLaren of the diocese of Chicago. He prayed that the proceedings might be tempered by the sober contemplation of the future, so that future generations might enjoy the results of law regulated by liberty, and not have to suffer the consequences of a rash disregard of the eternal laws of God. He prayed that the influences of patriotism might be sublime in the convention, and that all things might be done in it for the welfare of the land, and the glory of God. [illegible] of New York. These gentlemen will please assemble at the Indiana delegation, and escort the gentleman to the chair. The gentlemen repaired to the Indiana delegation, and they immediately proceeded to the place set apart for the Wisconsin delegation. Mr. Vilas, on arising from his seat, was greeted with vociferous cheering, which was continued for many minutes. The gentlemen then proceeded, Mr. Vilas and Mr. Hendricks leading, and ascended the platform, where their appearance was greeted with great enthusiasm.

The Temporary Chairman—Gentlemen of the convention, I have the honor to introduce to you the Hon. Mr. Vilas of Wisconsin, as the elected permanent president of your body. [Loud applause]. Thanking you most kindly for the courtesy and attention you have given me, I invoke for him who will need it much less than I have needed it—I resign.

Col. Vilas then made an able speech, of a partisan character, which was received with great applause.

Mr. Sowden of Pennsylvania offered the following:

Resolved, That we expedite the business of the convention by now calling the roll of states placing in nomination candidates of the respective states for nomination to the office of president of the United States.

This was adopted after a short debate on questions of order. When Delaware was called, amidst enthusiastic cheering, George E. Gray presented the name of Thomas Francis in a neat speech.

When the state of Indiana was called, loud cheers rent the air, and Mr. Menzie of that state arose and said: "The Indiana delegation requests the Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks to present the name of Indiana's candidate for the presidency." Mr. Hendricks came forward amidst a perfect outburst of enthusiasm lasting several minutes. Upon partial subsidence of the noise, a wild gallery delegate with a voice like a rolling mill shouted "Three cheers for the old ticket," and they were given with extraordinary vigor. Mr. Hendricks was introduced and presented the name of ex-Senator Joseph E. Macdonald of Indiana, in a lengthy speech. Gen. John C. Black of Illinois took the platform and made a strong speech seconding the nomination of McDonald.

Mr. Spencer of California—The delegates from California have decided that the Hon. John W. Breckenridge shall present the name of its candidate.

The Chair—Gentlemen of the convention, the Hon. John W. Breckenridge, a son of the last Democratic vice president who was not unjustly deprived of his office, will now address the convention as the representative of the State of California. Mr. Breckenridge in a short speech, presented the name of Allen G. Thurman of Ohio. By unanimous consent, Gen. Durbin Ward of Ohio took the platform, and seconded the nomination of Thurman.

James A. McKenzie of Kentucky—I desire, in the name of a state that will give 50,000 majority to the nominee of this convention, to place in nomination for the highest office within the reach of human ambition, the name of the present distinguished speaker of the American congress—John G. Carlisle.

When Mississippi was reached Mr. Walthall of that state said the State of Mississippi, through the Hon. Charles E. Hooker, desired to second the nomination of the Hon. Thomas F. Bayard of Delaware. Gen. Hooker was received with cheers, and made an eloquent speech in behalf of Bayard.

When the State of New York was reached Mr. Manning of New York arose and said: Mr. Chairman, New York presents the name of Gov. Cleveland, and desires to be heard through David Lockwood of Buffalo. Mr. Lockwood made a good speech and it was well received.

Senator Grady of New York tried to catch the eye of the chair, but the latter recognized Mayor Carter Harrison of Chicago, assuring Mr. Grady that he would be recognized in his turn. Mr. Harrison made a speech seconding the nomination of Grover Cleveland. When he had concluded there were cries of "Kelly" and some confusion.

Richard A. Jones of Rochester, Minnesota then spoke from the platform in behalf of Cleveland. He acknowledged that Minnesota was a republican state, but pleaded with his hearers to give her a chance to add to the roll of Democratic voters within her borders. Such additions, he said, would be easier were Grover Cleveland chosen as the leader of the party, and the announcement was greeted with loud cheers. To many Minnesotians Mr. Jones' voice and inflections of emphasis recalled those of C. K. Davis of St. Paul, though the similarity between the men ends with the points mentioned. Mr. Jones spoke for less than three minutes, and in closing beamed with good humor upon the delegates, whom he thanked for their attention and applause.

Mr. Grady of New York next got the platform. Before he had gone on five minutes it was plain that the only purpose of his speech was an attack on Cleveland, and Gen. Bragg made the point of order that the order of business was the nominating and not the defamation of candidates. The chairman was disposed to sustain the point, when the wily Manning played his trump card and asked in the name of the New York delegation that Grady be heard patiently, regardless of the rule. No other objection being made, he was permitted to go on. The shrewdness of this move was proceeded with what turned out to be an hour's diatribe, accumulating all the stock arguments against Cleveland which have been howled through the hotel corridors since Sunday. The interest in Grady's speech subsided as the contest over it disappeared.

Mr. Cochran of New York made a long speech amidst a good deal of wrangling on points of order. The call had only reached Rhode Island when the convention adjourned.

THIRD DAY.

After opening prayer the call of states was continued, Mr. Mansur of Missouri seconded the nomination of Thurman of Ohio. Mr. Powell of Ohio presented the name of Gov. Hoadly, Wm. A. Wallace of Pa. presented the name of Speaker Randall. A great many speeches were made for and against the various candidates. The clerk then read the list of candidates in nomination, and as it was to have been expected, Cleveland's name met the highest response, where applause was lavishly given to all except Hoadly. Tennessee renewed the motion to adjourn till 8 p. m., and a substitute which instructed the committee on resolutions to report at that time being accepted, was adopted without dissent the convention having been in session for three hours and a quarter.

In the evening, Col. Morrison, the committee presented the platform as follows.

THE PLATFORM.

Morrison of Illinois, chairman of the committee on resolutions, stepped to the platform to present the report of that committee. His appearance was greeted with cheers. The platform was read by one of the reading clerks as follows:

The Democratic party of the Union through its representatives in national convention assembled, recognizes that, as the nation grows older new issues are born of time and progress, and old issues perish; but the fundamental principles of the Democracy approved by the united voice of the people remain and will ever remain as the best and only security for the continuance of free government. The preservation of personal rights, the equality of all citizens before the law, the reserved rights of the states, and the supremacy of the federal government within the limits of the constitution will ever form the true basis of our liberties, and can never be surrendered without destroying that balance of rights and powers which enables a continent to be developed in peace and social order to be maintained by means of loyal self-government, but it is indispensable for the practical application and enforcement of these fundamental principles that the government should not always be controlled by one political party. Frequent change of administration is necessary as constant recurrence to the popular will. Otherwise abuses grow, and the government, instead of being carried on for the general welfare, becomes an instrumentality for imposing heavy burdens on the many who are governed for the benefit of the few who govern. Public servants thus become arbitrary rulers. This is now the condition of the country. Hence a change is demanded. The Republican party, so far as principle is concerned is a reminiscence. In practice it is an organization for enriching those who control its machinery. The frauds and jobbery which have been brought to light in every department of the government are sufficient to have called for reform within the Republican party, yet those in authority, made reckless by the long possession of power, have succumbed to its corrupting influence and have placed in nomination a ticket against which the independent portion of the party are in open revolt. Therefore a change is demanded. Such a change was alike necessary in 1876, but the will of the people was then defeated by a fraud which can[illegible] seas. It professes a preference for free institutions; it organized and tried to control state elections by federal troops. It professes a desire to elevate labor; it has subjected American working men to the competition of convict and imported contract labor. It professes gratitude to all who are disabled, or died in the war leaving widows and orphans; it left to a Democratic house of representatives the first effort to equalize both bounties and pensions. It proffers a pledge to correct the irregularities of our tariff; it creates and has continued them. Its own tariff commission confessed the need of more than 20 per cent reduction. Its congress gave a reduction of less than 4 per cent. It professes the protection of American manufacturers; it has subjected them to an unnecessary flood of manufacturing nations, not one of which taxes raw materials. It proposes to protect all American industries; it has impoverished many to subsidize a few. It professes the protection of American labor; it has depleted the returns of American agriculture, an industry followed by half our people. It professes the equality of all men before the law. Attempting to fix the status of colored citizens, the acts of its congress were reversed by the decisions of its courts. It accepts anew the duty of leading in the work of progress and reform; its criminals are permitted to escape through contrived delays or actual connivance in the prosecution. It is reeking with corruption. Outbreaking exposures no longer shock its moral sense. Its honest members, its journals, no longer maintain a successful contest for authority in its counsels or a veto upon bad nominations. That a change is necessary is proved by an existing surplus of more than $100,000,000, which has yearly been collected from a suffering people. Unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation. We denounce the Republican party for having failed to relieve the people from the crushing war taxes which have paralyzed business, crippled industry, and deprived labor of employment and just reward.

The Democracy pledges itself to purify the administration from corruption, to restore economy, to restore respect for law and to reduce taxation to the lowest limit consistent with due regard to the preservation of the faith of the nation to its creditors and pensioners, knowing full well, however, that legislation affecting the occupations of the people should be cautious and conservative in method and not in advance of public opinion but responsive to its demands. The Democratic party is pledged to revise the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests.

But in making a reduction in taxes it is not proposed to injure any domestic industries, but rather to promote their healthy growth. From the foundation of the government taxes collected at the custom house have been the source of federal revenue. Such they must continue to be. Moreover many industries have come to rely upon legislation for successful continuance, so that any change of law must be at every step regardful of the labor and capital thus involved. The process of reform must be subject in the execution to this plain dictate of justice. All taxation shall be limited to the requirements of economical government. The necessary reduction in taxation can and must be effected without depriving American labor of the ability to compete successfully with foreign labor, and without imposing lower rates of duty than will be ample to cover any increased cost of production which may exist in consequence of the higher rate of wages prevailing in this country. Sufficient revenue to pay expenses of the federal government economically administered, including pensions, interest and principal of the public debt, can be, under our present system of taxation from custom house taxes on fewer imported articles, bearing heaviest on articles of luxury, and bearing lightest on articles of necessity. We therefore denounce the and subject to the preceding limitations, we demand that federal taxation shall be exclusively for public purposes and shall not exceed the needs of the government economically administered. The system of direct taxation known as the internal revenue is a war tax; so long as the law continues the money derived therefrom should be devoted to the relief of the people from the remaining burdens of the war and be made a fund to defray the expense of the care and comfort of worthy soldiers disabled in time of duty in the wars of the republic, and for the payment of such pensions as congress may from time to time grant to such soldiers, a like fund for the sailors having been already provided, and any surplus should be paid into the treasury.

We favor an American continental policy based upon more intimate commercial and political relation with the fifteen sister republics of North, Central and South America, but entangling alliances with none.

We believe in honest money, the gold and silver coinage of the constitution, and a circulating medium convertible into such money without loss. Asserting the equality of all men before the law, we hold that it is in the duty of the government in its dealings with the people to mete out equal and exact justice to all citizens of whatever nativity, race, color or persuasion, religious or political. We believe in a free ballot and a fair count, and we recall to the memory of the people that noble struggle of the Democrats in the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth congresses, by which a Republican opposition was compelled to assent to legislation making everywhere illegal the presence of troops at the polls, as the conclusive proof that a Democratic administration will present liberty with order.

THE TERRITORIES.

The selection of federal officers for the territories should be reverted to citizens previously resident therein. We oppose sumptuary laws which vex the citizen and interfere with individual liberty.

We favor honest civil service reform and the compensation of all United States officers by fixed salaries, the separation of church and state, and the diffusion of free education by common schools, so that every child in the land may be taught the rights and duties of citizenship.

While we favor legislation which will tend to the equitable distribution of property to the prevention of monopoly and to the strict enforcement of individual rights against corporate abuses, we hold that the welfare of society depends upon a scrupulous regard for the rights of property as defined by law. We believe that the labor is best rewarded where it is freest and most enlightened, it should therefore be fostered and cherished. We favor the repeal of all laws restricting the free action of labor, and the enactment of laws by which labor organizations may be incorporated, and of all such legislation as will tend to enlighten the people as to the true relations of capital and labor.

We believe that the public lands ought, as far as possible, to be kept as homesteads for actual settlers; that all unearned lands heretofore granted to railroad corporations by the act of the Republican party should be restored to the public domain, and that no more grants of lands shall be made to corporations or be allowed to fall into the ownership of alien absentees. We are opposed to all proportions which upon any pretense would convert the general government into a machine for collecting taxes to be distributed among the states or the citizens thereof.

In reaffirming the declaration of the Democratic platform of 1856 that the liberal principles embodied by Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence and sanctioned in the constitution, which makes ours the land of liberty and the asylum of the oppressed of every nation, which have ever been cardinal principles in the Democratic faith, we nevertheless do not sanction the or the admission of a servile race unfitted by habits, training, religion or kindred for absorption into the great body of our people, or for the citizenship which our laws confer. American civilization demands that against the immigration or importation of Mongolians to these shores our gates be closed. The Democratic party insists that the duty of this government is to protect with equal fidelity and vigilance the rights of its citizens, native and naturalized, home and abroad, and to the end that this protection may be assured in the United States, papers of naturalization issued by courts of competent jurisdiction must be respected by the executive and legislative departments of our own government, and by all foreign powers. It is an imperative duty of this government to efficiently protect all the rights of persons and property of every American citizen in foreign lands, and demand and enforce full reparation for invasion thereof. An American citizen is only responsible to his own government for any act done in his own country or under her flag, and can only be tried therefor on her own soil, and according to her laws, and no power exists in this government to expatriate an American citizen to be tried in any foreign land for any such act. This country has had a well defined and executed foreign policy. Under Democratic administration its policy has ever been, in regard to foreign nations, so long as they do no act detrimental to the interest of the country or hurtful to our citizens, to let them alone. That as the result of this policy we recall the acquisition of Louisiana, Florida, California and of the adjacent Mexican territory by purchase alone, and contrast these grand acquisitions of Democatic statesmanship with the purchase of Alaska, the sole fruit of a Republican administration of nearly a quarter of a century.

THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The federal government should care for and improve the Mississippi river and other great waterways of the republic, so as to secure for the interior states easy and cheap transportation to tide water. Under a long period of Democratic rule and policy our merchant marine was fast overtaking and on the point of outstripping that of Great Britain. Under twenty years of Republican rule and policy, our commerce has been left to British bottoms, and almost has the American flag been swept off the high seas. Instead of the Republican party's British policy, we demand for the people of the United States an American policy under Democratic rule and [illegible]

stead of the Republican party's discredited scheme and false pretense of friendship for American labor expressed by imposing taxes, we demand, on behalf of the Democracy, freedom for American labor, by reduced taxes, to the end that these United States may compete with unhindered powers for the primacy among nations in all the arts and fruits of liberty.

TRIBUTE TO TILDEN.

With profound regret we have been apprised by the venerable statesman through whose person was struck that blow at the vital principle of the republic's acquiescence in the will of the majority, that he cannot permit us again to place in his hands the leadership of the Democratic hosts for the reason that the achievement of reform in the administration of the federal government is an undertaking too heavy for his age and failing strength. Rejoicing that his life has been prolonged until the general judgment of our fellow countrymen is united in the wish that that wrong were righted in his person for the Democracy of the United States, we offer to him in his withdrawal from public cares not only our respectful sympathy and esteem, but also that best homage of free men, the pledge of our devotion to the principles and the cause now inseparable in the history of this republic from the labors and the name of Samuel J. Tilden. With a statement of the hopes, principles and purposes of the Democratic party, the great issue of reform and change in administration is submitted to the people in calm confidence that the popular voice will pronounce in favor of new men and new and more favorable condition for the growth of industry, the extension of trade and due reward of labor and of capital and the general welfare of the whole country.

Col. Morrison then got up to state that he yielded to Gen. Butler to present a minority report. He further outlined the programme by saying: Gen. Butler will have 30 minutes to explain his report after it is read; Mr. Converse of Ohio will have five minutes in which to speak and Mr. Watterson of Kentucky ten, after which I shall move the previous question and call for the adoption of the report. All this was carried out and the previous question ordered. The vote was then taken by states on Butler's substitute and it was rejected—ayes, 97½; noes, 714½. When the vote of Indiana was being announced Senator Voorhees stated that he wished specially to have his vote recorded in the affirmative. The question was recurred on the adoption of the majority report and it was adopted without opposition.

The convention then prodceded to ballot for President, and deep silence was maintained during the following announcement of the vote by the clerk:

Cleveland	392	Tilden	1
Bayard	170	Hendricks	1
Thurman	88	Flower	4
McDonald	56
Headly	3	Total	820
Randall	78
Carlisle	27	Necessary to choice	547

The programme had been kept in this—that Cleveland did not get a majority on the first ballot. The result was received with a good deal of uproar, but with nothing like the enthusiasm that had been expected. The convention then adjourned till Friday.

On the call of states the following were announced as members of the national committee:

Alabama, Henry C. Semple; Arkansas, S. W. Fordyce; California, M. F. Tarpey; Colorado, M. S. Walter; Connecticut, W. H. Barnum; Iowa Samuel Pasco; Georgia, Patrick Walsh; Illinois, S. Corning Judd; Indiana, Austin H. Brown; Iowa, M. M. Hall; Kansas, C. W. Blair; Kentucky, Henry V. McHenry; Louisiana, B. F. Jonas; Maine, Edmund Wilson; Maryland, A. P. Gorman; Michigan, Don N. Dickenson; Minnesota, P. H. Kelly; Missouri, John G. Prather; Mississippi, C. A. Johnson; Nebraska, James C. Boyd; Nevada, Dennis E. McCarthy; New Hampshire, A. W. Tulloway; North Carolina, M. W. Ransom; Ohio, W. W. Armstrong; Rhode Island, J. B. Barnaby; South Carolina, Francis W. Dawson; Tennesse, Robert S. Looney; Texas, O. T. Holt; Vermont, Hon. B. B. Smalley; Virginia, John S. Barber; West Virginia, Louis Baker; Wisconsin, William F. Vilas; Arizona, W. K. Mead; District of Columbia, William Dickson; Idaho, John Haby; Dakota, M. H. Day; Utah, J. B. Roseborough; Montana, W. J. McCormic; Washington Territory, J. A. Kuhn; New Mexico (not announced); Wyoming, M. E. Post.

FOURTH AND LAST DAY.

At two or three minutes after 11, Dr. Clinton Locke, canon of the Protestant Episcopal cathedral in Chicago, led in prayer.

In response to a motion, the chair said the regular order was balloting for president, such would be commenced. Pennsylvania thanked the supporters of Mr. Randall and then withdrew his name. The roll call commenced at 11:22, and went along swiftly without any change worth the noting, though each state was received with a cheer it was soon determined that Homer Cleveland of New York was the nominee, and states for others made haste to change, Missouri came into line with thirty-two solid, and then people forgot their weariness. A huge anchor of white flowers, surmounted by an eagle, was borne through the aisles by a New Yorker, and placed behind the speaker's desk. Bragg of Wisconsin threw the state's standard into the air, and at twenty minutes of 1, Victory as she perched on the Cleveland banners, found a host drunk with joy to receive her.

Cleveland	683	McDonald	2
Bayard	81½
Thurman	4	Total	820
Randall	4	Necessary to a choice	547
Hendricks	45½

Then there was the usual hurrah, such as always follows events of this chatacter. The nomination was made unanimous.

The convention took a recess to 5 o'clock p. m., and the first business was the adoption of a resolution electing Mr. Vilas, chairman of the convention, as chairman of the committee to notify the nominees of their selection as candidates. A telegram was read from the president of the New York Produce exchange stating that the business men of New York were solid for Cleveland. The names of Joseph McDonald of Ind., John C. Black of Ill., Gen. Rosecrans of of Cal., and Gov. Hendricks of Ind., were presented for Vice President.

But all save Hendricks, were withdrawn, one by one, so that Mr. Hendricks, name alone remained before the convention. Hubbard of Texas made a spirited speech in favor of giving to Hendricks the office out of which he had been cheated. Weed of New York suggested that the roll of states should be called so as to put on record the unanimous vote for Hendricks. Wallace accepted the suggestion, withdrew his motion to nominate by acclamation, and moved that the nominations do now close. The motion was agreed to and the clerk proceeded to call the roll of states.

The result was the unanimous nomination of Thomas A. Hendricks as the candidate for vice president.

Finally the chairman got a chance to make the formal announcement of the vote. He said there had been 816 votes cast, all of them for Thomas A. Hendricks, and that Mr. Hendricks was therefore the candidate of the national Democratic convention for vice president of the United States. The convention then adjourned.

Old Men Boys Again.

It is related of the late Judge Black that in 1857, just after he was appointed Attorney-General of the United States, he was staying at the Astor house in New York. Scores of leading politicians called upon him. One day, a small, gray-haired man arrived at the hotel, and registered himself as Judge J. Williams, Iowa. On seeing the name of Judge Black on the book, he took a card and wrote,—

"The Supreme Judge of Iowa presents his compliments to the Attorney-General of the United States." He sent this up to Judge Black's room, together with a half-sheet of paper on which he had written,—

"O Jerry, dear Jerry, I've found you at last,
And memory, burdened with scenes of the past,
Returns to old Somerset's mountains of snow,
When you was but Jerry and I was but Joe."

In less than three minutes the great, dignified Judge Black was coming down the stairs, two steps at a time, with the little bell-boy in close pursuit. Two old school-mates and law-students embraced each other, and neither was able to utter a word. Both have passed away, and no better representatives of the American bar have sprung from humble origin, than these two.

A fire in Memphis damaged A. C. Toof & Co.'s printing house to the extent of $15,000; fully insured.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Washington News.

Secretary Lincoln says Green county, Tex., belongs to Indian Territory. Troops are driving off settlers.

Representative Calkins of Indiana, will start for his home on Saturday. He will locate at Indianapolis about the 1st of August and resigns his seat in time to have his successor elected in November.

Mrs. Mary T. Holabird, wife of Quartermaster General S. B. Holabird, died Thursday afternoon. Mrs. Holabird had suffered for a long time from the desease which finally proved fatal, and had borne the trial with Christian fortitude. Mrs. Holabird was beloved, and will be sincerely mourned by a large circle of friends.

Secretary Frelinghuysen has received from the consul at Marseilles the following telegram: "The situation at Toulon is unchanged, fourteen to seventeen deaths occur daily from cholera. Marseilles is worse. The deaths since Friday inclusive were 7, 11, 15, 25, 23 and 23. Last night 22 died in twelve hours. No emigration to the States is reported."

The Washington monument will be the highest work of man to be found in the world. It has reached 434 feet and the enormous weight of 90,000 tons. The highest point reached by man so far is the spire of the cathedral at Cologne, which is 520 feet high, and was completed in 1882. The Washington monument will be 555 feet high when completed. The tallest of the great pyramids is only 480 feet in height. The monument will be capped with a pyramidal peak fifty-five feet high. Visitors will be allowed to look through large windows on each of the four sides 500 feet from the ground.

Casualties of the Week.

Shurmer & Teagle's oil works at Cleveland took fire recently from super heating in the filtering house. Eight tanks exploded and several frame structures burned. Loss, $20,000; insurance half.

William L. McClelland, a prominent young man of Pittsburg, insane from overwork jumped from Smithfield street bridge, sixty feet, into the river. Failing to kill himself, he drew a knife and slashed his body in a fearful manner. He resisted arrest by drawing a revolver, but was finally overpowered. His recovery is considered doubtful.

The most disastrous fire in the history of Bradford, Pa., occurred early Friday morning the 11th. The fire originated in the bakery of Mrs. Charles Reibly, and spread so fast that May and Lizzie Reibley, aged two and six years respectively, and a Swedish servant girl were suffocated and burned to a crisp. Mrs. Reibly, in her efforts to rescue her babes, was terribly burned and died a short time after. The buildings destroyed were stores and mostly frame. The loss is $118,000.

Crimes and Criminals.

A warrant is out for the arrest of Reuben Potit, ex-cashier of Erie county, N. Y., Savings bank, on a charge of robbing the bank of $140,000. Potit fled.

At Murray, Mont., Henry Bernard, publisher of the Murray Pioneer, shot one of his compositors, Walter McKelvey of Gothic City, Cal., from the effects of which he died the next day. Bernard is in jail at Eagle City.

At Saliniville, Ohio, the body of a girl of seventeen years, named Gertie Phillips, was found in the woods not far from her home, with a pistol ball hole in her head. The girl has been missing since June 27. When last seen she was in company with a man named Hunter, who has been arrested.

Julius Woollheim, a clerk in F. D. Williamson & Co's., 99-cent store, Milwaukee, was arrested by Detectives Laubenheimer and Smith on a charge of robbing his employer's store. His work is alleged to extend over a period of about fourteen months and amount to about $1,000. The property was sold to pawnbrokers and the proceeds squandered.

"The prediction of Prof. Koch, the cholera expert, that the French scourge would reach Germany and ultimately spread throughout Europe is partially verified by an official announcement that one death by the dread disease occured at Constance, in the duchy of Baden, and two other cases have been reported. The announcement has created considerable alarm throughout Germany, and extra sanitary precautions and strict quarantine rules are being enforced in order to prevent the introduction of the epidemic in other parts of the empire."

Foreign Flashes

The French national fete, July 14, in the celebration of the fall of the bastile, is virtually abandoned.

Lord Cecil and Alfred Mace, son of Jem Mace, the pugilist, held evangelistic services in Montreal on Sunday.

There are many scenes at the Paris depots of travelers evading or refusing to submit to the fumigating regulations.

London, Special: Gladstone's outbursts of indignation over the rejection of the lords of the franchise bill and his threatened call of an October session to force the matter to another issue have not at all disturbed the stolid stubbornness of the Tory peers. They ridiculed his outburst and laughed at his menace. "This anti-lords agitation," they say, "is an ancient affair. The house of lords has weathered many a fiercer storm than the indications show the present bluster will amount to."

Cholera Alarm in Europe.

A Paris cable says: Great alarm prevails in high official quarters here over the sure advance of cholera through the land. There are no signs of these official terrors being permitted to go out to the people, however, for it would require but little to start a panic, and that means also revolution in France. The news from Toulon and Marseilles is most alarming. At the former place there is no abatement of the pestilence. One hundred and thirty new cases were reported in the hospitals. Within ten minutes after death the bodies are on their way for burial. Rumors prevail among the ignorant classes that many have been buried alive in order that the rich may escape contamination. At Marseilles there were sixteen deaths, and twenty new cases were taken to the hospitals during the night. Among the deaths was that of a visitor from Toulon. Telegrams from Lisbon state that an English steamer arrived recently with two cases of cholera on board The contagion is spreading through France, and cannot be stayed. Three deaths were reported at Aix, where the disease has made its appearance. Everywhere through this country preparations are now being made to receive what is considered the inevitable. Dr. Koch recently dissected the body of a marine who died of cholera in the marine hospital at Toulon, after having been sick only two hours, and says that this examination confirmed him in his opinion that the scourge raging at Toulon and Marseilles is undoubtedly Asiatic cholera. Subsequently, in an interview with a reporter, Dr. Koch said that the prospect of a spread of the disease all over Europe is hourly more certain. He stated that the fumigation of baggage and passengers, and the other sanitary precautions now being exercised at Paris and other cities, would not prevent the scourge being introduced throughout Europe, and perhaps ultimately reaching America. He advised very strict quarantine regulations as about the only means of preventing the introduction of the disease. A medical authority here states, apropos of the number of Americans flocking into Paris this year, that many of them will find it difficult to return home in a short time without going through the discomfort of a long quarantine at the gates of their own country. It seems a certainty that the new world tourists will carry back the scourge, if only in a mild form. The scientific men here say the dread disease will put an epidemic girdle around the earth this summer and next.

A Sensation in the Chicago Times Office.

A petition has been filed in the probate court at Chicago for the appointment of a conservator for the estate of Wilbur F. Story, editor and proprietor of the Chicago Times, proceeding from the nephew, Edward P. Chapin, and states the mental condition of Mr. Story to be shattered, and that he is unable to manage and control his estate. In 1877 Mr. Storey went abroad, and while sojourning in Germany he had a paralytic stroke. Subsequently he gave evidence of some improvement, and was alternately reported to be gaining strength and declining from time to time, but in the main he appeared to grow worse physically, and it became a matter of unverified report that his mind was steadily losing its strength. About a year ago he went to Philadelphia for medical treatment. A few months ago he returned to his home on Michigan avenue, where he is now living. It was, perhaps, owing to the rumors touching the state of his mind that his heirs decided to file the application. He has no children, his only heirs-at-law being his brother, Anson L. Storey, and the children of his two sisters. It is understood that either Judge Lambert Tree, Gen. Singleton or Judge T. Lyle Dickey, would be satisfactory to his heirs in case the court decides that the appointment of a conservator is necessary, as the three were among his most intimate and trusted friends.

The President Saves a Check.

Edward Bryce, the colored man convicted of the murder of Peter Washington at the Baltimore and Potomac depot in February last. Bryce was to have been hanged on Friday the 11th, but Thursday Brice's wife paid him a visit at the jail and took leave of him. He told her that he had no hope and asked her to meet him in heaven. Meanwhile events outside the jail were shaping themselves so as to make unnecessary all careful preparations for the execution. Members of the bar had an interview with the attorney general, and asked a commutation of Bryce's sentence. Mr. Brewster listened attentively to their short arguments. It having been stated that Judge Wylie did not deem the case one in which the extreme penalty of the law should be imposed, Mr. Brewster told the delegation to prepare a memorial and present with it a letter from Judge Wylie to that effect, in which case, action would be taken at once. The letter was at once secured, and the memorial prepared and signed and placed in Mr. Brewster's hands. The president returned from a trip down the river about 12:45 o'clock, and Attorney General Brewster at 1 o'clock presented the papers in the Bryce case to him. At 1:30 o'clock President Arthur directed that the sentence be commuted to imprisonment for life.

Dakota Postmaster Gone Wrong.

Yankton, Special:—Last April Charles Hollenbeck, postmaster at Parker, was charged with embezzling $1,325 of United States funds. It seems that he got behind with his funds, and to bring up his accounts he was in the habit of making postal orders, which were collected along the line by Wilbur C. Bower, a brother-in-law, and a postal agent between Sanborn, Iowa, and Chamberlain, Dak. This was done monthly for a year. Finally the inevitable discovery came, and Hollenbeck fled to Jefferson City, Mo., and began subbing on a postal route thereabout under his own name. He was discovered and arrested by Special Agent D. H. Pulcifer, who has arrived here with his prisoner. Bower was arrested at Chamberlain. Bower's reputation has always been unimpeachable, and it is claimed for him that he did not know his orders were forged. He was arrested to be held as a witness.

AUDITOR McGUIRE.

Having heard rumors to the effect that our efficient and gentlemanly County Auditor, P. J. McGuire, did not intend to be a candidate for re-election, we interviewed that gentleman on the question and was told that it was a fact that he is not a candidate for that office this fall. We then asked Mac the reason and he replied: "Well, the fact of the matter is, there is not sufficient salary allowed the Auditor to enable him to properly conduct the business of the office and make a fair living. That is the simple and sole reason." And that is, unfortunately, too true. The County seems to expect that a man will transact an amount of business that if in any other line should net him an income of at least $5,000 a year on a salary of about $1,200—to say nothing of the care and bother incident to the office. We are sorry that Mr. McGuire has decided not to accept the office again, for he has made the best official in that office the county ever had. When he took possession of the office he found everything in a chaos of confusion, and after a great deal of hard labor in straightening matters out he now has one of the best regulated offices in this or any other county, and by his gentlemanly and genial manner he has made hundreds of friends who will regret his loss. He does not inform us what his intentions for the future are, but he can rest assured that he has the best wishes of THE JOURNAL and hosts of friends for his success in whatever he may undertake.

A great deal of dissatisfaction has of late been expressed at the course pursued by our city marshal in making illegal arrests at the instance of irresponsible parties, refusing to make them when requested so to do by a responsible taxpayer and making a farce of his official duties generally. So deep has the feeling become that at the regular session of the council on July 1st a petition, numerously signed was presented that body asking the removal of city marshal, John A. Dowling. The petition was read and promptly laid on the table without discussion. A short time thereafter we called the attention of his Honor, Mayor Walsh to a specific case in which the marshal had made an unwarranted arrest, putting it in the form of a complaint. The mayor told us that he considered the action on the part of the marshal as hasty, and that he thought it deserving of censure at least, and gave us the impression that he would attend to the matter. At the next meeting of the council no notice was taken of the matter in question nor of the petition for the removal of the marshal. At the meeting held on Tuesday night July 15th, Alderman Bang made several attempts to call up the matter of the petition and at last met with a second whereupon the question was put and promptly voted down. Mr. Bang then remarked that perhaps there were citizens in the audience who would like to prefer direct charges and requested that they be allowed to speak. After a short discussion a motion was made to adjourn which motion prevailed with unanimous alacrity. We have known for some time about this disturbance and have refrained from mentioning it confident that the council would make an investigation and see that justice was done, but as they do not seem inclined to give the matter a fair hearing it is about time that public attention should be called to it. Aside from the petition, serious and grave charges have been preferred against the marshal, one taxpayer making, on the evening that the petition was read, charges of such a nature that the council should not be content to rest under them even if the marshal can afford it. The mayor has told us that he considered all this business as mere spite work, done for the purpose of removing the marshal through sheer spite, but it does seem to us that when the public demands of its servants certain things the demand should at least meet with some show of recognition. The common sense view of the case is that certain taxpayers, who pay their taxes for protection fail to see wherein they get that protection under the present marshal and the council, in justice to them, in justice to itself as faithful public servants and in justice to the marshal should investigate this matter and if these charges be true remove the cause, if not they should exonerate him.

On the 9th day of July the Democratic party, in convention assembled at Chicago put in nomination for president Grover Cleveland, and for vice president Thomas A. Hendricks and Tammany went back to New York mad all over. This nomination is in accord with the life long policy of the party—Cleveland is nominated to catch the young, progressive element, the better class—and to carry New York and Hendricks is intended as a sort of a sop to the old moss-backs—and to carry Indiana. As compared with Blaine and Logan they "don't hold a candle," so to speak. No better statesman than Jas. G. Blaine ever lived and certainly no better was ever nominated for the high office to which he will be elected next November. Grover Cleveland, while he is undoubtedly a very capable man for mayor, or Governor is not for one moment to be compared with Blaine and this fact is so well known in his own State that Blaine will [illegible] votes in that [illegible] managed to [illegible] which [illegible]

no trifling affair. Mr. Hendricks is too well known, has been written up for the same offense so often, in his frequent attempts to clutch the golden prize, that it is needless for us to introduce him to our readers. He represents the mossback element and in the hour of our nation's extreme peril, when the gallant Gen. John A. Logan was leading the boys in blue on from victory to victory, Hendricks was energetically proclaiming the war a failure and doing all he could to make his words good. While Logan was risking his life to save the country that has now made him the honored nominee for the second place on the national ticket Hendricks was doing all in his power to disrupt the Union. It is enough to say of him "he was a copperhead!" He has been tried once in the Nation's crisis and found wanting. Logan was tried and found true blue. Of course we all know that in the nature of things no such a war will occur during the coming four years but it is well to look to the principles of men to whom are to be committed so high and important a trust. It is safe to judge of the further actions of men in the light of their past. A grateful country awards liberal pensions to its brave defenders, counting no cost too great as a reward for valiant services on the field of battle. Logan's distinguished services will have received fitting recognition when he is elected next fall and if there is anything in his services to save the country to entitle him more than one who labored to destroy it he will go in with a rousing majority.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

The best explanation of this wonderful document we have seen was given by Ben. Butler in the Chicago Convention. "He objected to the tariff plank in the platform because it took the committee thirty-six hours to frame it, and if it took those gentlemen so long to frame it and get it in form, there must be some reason for that. If they could not find out in thirty-six hours what they wanted, how were the laboring men to find out what it meant? [Laughter.]

There was a radical difference between the committee and himself. The very able chairman of the committee, Mr. Morrison, thought there should be no such thing (or could be no such thing) as protection to American labor by taxation. He (Butler) believed that there should be such protection, such fostering, such cherishing. Mr. Morrison could not yield his convictions, and he (Butler) could not yield his, and thereforefore the committee had to spend all that time to say something that would mean one thing one way and another thing another way. [Laughter.] He asked delegates to read that tariff plank, and see if they could find out exactly what it did mean. It did not mean protection. If it did, Col. Morrison was too honest a man to bring it here, and yet it was so twisted that it might mean protection. [Laughter.] The Democracy had in its platform in 1880 a plank of "Tariff for revenue only," and it broke the back of the most gallant soldier in the country [laughter,] and now they had a tariff plank "for public purposes exclusively." Where was the difference? "Exclusively" meant "only," and "only" meant "exclusively." [Laughter.]

THE MEANING OF IT.

The New York Issue says the Democratic Platform is not so obscure as its authors endeavored to make it and gives its reasons as follows:

"It is readily found in the fact that this platform was reported by Morrison, the uncompromising free trade leader in Congress, and indorsed by such Democratic representatives from protectionist districts as Randall and Converse.

Indeed, nothing can be plainer than the object of the Democratic party when its utterances are purposely obscure and all its leaders agree.

Success first. With a Democratic President and a free trade majority in Congress, Randall can be tolerated and his few followers placated.

"The dodgers have conquered."

"Keep the rascals out."

The meanest girl has just been found. She is an Albia, Iowa, girl who has a pet calf, which she has haltered in the front yard. She has taught it to fight, and when her fellow takes his departure she loosens the picket rope and the calf butts him over. She rushes to his rescue with seemingly heroic devotion and saves him. Heroism is a great quality in a woman, but it is unfair for a girl to win the affection of her fellow by this deception matter if ignorance is bliss.

The great storm of Wednesday evening July 9th, did more damage than people imagined at first. W. H. Grayer, of Euclid, was in the city last Friday and says that the storm was fearful, and did a great deal of damage west of Euclid. The report from all over the country, as near as we can get it, is as follows: Keystone farm, 1400 acres; Wm. Cunningham, 50 acres; Moser & Moeckel, 240 acres; Mr. Charbeneau, all; Payne farm, all; B. Corish, 160 acres; W. Senske, nearly all; W. O. Ovelsgaard, nearly all; Mr. McWaters, all; Mr. Benoit, all; John Obright, part; Will Apel, all; C. Kreoger, part; Rev. Mr. House, all; A. Moore, 160 acres; W. H. Jennings, all; Walter Letts, all; S. Cruikshank, all; E. D. Childs, 25 acres; Harry Wyand, about 25 acres; Stork Anderson, nearly all. This report we do not claim to be exactly correct, but all the parties who we have interviewed whose names are in the report say that it must be nearly correct.

Peterson's Magazine for August leads off with a capital steel-engraving, "Meeting Out," from the original picture by E. L. Henry, one of the very best things we have ever seen, and thoroughly American. The tales, sketches, etc., etc., are all original, and are unusually good. "Some Creole Blossoms" is a story of remarkable originality and power. "Lord Avalon" goes on spiritedly, and so does the novelet by Mrs. Stephens. We have often said that every lady of refinement should take this magazine, and we now repeat the advice. The price is but Two Dollars a year, with great deductions to clubs. Address CHAS. J. PETERSON, [illegible] Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Farmers Take Notice.

No More Danger of Fire.

I have invented a smoke-stack that I will guarantee not to throw out any sparks, and that is perfectly safe to use around stacks of grain. All farmers should see it used, and may see it work by calling at D. Cameron's place, Carman. There is no screen about it, still it is perfectly safe, and the draught is better than any other. I have been engaged in repairing engines and boilers in Crookston this summer.

A MASS MEETING

OF THE

Farmers and Business Men

OF NORTHERN MINNESOTA AND DAKOTA, IS HEREBY CALLED TO MEET AT

Eriesson's Hall, in the City of Crookston

July 25th and 26th, at 10 o'clock a. m..

for the purpose of taking action to secure a reduction of freight rates in time for the present crops; and the consideration of proposed legislative measures for the regulation and government of Elevators and Railroads similar to the provisions of the Massachusetts and Illinois laws, and for the consideration of such other business as may be deemed best calculated to serve our purpose and promote the future prosperity of our general industries. The time is not remote when representatives to the Legislatures must be selected, either by the people or by the ruling powers of the machine and corporate monopoly. Their machine men—office seekers—are now in the field plotting for the overthrow of the people's will. Shall these monopolists who have robbed the people of this Valley of millions every year, be allowed to capture our next Legislature and continue their arrogant system of oppression for two years longer?

We hope not, and we believe the farmers and business men of this great Valley have, and are now speaking in tones which indicate their determination to continue the great battle of reform until the several industries of our country shall have laws and statutes calculated to build up their future, in place of class legislation for the few, to the detriment of the many.

A cordial invitation to attend this meeting is hereby extended to every farmer and business man of Northern Minnesota and Dakota.

Prominent speakers from abroad are expected to be in attendance and address the meeting.

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS.

MORTGAGE SALE.

WHEREAS, DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE in the conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Arthur Perras, mortgagor, to John Cromb, mortgagee, dated the 31st day of October A. D. 1882, and recorded as a mortgage together with the power of sale therein contained in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the 31st day of October A. D. 1882 at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m., in book "H" of mortgages on page 352 which said mortgage authorized the holder thereof in case of such default to declare due and foreclose the same for the whole amount secured to be paid thereby, and whereas, there is claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the amount of four hundred and sixty-six and 66-100 dollars, being the whole amount secured to be paid thereby, and still unpaid and seven and 85-100 dollars taxes paid by mortgagee, and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, and whereas by such default the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become and is operative.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of such power of sale contained in, and recorded with said mortgage and of the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the west front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction, by the Sheriff of said County or by his Deputy of said County, on Saturday the 16th day of August A. D. 1884, at ten o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amount that shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon and costs and expenses of sale, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure. The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are the lot piece or parcel of land situated in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The east half (e½) of the northwest quarter (nw¼) and the west half (w½) of the northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section number fourteen (14) in Township number one hundred and fifty (150) north, of Range number forty-two (42) west, of the fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and sixty (160) acres more or less according to the United States government survey thereof.

MORTGAGE SALE.

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred and seventy-eight and 25-100 dollars ($378.25-100) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by John B. Derosier, a single man, mortgagor, to Joseph L. Daoust, mortgagee, bearing date the twelfth day of April A. D. 1883, and, with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 2d day of November A. D. 1883, at 9:50 o'clock a. m., in book "A" of mortgages, on page 228. The said mortgage was duly assigned by an instrument in writing, duly executed and delivered by the said Joseph L. Daoust to Arthur Yvernault, dated the 29th day of May 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds on the tenth day of June 1884, at 3:35 o'clock p. m., in book "R" of mortgages, on page 148, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: The northwest quarter (nw¼) of Section six (6) Township one hundred and fifty (150) Range forty-four, according to the government survey thereof in Polk County, and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the first day of August A. D. 1884, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication July 3d, 1884.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of ninety-two and 75-100 dollars ($92.75-100) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by James Ryan, a single man, to James Barton, bearing date the 11th day of December A. D. 1883, and, with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, on the 11th day of December A. D. 1883, at 5:25 o'clock p. m., in book "N" of mortgages, on page 319, that an action at law in which said James Barton was plaintiff, and said James Ryan was defendant, was instituted in the District Court, in and for Polk County, Minnesota, on March 14th, 1884, to recover said debt and that on June 26th, 1884, a judgment was duly rendered in said action for the sum of $102.81 in favor of the plaintiff therein, and against the defendant therein, which said judgment was on the 26th day of June 1884, duly entered in the office of the Clerk of said Court, and that on the 26th day of June 1884 an execution was duly issued from said court in said action and that on June 26th 1884, said execution was returned wholly unsatisfied, and that said sum of $102.81 is now justly due and owing from the defendant in said action to the plaintiff therein.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz: Lot number nine (9) in block number two (2) in Hurlbut's addition to the townsite of Crookston, according to the recorded plat thereof now on file in the office of the Register of Deeds of Polk County, Minnesota, also an undivided one-half (½) of lot ten (10) in block twelve (12) in Davis Addition to the townsite of Crookston, according to the recorded plat thereof now on file in the office of the Register of Deeds, of Polk County, Minnesota; with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said County and State, on the 16th day of August A. D. 1884, at 10 o'clock a. m., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

D. 1882, at 1:45 o'clock p. m., in book "H" of mortgages, on page 248 on which there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice, the amount of fifty-six and 17-100 dollars, and there is yet to become due thereon four hundred and twenty-five dollars and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the mortgaged premises therein described, which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, at public auction by the Sheriff of said County, on Saturday the 16th day of August A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-four, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage, with the interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are the lots, pieces or parcels of land situated in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: Lots number four (4) eleven (11) and twelve (12) and the southeast quarter (se¼) of the southeast quarter (se¼), all in Section number eighteen (18) in Township number one hundred and fifty-one (151) north, of Range number forty-three west, of fifth principal meridian, containing one hundred and seventeen (117) acres more or less according to the United States survey thereof.

Being unable to attend the Farmers' Convention at Moorhead last week in person we clip the best report of it which we have seen, for the benefit of our readers, which account is taken from the Glyndon News, of the 18th inst., as follows:

FIRST DAY.

MOORHEAD, July 15, 1884.

Convention met in Erickson hall, Moorhead, Tuesday at 11 o'clock; called to order by Dr. A. Wilson, of Clay County, who read the call. It was voted that Mr. Carrington Phelps, of Stevens County, Minn., be permanent chairman. He took the chair and the work of organization was completed with the following list of officers:

President, Carrington Phelps; secretaries, O. G. Farsdale, S. Torgerson; vice-presidents, F. J. Schreiber, H. G. Palmer, N. Davis, A. Garnett.

A committee on resolutions was appointed, viz.:

And the following on legislation:

A. E. Hall, Clay; E. Mattson, Wilkin; R. B. Myers, Richland; T. K. Torgerson, Becker; J. W. Allen, Ransom; A. Garnett, Pembina; M. E. Clapp, Otter Tail; R. Reynolds, Polk; E. N. Davis, Kittson; E. B. McKnight, Cass; Dr. W. T. Collins, Grand Forks; Charles Canning, Norman; H. G. Palmer, Marshall; C. Phelps, Stevens, Stevens.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON:

Was given to speech-making, Mr. M. E. Clapp, of Fergus Falls, had first place on the programme, and gave a sound, thoughtful address on the fundamental principles which underlie the movement and its relation to the great corporations. He deduced form the State's creation of power in combination the plain truth that the thing created is subject to the power that made it, and from this proposition proceeded to show how the instinct of self-preservation impelled the farmer class to cry out against the hard bearing down upon their interest by the rude hand of corporate monopoly. Mr. C. is a forcible, winning speaker, ready and well-informed; reminds one of "Cush" Davis, and is vocally better equipped than he.

Judge Reynolds of Crookston followed by invitation, and talked in a homely, effective way on the same things besides railroads and elevators and grades and prices; lectured farmers for much of their poor method in cultivating, for their exclusive wheat raising to the sacrifice of the dairying and stock interest, their borrowing habits and all that, but closed with some equally well-directed wipes at the abuses in railway operating which are so patent to all who have their eyes open. He counseled farmers to abate nothing of their just demands, but to insist the more stoutly upon redress through legislation as well as more liberal polich in management of the roads. The Judge could see no hope for the farmer class in any present separate party action—either or both the parties in the State can be much more easily wrought upon by the united farmers in their own behalf than new organizations and new machinery can be constructed for the work on hand. The caucus is the all-important point to be secured; neglect that, and it is too late to win the conventions and elections.

General discussion of the political phase of the movement followed, the drift of it being adverse to third party tactics, but advocating early shaping of the farmers' demands so that notice of the same may be served upon seekers after public place of all degrees and stripes. Among those participating were the chairman, Messrs. Stordock, Mattison, Probstfield, Davis, Palmer, Hall of Cromwell, Hall of Glyndon, Osborn, Burdick, and the two regular orators of the afternoon.

By common consent, to-morrow is to show up as a day of more serious work and relatively less of the cheap commodity called talk. Meeting adjourned to 10 a. m. Wednesday.

"July 16.—Reached home to-day. Very important matters demanding my immediate attention will prevent my meeting you. May success attend your deliberations. KNUTE NELSON."

Mr. Donnelly also, by letter to the committee, said he could not be here. But for ability and satisfactory platform qualities generally, the convention is happy in the presence of Messrs. Clapp and Reynolds to-day, and the promise of Prof. Whitney to-morrow.

Valuable work is expected at the hands of the committee on legislations. That on resolutions is also important.

Nearly two hundred people were in the hall this afternoon, mostly farmers. It is in great part an intelligent, pleasant body of men to and listen to.

SECOND DAY.

MOORHEAD, July 16 1884.

Convention reassembled, and a discussion began about 11 o'clock on a resolution offered by Mr Probstfield, asking the committee on legislation to consider the matter of unequal taxation involved in exemption of railroad lands. It was voted to so refer.

The committee on resolutions brought in its report, which was adopted after debate. It is here given:

WHEREAS, The future greatness of our new Northwest and of our government at large depends mainly upon the success and prosperity of the several industries of agriculture; and,

WHEREAS, Great burdens have been and are now being borne by our constituents through the imposition of extortionate rates for the transportation of grain, lumber, fuel, and by other unsurpassed powers of oppression; therefore, be it

RESOLVED, That this convention, representing a considerable portion of the agricultural industries of the Red River Valley, while asking no unreasonable or special favors, are here assembled to demond, and will continue to assemble, confederate, agitate and demand, by all lawful means, such measures of relief from oppression and unreasonable burdens as may be necessary to the happiness and prosperity of our people.

RESOLVED, That this convention asks and demands of the Northern Pacific and the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba railroad corporations, that a reduction of one-third be immediately made on freight rates for the transportation of wheat from any and all points on the lines of said roads; and in asking this reduction of rates this convention demands that which is within reason and equity as between these corporations and their patrons.

RESOLVED, That farmers, mechanics and business men whose interests are identical throughout the Red River Valley, be and they hereby are urgently recommended to assemble in mass meetings at all points of business centers for the purpose of considering, agitating, demanding and putting in operation such measures for relief from burdensome abuses and oppression as may be found necessary and best calculated to bring about such relief.

RESOLVED, That farmers, mechanics, laboring and business men of the Northwest should exercise the rights and duties of American citizenship in attending the caucusses of their respective parties, and there select delegates to County, District and State conventions who will, in turn, give the people nominees for office who shall be of them and for their several industries.

RESOLVED, That the president and secretary of this convention be, and hereby are instructed to furnish copies of these resolutions to the corporations herein named.

The following committee was named at the afternoon session to proceed to St. Paul and present this expression to the officials of the two companies, viz: Hon. S. G. Comstock, Lyman Loring, Charles Canning, H. G. Stordock, Dr. W. T. Collins.

The report of the legislative committee is comprised in the following resolution:

RESOLVED, That this committee recommend that a standing committee on legislation of five be appointed by the convention, with instructions to formulate legislative measures governing elevators, railroads and commissions for the transportation of freights and passengers, inspection and grading of wheat, and such other matters as may be by them deemed wise and applicable to the wants of our people, and report subsequent conventions to be held by farmers of the Red River Valleys.

And the committee appointed in pursuance thereof is made up of W. T. Collins and A. Garnett, of Dakota, and H. G. Palmer, A. M. Burdick and C. Phelps, of Minnesota.

Prof. Whitney's address was the first notable event of the afternoon session. It consisted of suggestive facts and deductions from the showing of railroad freight earnings in the United States. He asserted that 15 cents per bushel on wheat, Moorhead to Minneapolis or Duluth, gave the company a profit of nearly 1½c per ton per mile above the average rate received throughout the country, and about twice the actual cost of the transportation. A rate of 10c per bushel would afford a profit of ½c per ton per mile more than the average in the United States—and this on a line (N. P.) far cheaper to build than many roads. The professor spoke at considerable length, advocating organization to secure and protect farmers' rights through existing parties if it can be done, but if not, then through a third party.

Dr. Collins gave some facts regarding the receipts of railroads for transporting wheat. He expressed the opinion that wheat could be shipped from Northern Dakota to Minneapolis for five cents a bushel with profit to the railroad companies. He referred to the statement made by President Hill and Manager Manvel of the Manitoba company, that a reduction of ten percent was made last year in freight rates, and claimed that instead of a reduction, by an adroit re-classification there had been an actual increase in rates of 15 per cent. He claimed that there was not another railroad in the northwest whose managers were accumulating fortunes as fast as were those of the Manitoba company. As he believed there was not a mile of road of the system that was not paying. He said there was only one thing that would right the wrongs of the farmers at the hands of the elevator and railroad companies, and that was legislation.

It was voted to invite State Senator Comstock to visit the convention and give his views on this subject. The chair was authorized to appoint a committee to wait upon him for this purpose. President Phelps began to appoint, and the appointees with one consent began to make excuse. Mr. Loring's rheumatism was especially bad after dinner, and having already marched up stairs he did not feel like marching down again; Mr. Probstfield did not consider he was the man to do it, as he had not been in favor of inviting the Senator, was not of his political party and thought those who were should constitute the deputation, (excused;) Dr. Wilson, while not denying that he was of Mr. Comstock's political party, admitted the possibility that times and issues may have changed since he was a comrade of the Hon. Senator in active service, and if the convention would allow him a half-hour he would explain why it was not expedient that he should go away from the convention hall on such a mission! The chair was in a quandary amidst so much modesty, and was not long in sniffing "a mice" in the Clay County meal-bag. Something had to be done to rescue the convention from the fate threatened by Dr. Wilson's personal privilege, and Mr. Schreiber nobly threw himself into the breach as a volunteer member of the committee of invitation. This brave example operated as a ready relief on Loring's rheumatism, and he would go too—and like good old Caleb and Joshua they two went forth and found that the Comstock wasn't such a terrible giant after all. The trio soon returned, and our Senator was before us in his own proper person with a broad interrogation point upon his countenance. Mr. Loring informed him that an alleged interview with him had appeared some time ago in the Fargo Argus, in which he was reported to have made certain statements a variance with the views of the farmers, his constituents, and they wished to afford him an opportunity to put himself on record.

Mr. Comstock said of the alleged interview that a reporter of the Argus came into his office while he was conversing with Mr. Wellcome. The reporter printed in his paper next morning a portion of that conversation, with some of his own (the reporter's) views on railroad matters, and that was all there was to it. He was not prepared to go into a statement of his views on the railroad question, as he was not entirely decided in his own mind on some points. He said, however, that if any of his constituents wished to ask him any questions he would answer them if he could.

Mr. Stordock outlined the work of the convention to the present, including the report of the committee on legislation and the resolution demanding a reduction in the rates on grain, and Mr. Comstock was asked if he was prepared to pledge himself to support a bill embodying the demands of the convention if it should be shown that tee convention represented the will of a majority of the people of the district.

Mr. Comstock said that he would not play the part of a demagogue. He would not say that he agreed with the convention, or a majority of it on some points. He was not an enemy of the railroads, neither was he their champion or in their employ. He said he was not prepared to support any measure until he had had an oppportunity to examine it. If a bill of the character proposed was introduced, and on examination it proved to be just and fair, he whold support it to the best of his ability. In regard to the question of wheat inspection he declared he did not know what was best to be done. Something, he admitted, should be done, but what? If the committee of the convention would frame a bill which upon examination promised to bring relief, no one could more heartily support it than he would.

The questioning and discussion continued at length, Messrs. Collins, Burdick, Stordock and others participating.

Mr. Loring asked if Mr. Comstock would serve on a committee to ask of the companies a reduction in rates.

Mr. Comstock—"Yes, sir; and do my best to secure it."

A few matters of routine business followed, and then adjournment sine die. Many of those present promise to be at the Crookston mass convention on the 25th and 26th, and at the gathering in Grand Forks, to assemble on the 31st.

POLITICAL.

The New York Sun, one of the most influential Democratic papers in the Union says:

"In 1884 it is again proposed to nominate a candidate for the purpose of securing what is now called the independent Rhpublican vote, and Grover Cleveland, a man not qualified to be president, and himself and extreme independent, though a democrat in name, has been picked out for this purpose. If Mr. Cleveland should finally come forth as the candidate of the Chicago convention, he will appear upon the stage bearing the mark of destiny, and that destiny will be defeat. At the same time the disaster will be most pernicious in its effects upon the democracy. The folly of repeating such a foolish experiment, with a man independent of party obligations, will be signally punished, and the disorganization it produces will be of a sort that will take years to recover from."

Fargo Argus: A Democratic paper received from Tennessee says the only platform its party needs is the four words, "Turn the rascals out." That is the pith and body of the principles of the Democratic party, put the Republicans out and Democrats in the offices. All other formularies are but factors to secure this achievement. The only civil service reform that will be remembered should by any possibility the Democrats succeed in electing the ticket put up last week would be a wholesale removal of the trained, experienced incumbents and the filling of their places by the hungry hordes that have so long been struggling for power for its rewards of pelf.

Cleveland's Strength and Weakness.

New York Sun: Harper's Weekly states the fact exactly. It says that Mr. Cleveland "is strong not because of his party, but despite of it." That is perfectly true. He has labored against the Democratic party, not for it. He is engaged in a personal policy which does not include the building up and strengthening of the Democratic party, but the building up and strengthening of Cleveland. He may be strong with those who are not Democrats. With Democrats he is weak.

Fargo Argus: One of the most significant political straws is found in the course of The St. Louis Post, the old time organ of the Republican Germans of Missouri, formerly edited by Carl Schurz, and of which he is still part owner. Under his advice the paper bolted the ticket. In consequence, it is reported, its subscribers commenced to drop off by the thousand, and it was threatened with ruin. To save itself it has put up the names of Blaine and Logan and says "it erred" in its criticism of the ticket, and advises Republicans to remain true to the party. This is specially significant from the fact that The Post bolted in 1872 and several times since refused to support party candidates. It shows that German Republicans cannot be drawn away to Cleveland.

We clip the following communication to the St. Vincent New Era from the pen of our old friend "Clore," as it is so full of wise suggestions to farmers and business men and furnishes excellent reasons why those two classes should unite for self-protection. We do not fully endorse his idea that railroads are more of a curse than a blessing nor do we believe he means just that—it is only the method of operating which works the evil: He writes as follows:

THE POWER OF THE FARMERS.

Some plain talk showing what they can do.

They can elect the president of the United States. They can elect a congress to do their will. They can elect members of the States Legislature thereby controlling the election of senators of the United States. They can by united action so control their produce that they need raise none but what they can find ready sale for and at good prices. All they need to accomplish this is unity, then they become the masters of monoply instead of being her slave. The wonder is that this great power has lain dormant so long. But better late than never. Let them now unite, and at next election show those grasping corporations that when they wish to use their power they can do it, and do it effectually. Yet they must not become radicals, for one radical measure will not cure the evil. We need capital, we need railroads, we need elevators, but we want them to be satisfied a just and equal profit on capital invested. Railroads to-day in the Red River Valley are more of a cusse than a blessing. They invite settlors in by offering them cheap rates of transportation, but when they have any produce to ship to market, they bleed the farmers to death. This alone is a fact which I regret, and the railroad in time, too, will have to regret it, for once a country gets a bad name it is hare to mend it. The merchants, too, have to pay extortionate rates od freight, and to protect themselves they have to charge it back to the settlers. What we need is just and equal laws for all. Protect capital as well as the farmer and the business man. Let us then unite in every town, village and hamlet. Let us speak as if one. Let us form a compuct body and go to the polls and vote as a unit, and keep at it until we get just and equal rights before the law. Let us tell these men we send to represent us that we want laws passed that will enable us as Americans to live in comfort and not be bled to death by unscrupulous corporations. This we can do dy forming Farmers' Clubs in each town, and voting intelligently at the polls, avoiding all party differences and voting for no man encept he is pledged to vote for the farmers benefit. CLARE.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication June 12th, 1884.]

DEFAULT HAVING BEEN MADE IN THE payment of the sum of three hundred and seventy-eight and 25-100 dollars ($378.25-100,) which is claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage, duly executed and delivered by John B. Crookston, Thursday, July 24.

'ROUND HOME.

Conductor John Copeland stopped in the city last Wednesday.

Judge Ives and wife, of St. Hilaire, were in the city this week.

Mr. Benedict, Revenue Collector, was in the city last Wednesday.

Quite a good many Red Lake Falls people are in the city this week.

Send for catalogue of low prices in pianos and organs. C. J. Kops, Broadway.

J. L. Bailey has started a flour and feed store opposite his old stand on Broadway.

Frank Goodin will open his restaurant and be ready for business about Monday next.

Farmers, remember the convention that meets in this city to-morrow, and all come.

They began cutting barley last Monday on the farm formerly owned by Judge Stearns.

There will probably be races on the track at the summer garden next Saturday afternoon.

Death to the dudes as the elk said when he caught Jim Ryan in his yard last Tuesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Conant, of Coldwater, Mich., are in the city visiting relatives. Mrs. Conant is a sister of G. W. Lewis.

New organs sold on payments of five dollars per month. C. J. Kops, Dobson's block, Broadway, Crookston, Minn.

There was quite a crowd of the boys from all over the county got in the city in time to lose a dollar or two on the wheel business.

The parasol that Tom Box has got on the express wagon is a dandy and on the outside it tells all about Herb's ice cold lemonade, etc, etc.

The cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis are crowded with people this week. There are so many there that it is almost impossible to find a place to stay.

Mr. Le Roy, drummer in St. Jean Baptist band, went to Minneapolis as drummer for the C. C. B. as Mr. Dipple joined with the members of the post.

Call and examine the largest stock of fine pianos and organs northwest of Chicago and St. Paul. C. J. Kops, Crookston, Minn., Gen'l agent, W. W. Kimball Co.

Chas. Seely has lately received a stock of axle-grease which he will dispose of at a very low figure. Fred Schwark, Jim Creighton and Dunc Morris, agents.

Mrs. S. M. French, of Chicago, principal in one of the high schools of that city, arrived here on Tuesday morning, and is visiting in the family of conductor J. B. Copeland.

Parties thinking of purchasing pianos or organs will save from 15 to 25 per cent. by calling on or addressing C. J. Kops, Crookston, Minn., Gen'l agent W. W. Kimball Organ Co.

E. K. Overland, of Garfield, was in the city last Tuesday. He brought with him a sample of oats the finest we have seen as yet. He reports crops looking splendidly in that locality.

Invitations will be sent out soon for a young folks party, to be held at Ericsson's hall on the evening of August first. All persons holding invitations will be expected to attend.

The Valley Roller Mills are again running in full blast, and are receiving more orders for their popular brands of flour than they can possibly fill, which shows that their flour cannot be beaten.

The ice cream festival, given by the ladies of the Norwegian Lutheran church last evening at Mossifins' new building on Main Street, proved to be a success in every way. They cleared something over $30.

Estey organs, Kimball organs, Emerson pianos, Decker Bros. pianos and Hallett & Davis pianos sold at Chicago prices and terms, by C. J. Kops, Crookston, Minn. Send for catalogue.

The man who appeared on our streets this week with a monkey and hand-organ, got as large a procession started as we have seen for some time. If there are any more children in the city besides the crowd that followed that monkey there is certainly a mistake in the census.

W. H. Harris' world renowned circus arrived in this city last Saturday. They did not have many cages of animals but their ring performance was as good as any circus that has ever been in this country. They are now on their way to the extreme Northwest where no other circus has ever ventured.

The firm of Mitchell & Co., have got their building on the corner of Broadway and Robert Street about ready for occupancy. A fine new stock of goods will be ready for the inspection of the people of the Red River Valley about the first of next week. Mitch is a first class salesman and will, no doubt, do a fine business in this city.

The members of Col. Cobham Post No. [illegible] G. A. R. started for Minneapolis [illegible] Monday afternoon to be present at the grand reunion held in that city. [illegible] fell in line about [illegible] with the Crookston cornet band [illegible] marched through the [illegible] streets of our city and then [illegible] to take the train. [illegible] fine appearance in their suits [illegible]. They will return Friday.

Ye popular landlord, W. H. Topping, of the Commercial Hotel, fed and lodged thirty-three of ye weary traveling salesmen last Thursday night. The boys all say that "Top" is the biggest hearted landlord in the Northwest.

Jake Francis was around the street last week with a smile on his countenance a mile wide—more or less. It was all on account of a ten pound lad who has come to live with Jake until he gets old enough to vote the Republican ticket.

The man who is said to be a ticket scalper who was with Sells Bro's circus, but who since that show left has been residing in this city, boarding with John Ristow, was bailed out by some of the members of the Nickel Plate show and went with them.

I have some of the best located residence and business lots in the city that I will sell on easy terms.
H. W. LEWIS.

What's the matter with a June berry, Max?

Dr. Cable is putting up an office on Broadway.

Mr. McNaul, of the Thirteen Towns, was in the city last Friday.

Mr. Ricker, of Keystone, registered at the Linton last Saturday.

C. H. Jefferson is furnishing artificial stone for the new bank building at Warren.

Mr. Knight, formerly proprietor of the Central House, returned to the city last Friday.

Chas. Jefferson is building the foundation for the ward school building, on Spendley street.

The register at the Central House shows that a good many people were fed there during the past week.

Judge Kelso and son, of Bellvue, Iowa, arrived in this city last Thursday, and registered at the Commercial.

Mrs. Leach, of Minneapolis, arrived in this city last Wednesday evening to visit her daughter, Mrs. Chas. Seely.

The gang saws at T. B. Walker's mill got out of shape last week, and will not be able to run again for several days.

A number of our citizens who attended the Winnipeg races report a pleasant time and say that the races were good.

Mr. G. W. Peake will prolong his visit to Minneapolis, for several days, returning on Wednesday or Thursday next.

Geo. Copeland, formerly Superintendent of this division of the St. P., M. & M. Railroad, arrived in this city with his family last Saturday.

The race between the hose companies last Saturday evening was quite an interesting affair. The trumpet was taken by our regular home company.

Messrs. Wile, Roach, Fortier, McKinnon and Lilly attended the Democratic convention at Fergus Falls last Wednesday and returned Thursday evening.

Henry Nolan is raising his store building on Robert street one story higher. The building is now occupied by Mr. Jorgenson as a boot and shoe store.

M. P. Stephens, recently of Oregons has gone to St. Hilaire where he will locate permanently. He will open an office there and follow his profession, the law.

Chas. Robbecke, proprietor of the popular hotel at St. Hilaire, was in the city last Monday and reports everything in a flourishing condition and crops looking fine in that locality.

Samuel Deniud in working at the slab saw at T. B. Walker's mill, had his right arm cut to the bone just below the elbow, on Friday last. He is under the care of Dr. Gaboury and is getting along nicely.

Rev. C. E. Page is out of the city and will not return until next week, consequently there will be no service at the Congregational church next Sunday, except Sunday school, which will meet as usual at 12 o'clock m.

G. D. Fox, a well known and popular conductor on the St. P. M. & M. R. R., arrived in the city with Harris' circus last Saturday morning. We did not learn exactly what position George has with the circus, but we hear later that he leads the elephant.

Ellis & Johnson, agents for the Walter A. Wood Mowers and Reapers, have a new ad in this issue, to which your attention is called. They are live business men, and if you are in want of anything in their line you will do well to give them a call.

I. E. Baker, of this city, who is employed by Lee & Herrick at their roller mills, will start East as soon as the walking gets a little better. Mr. Baker is a very estimable gentleman, but sad to relate, he lost his speech before he came to our city, and has not been able to utter a word since he arrived here.

As we have but just returned from the National encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, a short time before the usual hour of going to press our time and space will not permit an extended review (even if our pen were able to depict it) so we can simply say that it was the grandest event Minneapolis ever witnessed and well did she entertain the old veterans and their families who had come (many of them) so far to participate. The city was lavishly decorated, almost every building being covered with flags and bunting. Thousands of people witnessed the grand parade on Wednesday, and our post and band acquitted themselves nobly. To attempt a feeble description is futile for the scene beggard description and must be witnessed to convey the slightest idea of it. After a few days spent in visiting old comrades-in-arms and forming new acquaintenances we have returned to our labors refreshed, feeling that it was indeed good to have been permitted to have seen the grandest event our young State ever saw.

Mr. Wm. McPherson and his family left Saturday evening for the Lockhart farm where he has a situation for the summer. Mr. McPherson is one of the old citizens, is well-known and highly respected for his many stirling qualities and Mr. Harbaugh secured a No. 1 man when he got Mac.

Farmers Take Notice.

No More Danger of Fire.

I have invented a smoke-stack that I will guarantee not to throw out any sparks, and that is perfectly safe to use around stacks of grain. All farmers should see it used, and may see it work by calling at D. Cameron's place Carman. There is no screen about it, still it is perfectly safe, and the draught is better than any other. I have been engaged in repairing engines and boilers in Crookston this summer.
[11-14] JOHN WALLACE.

For Sale.

One centerdraft mower, one Minneapolis twine-binder, in excellent condition.
[11-14] JOHN KNUPPE,

MINNESOTA NEWS NOTES.

MINNESOTA EDITORIAL EXCURSION.

Programme of the Meeting and Excursion for the Year 1884—A Few Days of Great Enjoyment.

This year's meeting of the Minnesota Editorial association promises to be especially pleasant, and the excursion addendum more than usually enjoyable. The meeting will be held at Mahtomedi, Tuesday, July 29, the members assembling at the St. Paul union depot at 12:25 p. m., and going thence to White Bear. After assembling in the Mahtomedi amphitheater they will be addresses by the president and others, and from 2 to 3 p. m. has been assigned to ex-Gov. C. K. Davis whose speech will be looked forward to as a sure treat. From 3:30 to 6 p. m., routine business will be transacted including reports by committees: Executive committee, ready print and advertising on incorporation, on location and purchase of summer resort, editorial badge, Minnesota newspaper statistics, history and biography, necrology, legislation, finance, membership, excursion, printing and publishing resolutions, on professional standing and ethics, discussions and election of officers, and transaction of other business. Supper will then be served, and later an excursion given on the Dispatch.

THE REGULAR TRIP.

The programme of the regular trip is as follows:

Wednesday, July 30, start via St. Paul & Duluth railroad for excursion to Lake Superior, taking in the Dalles of the St. Croix river and the Dalles of the St. Louis river. Pass the night at Duluth.

Thursday, July 31.—By one of the Buffalo through line lake steamers to Bayfield, Wis. Arrive at Bayfield at 2:30, spend the afternoon among the trout streams and in viewing the scenery.

Friday, Aug. 1.—Coast along the lake shore, visit the Apostle Islands and other points, and view the new cities of Washburn and Ashland.

Saturday, Aug. 2.—Return to St. Paul, passing Long lake, Spooner, Shell lake, Hudson and intermediate points, through the picturesque portions of Wisconsin, arrive in St. Paul in time to take the evening trains to the different parts of the state.

Only editors and publishers and their families are invited or allowed to partake of the benefits of free transportation secured.

Resolutions of Farmers.

There was a large representation of the farmers of the Red River Valley at a Convention held at Moorehead, Clay Co., Minn. Twenty-seven counties were represented. Carrington Phelps of Stevens county was elected permanent chairman; G. G. Faredale secretary; F. J. Schreiber, N. Davis, A. Garnett and H. G. Palmer, vice president.

The doings of the Convention are epitomesed in the following preamble and resolutions.

Whereas, The future greatness of our new northwest, and of our government at large, depends mainly upon the success and prosperity of the several industries of agriculture; and, whereas, great burdens have been, and are now being, borne by our constituents, through the imposition of extortionate rates for the transportation of grain, lumber, fuel, and by other usurped powers by corporations; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this convention, representing a considerable portion of the agricultural industries of the Red river valley, while asking no unreasonable or special favors, is here assembled to demand, and will continue to assemble, confederate, agitate and demand, by lawful means, such measures of relief from oppression and unreasonable burdens as may be necessary to the happiness and prosperity of our people.

Resolved, That the convention asks and demands of the Northern Pacific and the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba corporations that a reduction of five cents per bushel be immediately made on freight rates for the transportation of wheat from any and all points on the lines of said roads. In asking this reduction of rates this convention demands that which is within reason and equity as between these corporations and their patrons.

Resolved, That farmers, mechanics, and business men, whose interests are identical throughout the Red river valley, be and they are hereby urgently recommended to assemble in mass meeting at all business centers, for the purpose of considering, agitating, comanding and putting in operation such measures for relief from burdensome abuse and oppression as may be found necessary and best calculated to bring about such relief.

Resolved, That farmers, mechanics, laborers and business men of the northwest should exercise the rights and duties of American citizenship in attending the caucuses of their respective parties and select delegates to county, district and state conventions who will in turn give the people nominees for office who shall be of them and for their several industries.

Resolved, That the president and the secretary of this convention be and hereby are instructed to furnish copies of these resolutions to the corporations herein named.

In the afternoon the meeting was addressed by Prof. Whitney, of Michigan state grange, who was listened to attentively. He was followed by other speakers, and finally Hon. S. G. Comstock was sent for, a committee being appointed to ask him to come, and his position concerning the farmers movement asked for. He stated that he was in sympathy with their movement, but excepted to some of their methods. He would assist them any way in his power, even offering if desired, to make one of a committee to visit the railway officials and try to secure the proposed five cent reduction in wheat transportation. The committee on legislation brought in a report embodying the following resolution:

Resolved, That this committee recommend that a standing committee on legislation of five members be appointed by the convention with instructions to formulate legislative measures governing elevators, railroads and commissions for the transportation of freights and passengers, inspection and grading of grain, and such other matters as may be by them deemed wise and applicable to the wants of our people: and report to subsequent conventions to be held by farmers of the Red river valley.

The convention then adjourned.

Western Minnesota Press, Atwater, July 11: —A very distressing accident occurred here on the Fourth of July, whereby one of our citizens sustained injuries that will remain with him through life. Our village did not celebrate but the customary salute was fired during the forenoon. E. E. Burt was the principal one doing the firing, which was done in front of his blacksmith shop. Anvils were used, also a gun barrel was put in the ground, filled with powder and an iron plug driven in. During the progress of loading the gun it exploded, and Mr. Burt received the charge in his left eye. A piece of steel penetrated the pupil. The wound was painful in the extreme, and on the advice of Dr. Gibson Mr. Burt went to St. Paul to consult an occulist. The perilous operation of removing the steel and cutting out the eye was successfully performed by Dr. F. A. Stevens, and the sufferer greatly relieved. The right eye is also injured, but it is hoped only slightly. Mr. Burt is still below under medical treatment. The community at large will sympathize with him in his affliction—in not only losing an eye but in sustaining injuries that will prevent him from working at his trade for some time to come.

Stanbro, a Hawley, Minn., express agent for the Northern Pacific, is under arrest at Winnipeg, charged with taking $2,000.

An attempt was made to wreck the midnight passenger train on the River road Tuesday night about three miles north of Lake City. The spikes had been pulled out of a rail and the rail moved ten inches. The train came at a high rate of speed but every car passed over the dangerous spot in safety until the sleeping car was reached, the hindmost truck of which failed to follow the track across the ties that had been made by the wheels of the engine and coaches. The train was nearly at a stop then and no damage resulted farther than twenty minutes delay.

A man who registered at the Metropolitan hotel at Morris as Moritz Brunner of Casselton, was found in the room in an unconscious condition, apparently dying. A physician was called and declared the symptoms those of opium poisoning and he soon died.

Dakota Station, near Winona, was invaded by a gang of tramps who terrorized the inhabitants until officers from Winona gathered in seven of the roughs and took them to the Winona jail. Some of the tramps offered to sell silk handkerchiefs, and pen knives at about one-tenth their value, which was undoubtedly stolen property.

Robert McLellon, charged with being the father of a child, by his own daughter, a girl seventeen years old, was brought before Justice Hutchinson, at Alexandria, waived examination and was committed for trial at the fall term of court, bail being set at $1,000, in default of which he was locked up.

A circular letter has been received by the members of the Army of Tennessee, living in St. Paul and Minneapolis, from the president, Gen. W. T. Sherman. The letter contained the announcement of the reunion to be held Aug. 13 and 14 at Minnetonka, and the names of the committee as already published.

Senator Logan will attend the reunion of the Army of the Tennessee at Lake Minnetonka and several other reunions in the West.

Newell & Co., Minneapolis, have taken possession of Armsby & Co.'s canned fruit store, Chicago. This is a chapter in the Smith failure in St. Paul.

Lieut. Gov. Barto of Sauk Centre was accidentally shot at Brainerd by a ball coming no one can tell whence. It struck him in the neck and made a stinging bruise, though not entering the skin. The governor picked the bullet, a small rifle ball out of his shirt collar. He returned home Tuesday evening.

Steven Lawrence of Grand Meadow died at the age of seventy. He was one of the oldest residents of the county.

John Thul, an old and respected citizen of Shakopee, dropped dead on Tuesday, aged fifty-seven years.

Hon. George W. Walrath has sold his farm of 160 acres near Morristown Rice county, to Robert Hedges of Warsaw for $5,200.

A couple of Pennsylvania gentlemen are busily engaged in constructing a first-class sawmill on the Platte river at Royalton, Morrison county, the mill to have a capacity of 30,000 feet of lumber per day. At the same place a couple of gentlemen from Hudson, Wis., are preparing to construct a 150 barrel roller flour mill.

Mr. Hinckley, with whom Mr. Preston, of the Windsor hotel, Duluth, has had some difficulty about a board bill, which led to the former's arrest, has sued Mr. Preston for $5,800 damages.

The loss to Mr. P. O. Stevens, whose elevator burned at Detroit, was $1,750. The estimated loss on building and contents was $4,200. The insurance was adjusted at $2,400.

The St. Paul board of health is taking timely action in looking toward the prevention of the introduction of Asiatic cholera. The proposition to quarantine every immigrant arriving in the city, either by rail or river, unless he can present a proper certificate, is an admirable one and should be carried into effect and rigidly enforced.

At the shooting tournament at Winona the Plainview team, six men, won the state championship prize.

Depression in business has caused the wholesale fruit store of James M. Smith & Co., St. Paul, to close. The sheriff attached the stock for something like $10,000. There were three attachments issued; one in favor of the Capital bank for $8,850; one for Henry Swift, for $915.35, and another for $167.95, in favor of Beaupre, Keogh & Co.

Sebastian Winkler, an old settler of St. Paul, died at Stuttgart, Germany.

Mayor Gardner is waging war on keepers of houses of ill-fame in Brainerd, and a number of proprietors and inmates have been arrested and fined. Mayor Gardner says that the arrest and persecution will be continued until the business is broken up and the demi-monde driven from the city.

Sunday evening Deputy Sheriff Hans Evenson went into the jail at Waseca to lock the prisoners in their cells, when Matt Wall, awaiting trial for highway robbery, sprang upon him and struck him a heavy blow, and then Matt and one Clark, confined for larceny in a dwelling, rushed out into the jail office, which was locked. The deputy ordered them back, and Matt again struck at him, when he shot him in the shoulder with a revolver, which sent them back into the jail. The wound is painful but not dangerous. Matt is a powerful desperado, but the prompt action of the deputy prevented their escape.

Burglars are working Brainerd. Mrs. R. E. Gleason discovered a robber in her bedroom Thursday night and gave an alarm, but he got away with $100 worth of jewelry. Hon. G. G. Hartley's residence was burglarized, and Mrs. Hartley's gold watch and other articles of smaller value were taken from the sleeping apartments of Mr. and Mrs. Hartley, both of whom were asleep in the room and were not awakened.

Sheriff Rasicot of Morrison, arrived in Stillwater with Hugh McKenzie, convicted of the larceny of a pair of horses and sentenced to two years and a half in the penitentiary. McKenzie is a former resident of Stillwater.

The salaries of the teachers in Mankato schools have been fixed by the board of education for the ensuing year as follows: Primary and intermediate, first year's service, $35 per month; second year, $40; third year, $55; grammar school at Union, first year, $50 per month; second year, $55; third year, $60; grammar school, Pleasant Grove, first year, $60; second year, $65; third year, $70; Principal at Franklin, first year, $50; second year, $55; third year, $60; assistant, intermediate, grade, Union, $30 per month.

Dr. F. H. Milligan of Wabasha, late volunteer surgeon, has been granted a pension of $17 per month, commencing July 1, 1884.

A tramp went to Mr. Olson's house in Red Wing, and finding no one home but his girl, fourteen years old, tried to outrage her. Her screams brought aid, and the tramp quietly walked off unmolested.

John Hendricks' claim near Boon Lake, Renville county, which is one of those contested by the Hastings & Dakota road, has been presented to him through the efforts of Maj. Strait.

Purses reaching $3,700 are to be offered at the Southern Minnesota live stock fair at Mankato, Aug., 26, 27, and 28. All horses must be entered before noon of Aug. 20.

The state firemen's tournament takes place Aug. 27 and 28 at Faribault.

A copy of the will of Ossian E. Dodge, formerly secretary of the St. Paul chamber of commerce, who took up his residence permanently in England a number of years ago, was filed with the register of deeds in Ramsey county, whither it had been sent for filing from the principal registry of the probate, divorce and admiralty division of the high court of justice of England.

Great preparations are being made by the Catholics of the State for the silver jubilee of Bishop Grace, on Thursday, the 24th.

The salary of the Austin postmaster has been reduced from $1,700 to $1,600, on account of decrease of receipts from sale of stamps. The reduced salary began July 1.

The installation of the Rev. Henry A. Bushnell as pastor of the Congregational church in Mankato, took place Wednesday evening. The Rev. J. H. Morley of St. Paul preached the sermon. The Rev. Mr. Mason of Fairmont then gave the charge and the right hand of fellowship to the pastor. The Rev. Mr. Crum of Winona delivered the charge to the congregation.

D. E. Swan, Lately of the treasurer's Office in the Northern Pacific, at St. Paul, has been discovered to be crooked to the tune of thousands, and placed under arrest.

Gen. Albert Pike of Arkansas, and William M. Ireland, Washington, D. C., who stand at the head of Scottish Rite Masons in the United States, have issued a circular which declares the establishment of a thirty-third degree council Masons in Minneapolis as spurious, and the degrees, titles and diplomas there conferred as worthless.

Burglars broke into the Wright County Eagle office at Delano, cut a hole through the back of a Hall safe, in which were some valuable papers, but very little money. The thieves secured $15 in gold coin, a gold ring and a cross. The same night a lumber yard was set on fire, the incendiary being caught in the act by a boy, but made good his escape.

Hon. M. H. Dunnell is still confined to the house from the effects of his late poisoning.

H. P. Ernst of St. Paul was drowned in White Bear lake.

LIEUT. GREELY LIVES.

The Intrepid Polar Explorer with Six of His Men Rescued by the Bear and Thetis.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—The following telegram was received at the navy department this morning:

St. Johns, N. F., July 17, 9 a. m.—To the Hon. William E. Chandler, secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.: The Thetis, Bear and Lock-Garry arrived here to-day from West Greenland. All well. Separated from the Alert 150 miles north, during a gale. At 9 p. m., June 22, five miles off Cape Sabine, in Smith's sound, the Thetis and Bear rescued alive Lieut. A. W. Greely, Sergeant Brainard, Sergeant Fredericks, Sergeant Long, Hospital Steward Beiderbeck, Private Cornell and Sergeant Ellison, the only survivors of the Lady Franklin bay expedition. Sergeant Ellison had lost both hand and feet by frost-bite, and died July 6 at Goodhaven, three days after amputation, which had become imperative. Seventeen of the twenty-five persons composing the expedition perished by starvation at the point where found. One was drowned while sealing to procure food. Twelve bodies of the dead were rescued, and are now on board the Thetis and Bear. One Eskimo was buried at a village called Disco, in accordance with the desire of the inspector of Western Greenland. The bodies of six, with date of death, were received as follows:

Sergeant Cross, Jan. 1, 1884; Sergeant Linn, April, 6; Lieut. Lockwood, April, 9; Sergeant Jewell, April 12; Private Ellis, May 19; Sergeant Ralston, May 23. The bodies of two buried in the ice fort near the camp were swept away to sea by winds and currents before my arrival, and could not be recovered. They were: Private Henry, June 6; Private Schneider, June 18. The names of the dead buried in the ice fort, with date of death, whose bodies were not recovered, are as follows: Sergeant Salor June 3; Private William Bender, June 6; Assistant Surgeon Pavy, June 6; Sergeant Gardiner, June 12; drowned by breaking through the newly-formed ice while sealing. Jens Edwards, Eskimo, April 24.

I would urgently suggest that the bodies now on board be placed in metallic cases here for safer and better transportation in a sea-way. This appears to me imperative. Greely abandoned Fort Conger Aug. 8, 1883, and reached Baird Inlet Sept. 29 following, with the entire party well. He abandoned all his boats and was adrift thirty days on an ice floe in Smith's Sound. His permanent camp was established Oct. 21, 1883, at the point where he was found. During nine months his party had to live upon a scant allowance of food, brought from Fort Conger, that was cached at Payer Harbor and Cape Isabella by Sir George Fares in 1875, but found it to be much damaged by the lapse of time, and that cached by Beebe at Cape Sabine in 1882, and a small amount saved from the wreck of the Proteus in 1883 and landed by Lieuts. Garlington and Colwell on the beach near where Greely's party was found. When their provisions were consumed the party was forced to live upon boiled sealskins stripped from sealskin clothes, and lichens and shrimps caught in good weather when they were strong enough to make exertions. As it took 1,300 shrimps to fill a gallon measure the labor was too exhausting to depend upon them to sustain life entirely. The channel between Cape Sabine and Littleton Island did not close on account of violent gales all winter so that the 240 rations at that point could not be reached. All of Greely's records and instruments brought by him from Fort Conger are recovered and are on board. From Hare Island to Smith's Sound I had a constant and furious struggle with ice in impassable floes. Solid barriers were overcome by watchfulness and patience. No opportunity to advance a mile escaped me, and for several hundred miles the ships were forced to ram their way from lead to lead through ice varying in thickness from three to six feet, and when rafted, much thicker. The Bear reached Cape York June 18, after a passage of twenty-one days in Melville bay, with two advance ships of the Dundee whaling fleet, and continued to Cape Sabine. Returning seven days later, we fell in with seven others of this fleet off Wostenholm island, and announced Greely's rescue, that they might not be delayed from their fishing grounds nor be tempted into the dangers of Smith sound in view of the reward of $25,000 offered by congress. Returning across Melville bay we fell in with the Alert and Lockgarry, of Devil's Thumb, struggling through heavy ice. Commander Coffin did admirably to get along so far with a transport so early in the season before an opening had occurred. Lieut. Emory, with the Bear, has supported me throughout with great skillfulness and unflinching readiness in accomplishing the great duty of relieving Greely. The Greely party are very much improved since their rescue, but were critical in the extreme when found, and for several days after. Forty-eight hours' delay in reaching them would have been fatal to all now living. The season North is late and the coldest for years. Smith's sound was not open when we left Cape Sabine. The winter about Melville bay was the most severe for twenty years. This great result is entirely due to the unwearying energy of yourself and the secretary of war in fitting out this expedition for the work it has had the honor to accomplish.

[Signed] J. S. SCHLEY, Commander.

LIEUT. GREELY REPORTS.

General Hazen, chief signal officer, has received the following telegram:

St. John's, N. F., July 17.—For the first time in three centuries England yields the honor of reaching the farthest north—Lieut. Lockwood and Sergeant Brainard, May 13, reaching Lockwood Island, latitude 83 min. 24 sec., longitude 44 min. 5 sec. They saw, from a two thousand feet elevation, no land north or northwest, but to the northeast Greenland yet extended, lost to view in Cape Robert Lincoln, latitude 83 min. 35 sec., and longitude 38 min. Lieut. Lockwood was turned back in 1883 by open water on the north Greenland shore, barely escaping drifts into the Polar ocean. Dr. Pavy, in 1882, following the Markham route, was adrift one day in the Polar ocean north of Cape Joseph Henry, and escaped to land, abandoning nearly everything. In 1882 I made, in the spring and later in the summer, trips into the interior of Grinnell land, discovering Lake Hazen, some 60 by 10 miles in extent, which is fed by the ice cape of north Grinnell Land, drains Ruggles river and Weyprecht fiord into Coneybeare bay and Archer fiord. From the summit of Mount Arthur, 5,000 feet, the contour of the land west of the Conger mountains convinced one that Grinnel Land tends directly south from Lieut Aldrich's farthest point reached in 1876. In 1883 Lieut. Lockwood and Sergeant Brainard succeeded in crossing Grinnell Land, and ninety miles from Beauteaux bay, head of Archer's fiord, struck the head of a fiord from a western sea, temporarily named by Lockwood, Greely Fiord. From the center of the fiord, in latitude 80 min. 30 sec.; longitude 78 min. 30 sec., Lieut. Lockwood saw the northern shore termination, some twenty miles west, and the southern shore extending some fifty miles, with Cape Lockwood some seventy miles distant, apparently separate land from Grinnell Land. We have named the new land Arthur Land. Lieut. Lockwood following, going and returning on the ice, found that the cape averaged about one hundred and fifty feet perpendicular face. It follows that the Grinnell Land interior is ice-capped with a belt of country some sixty miles wide between the northern and southern ice capes. In March, 1884, Sergeant Long, while hunting, looked from the northwest side of Mount Carey to Hays sound, seeing on the northern coast three capes westward of the furthest seen by Nares in 1876. The sound extends some twenty miles further west than shown by the English chart, but is possibly shut in by land which showed up across the western end. The two years' station duties, observations, all explorations, and retreat to Cape Sabine, were accomplished without loss of life, disease, serious accident or even severe frost-bites. No scurvy was experienced at Conger, and but one death from it occurred last winter. [Signed] GREELY, Commanding.

Verdict in the Ward Trial.

Grand Forks, Special 16th:—The all-absorbing topic to-day, has been the verdict of "not guilty" in the Lair case. The jury were out from 5 p. m. till 11 p. m. When they went out eleven were for acquittal and one (A. Keers) for conviction. They disregarded the evidence of Turpin (who with his wife is now on his claim at Devil's Lake). They asked for instructions soon after going out. The judge re-read parts of his charge on the points inquired about. The officers consider it almost impracticable to get a jury now that will be unprejudiced, and it is said, the district attorney will move for a change of venue, and if granted the rest of the cases will probably be tried at Fargo. In conversation with one of the most intelligent young men on the jury, it was learned that the jury reasoned thus: Only Turpin swore he saw Lair shoot Charlie Ward. They threw out his testimony. They could not be satisfied that Lair did the shooting. On the subject of common purpose they found Lair did not have the same purpose, but went as a newspaper reporter in search of news, and had no intention to interfere. Hence, though the rest might be guilty under the law as laid down by the judge, they concluded they could not convict Lair. As Lair's case was the strongest it is extremely improbable that any persons charged with the murder of the Wards will be convicted.

End of the Ward Cases.

Grand Forks, Dak., Special, July 19th: The Ward murder trials have ended for the present, by dismissal, which places all the defendants, Turpin as well, just where they were before arrest, with the exception of Lair as to the murder of Charlie Ward. The prosecuting officers, in moving to dismiss, pointedly stated that it was not because the defendants or any of them, were innocent or entitled to escape, but from investigation were satisfied that they were guilty of a most heinous crime. They had presented their strongest case, and the court understood what almost insurmountable obstacles stood in the way of getting a fair jury. They had prepared papers to ask for a change of venue, but Dr. Ward and Col. Van Arman requested that this course be taken. They had done their duty. If at any future time the facts would demand an inquiry, it could be done. The judge, in ordering the prosecution dismissed, commented severely upon the necessity of taking this course, and said it was the only thing left to do, when officers and jurors failed to do their duty. The language of Col. Ball was that it was a gloomy day for North Dakota. The Grafton juror, Holbrook, is under $1,000 bond to answer the charge of perjury at the next term of court, which will be held by Oct. 18 or Nov. 1.

Cheap Living in New York.

From the Hartford Times.

A great many things are very cheap in New York. We hear much, for instance, about high rents, too. I have seen three very good rooms in a well-kept tenement house, in a good and convenient neighborhood, for $10 a month. Four rooms in a house of the same kind can be had for $15 a month. In neighborhoods not so desirable two good rooms can be had for $7 or $8. There are hundreds of cheap restaurants where a person of small means may get a meal for 20 or 25 cents, and some, (certainly not attractive, though) where he may do so for 10 or 15 cents. Housekeepers may buy groceries as cheaply in New York as anywhere in the country. Flour is always at the bottom price, and it is so with many other things needed to the kitchen. Meat and butter are high, yet I find that in some towns and villages sixty miles away, where living is supposed to be cheap, the prices are about the same.

Fuel is costly, yet not more so, on the whole, than in some of the same country places. In fact, coal is higher at many points on the railroads which bring millions of tons of coal to New York than in New York itself. Dry goods are cheaper, taking the line through, than in any other city on the continent, and the same is true of men's clothing, footwear, etc. Probably no other city has as large a percentage of very costly living as New York, but it has a great deal of very cheap living, too, which is good of its kind. Every now and then there is a discussion in some newspaper about the possibility of a small family living on $10 a week. As a matter of fact, hundreds of small families do live on $10 a week, or even less, and seems to be just as healthy as families spending five or ten times as much.

Dyspepsia.

Boston, Mar. 3, 1884.

I have used Burdock Blood Bitters for a severe case of dyspepsia with great success, and can recommend it to any person troubled with any form of dyspepsia.

JULIA BOYLEN,
6 Gilson Court, West Cedar St.

Bridgeport, Ct., Apr. 11, 1884

I have been greatly benefited by Burdock Blood Bitters. Two bottles entirely cured me of the worst kind of dyspepsia. I tried many other medicines, but entirely failed to get any relief from them.

Providence, R. I., Apr. 4, 1884.

I am using Burdock Blood Bitters for Dyspepsia and have received great relief. Have been seriously troubled with dyspepsia for five years, and heretofore have not found relief.

CHAS. R. SWEET, 65 William St.

East Boston, Mass., Feb. 11, 1884.

I have been using Burdock Blood Bitters for a bad case of dyspepsia. The first (bottle purchased at Bradbury's drug store, Washington St.) relieved me so much I procured the second bottle (at Putnam's drug store, E. Boston), which has done me a great deal of good.

Another Life Saved.

About two years ago, a prominent citizen of Chicago was told by his physicians that he must die. They said his system was so debilitated that there was nothing left to build on. He made up his mind to try a "new departure." He got some of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" and took it according to directions. He began to improve at once. He kept up the treatment for some months, and is to-day a well man. He says the "Discovery" saved his life.

PAIN!

Pain is supposed to be the lot of us poor mortals, as inevitable as death, and liable at any time to come upon us. Therefore it is important that remedial agents should be at hand to be used in an emergency, when we are made to feel the excruciating agonies of pain, or the depressing influence of disease. Such a remedial agent exists in that old Reliable Family Remedy,

SLANDER.

'Twas but a breath—
And yet the fair, good name was wilted,
And friends once fond grew cold and stilted,
And life was worse than death.

One venomed word,
That struck its coward, poisoned blow,
In craven whispers, hushed and low—
And yet the wide world heard.

'Twas but one whisper—one,
That muttered low, for very shame,
The thing the slander dare not name—
And yet its work was done.

A hint so slight,
And yet so mighty in its power,
A human soul in one short hour
Lies crushed beneath its blight!

JUST A WILFUL GIRL.

"It is really too shabby. I ought not to wear it, had I? I ought not to go."

"Dear, you look so pretty and so dainty in it, what can you say? I'm sorry, but—"

"Oh, well, if you like it; perhaps it's only that I have worn it so many times; the lace is mended in ever so many places; it's really such an old friend, Esther, that I am tired of it, and must get a new one somewhere."

"Tessey, Tessey, I can't bear to hear you talk like that, not even in jest." The pale, sweet face of the elder sister had grown paler still. There was a pained look in her soft eyes, and her breath came quick. "If you want a new dress there is some money, some silver laid away in the box there—but we can get along and you must use it."

She stopped; it seemed that the crowding tears would not let her go further. Her voice gave out.

"Esther"—and the pretty young girl took that pale and quivering face in her two slim hands—"you thought I was in earnest? You thought I could take that money? You could think so badly as that of me? No, I will never joke again. I will always be in dead earnest. I have noticed before now that I get into a great deal of trouble because of my foolish habit of joking. And now—now kiss me."

Was not that sad-faced, gentle lady, with the tears not yet vanished from her own eyes, proud to touch with a soft caress the round cheek turned so prettily toward her?

"You know your pretty way of joking makes one of my greatest pleasures," she said; "and I am a foolish old woman; but if you want the dress—"

"Willst du mir nicht einen kuss geben?" called a clear voice from the window. Both women turned; a pleasant face, blonde, with a blonde beard and pleasant blue eyes, smiling from under thick waves of curling fair hair—was peering in at them.

"O, Joseph, is this you?" two voices spoke together. This smiling apparition, Mr. Joseph Muller, held out a dewy knot of flowers; all green leaves, white buds and tiny tendrils. There exquisite fragrance filled the room.

"It is my contribution," he said, flushing behind the curtain that he pushed back with one hand. "I got them as I came along, at Floyd's."

"Ah! ah! how beautiful! How can we thank you, Joseph? O, why was I not born a flower, just a white rose like this? Then I should not have to trouble about a new dress. Now, Miss Esther Payne!"

The blue eyes of the young man had been from the first fixed on this slim, fair flower bud of a girl, who was hovering over his gift in an ecstasy of delight. The eyes flashed now with pleasure, as she took a spray of buds from the bunch and turned to her sister.

"You may put these right there, if you please—there in that bunch of curls over my forehead—so; that improves the matter."

"She has been fretting about her dress," explained Miss Payne to the young man in the window.

"Her dress? Why, what is the matter with it?" he asked, opening his eyes wide.

"It is old, and it is old-fashioned, and it is ugly," ejaculated Tessey, with emphasis.

"Why, I was just thinking how pretty it is, and I wondered if you had made it new for the occasion," remarked the stupid young man. "All that green color with the white, just like an apple and a bud; I thought you must be a flower bud yourself unfolding."

Miss Payne smiled, but Therese made a dainty face.

"The lace is mended all over; but then it's real lace—real Mechlin," she observed, bewildering her masculine admirer with grave technicalties.

Happily he only saw the face, the brown hair ruffling on the forehead, the lovely eyes that laughed at him, the low, sweet voice that patronized him.

"O Blume, weisse Blume!" he repeated rapturously.

"Please don't talk in that awkward German," cried out Tessey, pettishly. "It only makes me think of my school lessons, and I can't understand it either. How can I tell whether you are laughing at me or paying me a compliment."

The young man laughed. "O Blume!" he repeated—"O flower! I was paying you a compliment; a just tribute."

"And the other—when you first came?"

Joseph blushed and fidgeted.

"That—O, that was just nonsense, I must ask you to pardon it," he stammered.

The grave, soft eyes of Miss Payne looked at him as if she would say she had no fear he would say there to them aught that would be displeasing. She glanced at his dress and then said undoubtedly:

"Were you going to the park—were you on your way?"

Joseph shrugged his shoulders, smilingly.

"I shall go presently. But I shall wait till the brass band and speech making are over. I don't wish to be deafened and disgusted at the same time."

Both women laughed at his unmistakable look of distaste. Therese nodded at him from over her shoulder, her little white hat, with its blue bells and snow drops, making a shadow for her eyes to shine out of into his.

"O querulous musicians! I wonder that a young man who has such an ear for discord can't make better music [illegible] his own, especially when he is the owner of besides the cat, a genuine Paganini violin. There, I have got some of the Southernwood on me, and if they smell [illegible] they will think a whole village Sunday school is coming. Good bye, good bye."

The two young people went away in opposite directions and Miss Payne, left alone, sat for a long time in the little room in the lowering sunshine, silent, but not quite sad; at least her smile was stronger than her tears, and held its place on her placid mouth. For it was Tessey she was thinking of, the pretty, young, brown-haired and helplessness in a hard world only her own maiden, between whom and utter loneliness frail life and—Joseph. For Joseph loved the charming, homesweet Tessey; Esther was sure of that. But Tessey? Ah! she was the "weisse Blume," truly—the white flower about which the swan might circle, singing its plaintive song till it should die.

"I wish—Oh, I wish,"—and Esther clasped her hands together with nervous force—"I wish Tessey could love him, I could die happy, then."

The large tears rose and fell.

"Surely a girl's heart is not so hard to win—if one knows the way."

And the trouble was that Joseph did not "know the way." He was good; he was gentle and kind; he would flush and stammer when the merry little maid asked him to do something for her; then he would rush and stumble over his own feet a dozen times in the effort to obey her—and Tessey would laugh at him.

"Willst du mir nicht einen kuss geben?" "I think," said Esther to herself—"I think if Joseph would say that to her some day in earnest, and claim the kiss and take it as his right, he might win little Therese."

But just here the trouble was. Joseph was afraid. His great love for the pure young girl, the "white flower" of his song, made him a coward; but it was a noble cowardice and might go far to help him some day to high heroic deeds.

It was late when Tessey returned. Miss Payne had been sitting gloomily alone in the room where shaded lamplight and flooding moonlight, pouring through open window and door, made the place a bower of golden dust.

Tossing aside her hat and little white shawl, Tessey flung herself on the floor at her sister's feet. Esther placed a loving hand on the soft, brown, curling love locks veiling that brown head.

"Did you have a happy day, my Tessey?"

"O, yes," was the answer given with magnificent indifference.

"And—was Joseph there?"

"Josef—you mean old Josef, the bandmaster—of course he was there. How could there be a brass band without old Josef to lead it?" replied again Miss Tessey.

Miss Esther Payne touched with a finger of gentle reproof the naughty lips of the naughty speaker.

"Did you think I should inquire after such a person as that?"

"O, then you mean your friend Joseph—the one who makes quotations in German to show that he is learned. Yes, certainly he was there, but I did not see very much of him."

"But why?" And now Miss Payne's face grew grave; her voice fell. "But why, my Tessey? Surely—"

"O, I don't know." Tessey stretched up two slender white hands, clasping them indolently above her head. "You see, Esther, when he first made his appearance on the scene we had left the grounds. Most of our girls were in the big pavilion, getting our tea at the tables. And that horrid Nelly Marshmont was there and Joseph stopped at her table and stayed there a long time."

"Well, what then?" Tessey had paused in her recital, and was lying half kneeling, her soft, flushed cheek, resting on her sister's arm. She smiled a little gravely when Esther spoke.

"What then? O, nothing but this; first I supposed I should not have minded it, but I got a hateful fancy that it was only because of her dress that he lingered by her; that he was ashamed to be seen with me."

"Tessey!"

"O, I know it was mean of me; but she was beautifully dressed. She is dark, you know—dark; and she was all in dark tissue, with broad bands of gold on her arms and waist and in her hair. It was very becoming to her, and I suppose Joseph paid her compliments in German."

"Child!" and Miss Payne pinched with a smile the little pearl pink ear.

"Well, at all events, he couldn't call her his 'wesse Blume'—his white flower—could he?" quoth Miss Therese, triumphantly. She sat up and rested her chin on her arm to begin again.

"And so when at last he began to make his way across—meaning to speak to me—I was engaged to dance with Harry Wistar. I really hadn't time to waste on Joseph. They—the other Josef was playing my favorite music."

The witch stopped and began to hum one of Gounod's delicious airs.

"And I really didn't see him."

"O, Tessey! how could you do so! and Joseph is so kind." There were tears ready to break through the tremble of Esther's pained voice.

"Kind!" broke in Miss Tessey, indignantly, "I don't know what your ideas are; but I call it far from kind to snub me so. And after all, I dont think he would have minded it so much—so very much—but a slight shower came up while we were dancing, and we all rushed back to the pavilion."

Here Miss Tessey paused again. A dimpling smile stole into her round rosy cheek.

"There was a little spot of marshy ground on the path and the rain had made it worse. So when we came to that—you see I had on my light shoes—Henry threw down his coat, and nothing to do but I must walk over it. And when I looked up, just as we entered the pavilion, what an expression there was on Joseph's face! I do believe he was swearing to himself—in German."

Esther was silent, with a pained fear at her heart. What could she say? How could she chide this beautiful young creature who was so dear, so winsome, so worthy of love—of a good man's best love? How could she help and not hurt?

"Well!" exclaimed Therese, authoritatively, growing tired of the silence.

"My dear," said Esther, timidly, "don't you think with me, that Mr. Wistar's attention was a little out of place, that it was—conspicuous?"

Miss Tessey vouchsafed no reply to this.

"Don't you think, my dear, that you might have reached the pavilion safely as the others did, simply by walking on the bare ground?"

"I am tired and sleepy. I must go to bed," said Tessey, suddenly getting up. Then she glanced at Esther's face.

"Smile!" she commanded. "Do you think I am going to say good night to such eyes as those? Smile, at once!"

The sisters' look melted swiftly into tears. With loving arms twined around each others neck, the two sisters cried silently. But their good night kiss was the sweetest for those very tears.

In the quiet days that followed—perhaps because they were living near together, more in simpathy with each other—these two sisters noticed, Esther that Tessey was more than usually silent, that under her joyous laugh shone the glimmer of crowding tears; but Tessey that Esther grew more thin and wan, that her strength seemed to be consumed as by some eating fire.

One evening, Esther, in her chair drew Tessey to her. The young girl came and knelt by her side in the old familiar way, the pretty bronze brown love locks ruffling over her lap, the white arms softly upthrown.

"Dear," said the elder sister in a low voice, "you never sing to me now."

"No," answered Tessey, slowly. "It must be—I don't know why—unless—don't think of it."

"You did not wait once to think of it, Tessey, you sang because you must."

"Yes, that does make a difference, to feel the music in one. When a bird is being cooked and eaten I suppose it does not feel like singing."

"What in the world do you mean, child?"

"Mean? nothing; I never mean any thing; that is why I get into so much trouble."

The girl spoke in a mocking way, but a moment after she began more seriously:

"Do you know, Esther, I was reading this morning the old story of the knightly lover who had a beautiful bird that his lady coveted. He was very poor, but he would not sell his bird. But one fine day the princess sent a message that she was coming to dine with him, and as he had nothing in his larder fit for so dainty a lady, he bade the cook kill the bird and serve it."

Here Tessey paused a moment, for a sound of tears was in her voice. She put her hand over her eyes.

"It is such a tender story, Esther, I can't tell it as it ought to be told; but the young knight must have sat and looked at her—can't you fancy it?—while she sat at this table and ate his frugal dinner—and then—she said she would love him—be his own true princess—if he would give her his bird."

"Well," said Esther, smiling, "the princess did get the bird in one way if not in another. And I wonder if the young knight quite loved her when he saw her eating it!"

"O, you hard-hearted woman," cried Tessey. "But I thought of that, too."

Then rising with a quiet change of manner, she said: "I wonder if Joseph would contribute his beloved violin to make a fire for me if I were freezing?"

Esther began to understand.

The next day Miss Payne was not so well. She was lying on the sofa in the little parlor, when Tessey came and knelt by her and took her two hands. The girl had a strange, sad feeling, as if she were lost in a wood, with no one to show her the way out.

"I don't know what to do for you," she sobbed. "You are getting worse, Esther; what is it? Shall I send for some one? O, why does not Joseph—"

She stopped suddenly, but Esther heard, and the next day a message found its way to that young man, who answered in person.

He walked straight up to Esther's chair when he came in.

"I did not know you were ill," he said; and oh, the sense of comfort, of rest, that the invalid felt when she heard his voice—when she looked into his clear eyes. "Is it anything serious? I am so sorry."

Esther smiled gently; but he grew grave with a startled fear when he saw the change in her.

"It is not painful—only a little troublesome; and I should not mind it so much, but Tessey frets over me."

Joseph looked for the first time at Tessey, who was sitting apart by the window. She barely glanced up as he spoke, but there was a bright red flush in her cheek. And her eyes—how soft and appealing they were as they looked at him so briefly. Perhaps he had been unnecessarily harsh with her just a slip of a girl, a white flower unfolding.

Presently Tessey slipped from the room.

"Come closer, Joseph," began Miss Payne, nervously clasping and unclasping her hands; "I have but a moment, and I wished to say to you—perhaps I am meddling—I am sick and have many fancies—but, Joseph, if I were a young man, loving a shy, half frightened girl, I should say to myself—I should always say to myself this truth: 'A faint heart never won fair lady.'"

Joseph looked at her; his face turned red then white, and then he burst out into a curious, hysterical laugh.

"God bless you, Miss Payne. I believe you are the best woman in the world," he said, earnestly. He kissed her hand; how cold it was! how wan and sad and tired she looked! but—not a meddler; no.

When Joseph took his leave, as he walked along the hall he heard behind a door half open, the notes of a piano and a low voice singing—Tessey's voice. Joseph hesitated a moment, then picking up courage, repeating to himself with a queer little smile the words "faint heart never won fair lady," he pushed the door open and went in.

Tessey was there alone, playing and singing softly to herself. She jumped up when she saw who her visitor was.

"Stay," he said quickly; "I did not come to disturb you; I came to listen."

Tessey stopped and stood silent with bent face.

"Won't you sing me one song?" he pleaded.

But Tessey turned away, and began to gather up her scattered music sheets.

"I can't sing in German," she answered coldly. "My songs are all simple ones. They are only English songs, not worth listening to."

He looked at her, hesitated a moment for the last time, then took a step forward.

"Why do you treat me in this cold way, Tessey?" he burst out. "Have I offended you in any way? What have I done?"

"You? No, it is nothing, only—only—"

And then it was all over, and Tessey was sobbing her grief and joy and resentment all out together on Joseph's shoulder.

He drew her close up for a little space, and then drew her out at arm's length away from him.

"Willst du mir nicht einen kuss geben?" he said laughing, and then Tessey lifted a flower fair face and Joseph took his kiss [illegible]

"Liebchen," he whispered tenderly, and oh, the beauty of that sweet old German word as Joseph spoke it! "Liebchen, shall we tell Esther now?" Then he looked at her more closely.

"And you have got on the beloved white dress. You must always wear it, O weisse Blume."

Tessey laughed. "Come to Esther now," she said.

But alas! Esther was asleep.

Asleep and her darling was safe.—Overland Monthly.

THE MAN WITHOUT A FACE.

A French Soldier With a Remarkable Wound.

There is to be seen at Landrecies, in the department of the north, says the London Globe, an invalid artillery soldier who was wounded in the late Franco-German war, when he was horribly mutilated by the bursting of a Prussian shell. The man's face was literally blown off, including both eyes, there being left behind some scanty remnants of the osseous and muscular systems. The skull, which is well covered with hair, was left intact, so that the man had a most hideous and ghastly appearance. This disfigurement has been completely concealed by a mask, which was made for him under the direction of principal medical officer of Val de Grace, in Paris, whither he had been transferred from the field ambulance. The mask was constructed by a surgeon dentist named Delalain. It includes a false palate and a complete set of false teeth; and it is so perfect that the functions of respiration and mastication, which were necessarily and imperfectly performed, are almost completely restored to their normal condition, and the voice, which was rather husky, has resumed its natural tone. The man speaks distinctly, the sense of smell, which had entirely disappeared, has returned, and he can even play the flute. He wears two false eyes, simply to fill up the cavities of the orbits, for the parts representing the eyes in the mask are closed. In fact, the mask is so well adapted to what remains of the real face as to be considered one of the finest specimens of the prothetic art that could be devised.

The man himself, whose name is Moreau, and who is in perfect health, is looked upon as a living curiosity, and travellers go a good deal out of their way to see him. His face, or rather his mask, is, of course, without any expression, but his special senses, particularly that of touch, are extremely developed, and he goes by the soubriquet of "L'Homme a la Tete de Cire." He wears the military cross of honor, and delights to talk about what he has gone through during the war. To add to his meagre pension, he sells a pamphlet containing a full description of his wounds and of the apparatus that has been so skillfully devised as to render him at least presentable to his fellow-creatures.

Exposure of Mind Reading.

The Subject of Mind-reading is attracting considerable attention in London, and Mr. Labouchere, the editor of London Truth, has been publicly exposing the tricks of the readers and bitterly denouncing the imposition in his journal. So savagely has he attacked Irving Bishop, a noted performer, that he was sued last week for libel and the damages are laid at a large amount. The following is the interview Mr. Labouchere had with Stuart Cumberland, a rival performer, which led to the suit:

Mr. Stuart Cumberland called upon me one day last week to explain to me how he succeeds in finding pins in other such "manifestations." If a person will concentrate his thoughts upon an object, and if any one—whose perceptive faculties are properly trained—takes his hand, the operator will be, Mr. Cumberland explained, inevitably drawn to the spot where the object is. "Thought-reading, then, I said, "is muscle reading." "To a certain extent," he replied, "but not absolutely. You have to watch for other indications; for instance, if I find myself close to the article thought of, the hand of some subjects gets hot, in others the pulse quickens. You must watch these indications as well as the muscles." "But, surely you must have had a confederate when you tied yourself to a man by a string, and found an object concealed by him." "No," he said: "I could feel the string dragging one way, and I followed the indication. When I came near the object the string trembled. This is the simple explanation of the mystery." "And do you mean to say that you can take hold of a person's hand with one of your hands, and with the other write a series of numbers that he is to think of?" "Certainly not," he replied; "the person's hand must grasp the hand with which I write; my hand remains almost passive, and he without knowing it, himself writes the numbers." "Well," I said, "I will think of something in this room, and we will see if you can discover it." I thought of a little card case that was lying on the table. Mr. Cumberland blind-folded himself. "Why do you do that?" I said. "That my own thoughts should not be diverted from what I am doing." He took my hand; in a minute or two he approached the table, hovered over the various articles upon it, and finally placed my hand upon the card case. I had thought all the while of this article and I could feel my hand involuntarily drawing him towards it. It would take a person a long time to acquire Mr. Cumberland's powers of preception; but any one can realize how the trick—if I may call it so—is done, by thinking of some object on a table, and getting a friend to grasp his hand and try to discover it. He has only to concentrate his thoughts upon the object and the exact place where it is, in order to find that his hand resists whenever it is sought to divert it from the direction towards the object which it, apparently of itself, strives to approach. In fact, the thought acts upon the muscles much in the same way as the desire to grasp something causes the hand to grasp it. In both cases the muscles involuntarily obey the brain. "And how did Irving Bishop read the number of a bank note that was enclosed in an envelope without contact with the only person who knew it?" I asked. "To do so by what he terms 'thought reading,'" Mr. Cumberland answered, "is absolutely impossible. Without contact you can obtain no indication of what is passing in the brain of another person, as you may perceive yourself if you have understood my explanation." "Then the thing was a swindle," I said. Mr. Cumberland smiled. "And the mental picture which he professes to see?" Mr. Cumberland smiled again.

THE CHOLERA.

Former Visitations of the Dreaded Scourge of Humanity.

Cholera has been known to exist in India for centuries. Contrary, however, to the generally accepted theory, which received added weight from the conclusions of the international cholera conference of 1866, the place of its origin does not appear to have been the Ganges Valley—whence it spread in 1817—but Goa, on the west coast of the peninsula, where its ravages were observed and noted in 1589 by a Hollander named Linschot, by Mandelsloe in 1638, and in 1676 by one Dellon, who was so unfortunate as to incur the hostility of the holy inquisition, and whose observations were made during his imprisonment by that most sacred and charitable institution of Mother Church. It is a fact, though, that the outbreak of 1817 exceeded in severity and the extent of its expansion all that had preceded it. It was, moreover, the first to reach Europe, and therefore it shall be the first of which we treat. During August, 1817, the cholera, known to the Mahrattas as Mordeshin, and to the Mohammedans of India as haiza, raged at Jessore, a place on the upper part of the Ganges delta, about sixty miles from Calcutta. From thence it passed from district to district, now slowly and now fast, but never jumping over any place along its route, until in September, 1818, it reached Bombay. Madras was visited in October, and by January, 1819, it invaded Ceylon. Here we leave it to trace its westward march, merely observing that it spread far to the east, overrunning farther India and China. Its course northwest was by way of Persia, whence it proceeded along the great routes of travel until it reached the Caspian sea and Armenia. In 1882 the disease was established in the coast towns of Syria and Turkey, which seem to have been reached from Armenia and by way of Arabia, to which peninsula it was conveyed from Bombay in 1821. Naturally the people of Europe expected the invasion from this quarter, but it was not made, and it was not until July, 1830, that the most motherly district infested, that along the borders of the Caspian, transmitted the dreaded scourge to European Russia. From thence its spread was a mere matter of time, and for eight years—that is—until 1898—it was continually present in one country or the other of Europe. In the meantime it crossed the ocean and spread over the western hemisphere. Nine years after the cholera disappeared from Europe it again visited the continent—in 1847—and again came to this country, where it was very severe. It was not entirely got rid of in Europe until 1859.

The year 1865 witnessed an invasion from a new quarter, the disease this time entering Europe from the Mediterranean ports, after having devastated Egypt, where 61,192 persons fell victims to it. It was very severe in Europe, 4,000 inhabitants of Paris being carried off by it in October, 1865. In 1866 England, Holland, Prussia, Hungary and Austria suffered severely. In November of 1865 it was brought to New York by the immigrant ship Atlanta, but did not spread beyond the immigrants' hospital on Ward's Island. The following April witnessed its arrival at the same port on board the ships Virginia and England, of whose passengers 281 had died on the voyage. The next two months saw a few isolated cases in the city itself, and thenceforward it spread rapidly, taking off 1195 persons up to October 13, on which date the last case occurred. In Brooklyn between 700 and 800 persons died, at St. Louis 3532, Philadelphia 834, Cincinnati 1200, Chicago 978, Savannah 231, New Orleans 132, &c,—altogether, 10,805 deaths from this cause were reported during the year. In October, 1867, it reappeared, this time on board the United States ship Potomac, at Philadelphia, but was confined to the vessel. At New York the plague was reimported in immigrant ships, the Lord Brougham arriving on December 1 from Hamburg with twenty sick on board, after having buried seventy-five at sea, and the Leibnitz on January 11, from the same port, with thirty-five sick and a list of 105 who had died on the passage. Here, as at Philadelphia, the disease was kept on board ship. But the South was not so fortunate. Pensacola, Mobile and New Orleans were all visited by the plague, which extended up the Mississippi and its southern tributaries, many deaths occurring in the Indian Territory. At the riverside town of St. Louis it was stoutly denied that cholera existed there, but the records of that place show fearful mortality from cholera morbus.

We are now brought down to the present plague, which, like its predecessor, has entered Europe from the Mediterranean. We may now turn to matters unconnected with the direct progress of past epidemics, but before doing so it is as well to emphasize the fact that experience has shown there is nothing unusual in the manner in which the disease has made its appearance in France. Nothing is more common in the progress of this mysterious plague, than for a time to elapse after it has disappeared from one spot before it moves on to another. A few words may now be said of Chicago's experiences. In May, 1849, the first case occurred here, and was fatal, a Captain Jackson being the victim. By August 1 it had reached its height, thirty persons dying on that day. Among the victims of this epidemic was the Rev. W. H. Rice, of the Tabernacle Baptist church, who was taken ill when returning from the bedside of a patient and died the next day. In the fall of 1849 the plague disappeared to return again in 1851, 1852 and 1853. In the first of these years it carried off 216 persons, in the next 630, and in the last 118. A few cases occurred in April of 1854, and on June 29 an immigrant train of Norwegians that arrived here with six dead on board, and a seventh who died on being removed from the car, spread the contagion in earnest. As many as 1424 died from cholera that year, 247 deaths during the first week of July, causing such alarm that large numbers of people sought refuge at Milwaukee. In 1855 the number of deaths recorded here as due to cholera was 147.

In conclusion, a word or two may be added with reference to the cause of cholera, which the German commission headed by Dr. Koch and lately at work in Egypt and India has established is due to a bacillus resembling others previously known. This is not exactly a new discovery, a theory somewhat like it having been propounded so long ago as 1831 by a leading physician of Berlin, Dr. Becker. It is now, however, accepted as conclusive, whereas heretofore it has rested on little more than conjecture.—Chicago News.

LITERATURE OF THE FACE

Forney's Progress.

Observe how, when the shrewd palmist is reading the lines of a hand he scans the face with almost equal interest. These learned people know how the soul dwells in the eye; and the ability to understand its language is inborn with most folks without having to study it, though extremely sensitive persons have told me that more power of discrimination rested in their hands than they could read from every feature of the face, the fingers being so full of vision that they could feel a color without seeing it; so full of nerves that an impression was instantaneous and could be relied upon; so full of life that when their possessor was in love they tingled with affectionate intoxication.

It is said that very quiet eyes that impress and embarrass one with their repose signify self-command, but also much complacency and some conceit. Restless eyes that cannot look one steadily in the face denote a deceitful, designing mind. Eyes in which the white has a yellowish tinge and is streaked with reddish veins, prove much of strong passions, and hasty tempers. Very blue eyes bespeak a mind inclined to coquetry; grey eyes signify dignity, intelligence, and excellent reasoning faculties; greenish eyes, falsehood and a fondness for scandal. A malicious mind is often indicated by greenish eyes. Black eyes show a passionate, lively temperament, and oftentimes a most deceitful disposition; brown eyes are generally tender and true indicating a kind and happy disposition.

Of the nose. A Roman nose denotes an eterprising, business-like character; a long nose is a sign of good sense; a perfectly straight nose indicates a pure and noble soul, unless the eye contradicts it; a nez retrousse signifies a spirit of mischief, wit and dash; a large nose generally indicates large mind and good heart; a very small nose good nature, but lack of energy.

Thick lips generally mean either great genius or great stupidity; very thin lips, cruelty, avariciousness, falsehood. Dimples on the cheek are known as the abodes of roguery, and in the chin, of Cupid and his pranks.

A lean face speaks more of intelligence than a fat face, generally speaking, and they do say, beware of a full, round and greasy face—it means treachery.

Irascibility is accompanied by an erect posture, open nostrils, moist temples; displaying superficial veins which stand out and throb under the least excitement, large, unequal, ill-arranged eyes, and equal use of both hands.

A genius may be expected from medium stature, blue-gray or brown eyes, prominent and large forehead, with temples a little hollow; under lip slightly retiring, a fixed, attentive look, and habitual inclination of the head either backward or forward.

SIEGE GUNS.

Practice by Cadets at the West Point Military Academy.

The artillery practice at West Point during the recent commencement exercises not only attracted much notice but was clearly observed to be a drill in which the spirit of rivalry among the gray-coat gunners excelled that of any other practice. It was also a drill that old army officers delighted to look at, and no spectator was more interested than Gen. W. S. Rosecrans, the president of the board of visitors. He arrived early at each artillery drill and departed only when it was fully completed, and when the cadet gunners showed their proficiency in marksmanship by piercing the target, and especially when they drove a projectile through the bull's-eye, "Old Rosey" enthusiastically clapped his hands in approval of the shot. On the 3d inst., the authorities of the post gave a special exhibition of the siege battery practice in honor of the board of visitors. The regular spring practice at the academy takes place in the month of April, from the 1st to the 30th inclusive. The pieces used in the siege battery drill were thirty-pound Parrot rifles, manufactured at the Cold spring foundry, being of the same pattern as those used during the war of the rebellion for siege work. The projectiles were of the Butler pattern, the very best used in the service. The target was set in the bank on the south side of Target hill, which is a mountain of sand, and located under Crow Nest, and between the West Shore railroad and the Hudson river.

The target measured 16x16 feet, and was made of inch plank divided into squares by horizontal and vertical lines. These squares are marked upon the target to facilitate the keeping of each gunner's score. During the firing an officer is stationed in a convenient spot with a telescope pointed directly on the target, and as a shot enters it, and before the huge cloud of smoke obscures the vision, it is recorded on the diagram representing the target which the officer has before him. Each gunner has a target of his own, and the diagram as given is made up from those as taken from the telescopic record. As soon as a shot strikes the target the gunner who made it is shown his individual target with the position of his last shot only marked on it. This is done for his guidance for the next shot. He is not allowed to look at the targets of the other gunners so as to profit if possible thereby. The pieces are pointed directly on the bull's-eye of the target each time, and all allowances for drift or other deviations are made by the rear sight or wind gauge. At three-quarters of a mile distant the boys can hit the target nearly every time.—N. Y. Herald.

How the Pinkerton Agency Begun.

He remained in Chicago but a short time, and journeyed to Dundee, in Kan[illegible] county, about 38 miles northwest of Chicago, where he began business for himself. He prospered rapidly and his establishment increased to such a degree that he resolved to settle permanently in the beautiful locality; but circumstances interfered and opened up to him the possibilities of a new career which by nature and inclination he was so well qualified to adorn. Mr. Pinkerton will be pleasantly remembered by many of the old residents of Dundee now living. While employed in his business as a cooper he had frequent occasions to visit some of the islands of Fox river to procure material for his stock, and while on one of these he discovered the existence of a gang of counterfeiters, who made the Island their retreat and there established their headquarters. Having a natural love for adventure and being a stranger to fear he determined to investigate the entire operations of these counterfeiters, which he eventually succeeded in doing—effectually breaking up the existence of the gang and securing the arrest and conviction of John Craig, the leader and prime mover, together with the most prominent and dangerous of his associates.

This exploit gained for the young cooper considerable renown, and shortly afterward he was appointed deputy sheriff of Kana county, the duties of which position he filled in such an efficient manner that numerous bands of horse thieves and counterfeiters were either captured and punished or forced to leave the country, while wrong-doers generally were inspired with a wholesome fear of his vigilance and relentless pursuit. The reputation which he gained in this capacity soon spread to Chicago and attracted the notice of William L. Church, who was then sheriff of Cook county. This gentleman immediately offered Mr. Pinkerton the appointment of deputy sheriff, with increased powers of usefulness and added remuneration, and he at once accepted. He continued in this position during the term of Mr. Church, and also under his successor in office, Sheriff C. F. Bradley.

When Mr. Boone was elected mayor of Chicago he appointed Allen Pinkerton as a detective of the city force. This was the first appointment of a detective in Chicago, and was the initial step in the career of this greatest detective of the age.

In the year 1852 Mr. Pinkerton became impressed with the importance of establishing a detective agency which would be independent of political influence, and by whose efforts the criminal could be punished without fear of personal favor. He accordingly associated with him Mr. Edward L. Rucker, an attorney at law, and securing the patronage of several railroad companies, then in their infancy, they started the "Pinkerton detective agency," the first institution of its kind in the United States. Mr. Rucker continued with him only about a year, when Mr. Pinkerton undertook the entire management of the constantly increasing business. When the agency was first established it employed some four or five men, among the most prominent being George H. Bangs, afterward general superintendent, and who remained with Mr. Pinkerton until his death, which occurred last year, and Timothy Webster, who, while in his employ, was taken as a union spy and executed at Richmond, Va., during the war of the Rebellion. From that small beginning the detective force under Mr. Pinkerton's orders increased steadily, until it now numbers nearly 300 men.

Few Rich Men in California.

The majority of people in this state, says the San Francisco Bulletin, are not rich. These was a time when the glamor of wealth seemed to be over all the state. There are not so many rich people in California to-day in proportion to the population as there are in each one of the older states of the union. There is less warrant for costly living or for domestic expenditures on the scale of prospective fortunes. Looking to the future, one might inquire what are the prospective sources of wealth? There are no more great fortunes to be made in railway construction, few or no great fortunes to be made in mining ventures, the stock boards are no longer prominent. Only the slow process of wealth are left—agriculture, manufactures, and industrial pursuits generally, which are most fitting for a people who are not wealthy, but who have not yet quite forgotten the lives of their fathers and mothers—the domestic economy by means of which large families were well brought up, educated, and sent out into the world to make their own way successfully.

The Orange Tree.

From the Sacramento Bee.

The orange tree is the longest-lived fruit tree known. It is reputed to have attained the age of 300 years, and it has been known to have flourished and borne fruit for more than 100 years. No fruit tree will grow and produce fruit so well under rough treatment. It commences to bear the third or fourth year after budding, and by the fifth year it will produce an abundant crop, but its yield will increase gradually under favorable circumstances, and as the years pass on it will become a very productive tree. The early growth of the orange is quite rapid, and by the tenth year it will have increased more than in the next fifty years, so far as its breadth and height are concerned; but its age multiplies its fruit stems greatly, and an old tree will sometimes bear a great many thousand oranges.

Had to Draw the Line Somewhere.

Summer hotel-keeper—"But if you are satisfied with the place, why don't you come, my dear madam? I will hold that room for you a week."

Applicant—"I am afraid you would not like to receive the whole family."

Hotel-keeper—"Well, of course, that depends."

Applicant—"The fact is, I have three pet dogs, a parrot, two cats and a mocking-bird."

Hotel-keeper—"They shall all be welcome."

Applicant—"Oh! thank you, thank you. Then you don't object to dogs and other animals?"

Hotel-keeper—"No, indeed, madam. We draw the line at children."

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Washington News.

The completion of the Washington monument by Feb. 22 will probably be prevented by the inability of the contractors to supply the necessary dressed stone for the pyramidal cap in time.

The new vaults in the treasury at Washington for the storage of silver dollars are nearly completed and will hold 45,000,000 of the standards. Since it became known that the issue of $1 and $2 bills, which was discontinued last January, has been resumed the call for standard dollars has largely fallen off.

The secretary of the interior has called for the resignation of Col. Conger, superintendent of the Yellowstone Park, and will appoint a Mr. Carpenter, a brother of ex-Gov. C. C. Carpenter of Iowa, in his place. Col. Conger is not a brother of the senator from Michigan, as has been stated, and is not related to him in any way. He is also from Iowa, and senators of that state concur with the secretary of the interior in the belief that a change is necessary.

The session of the cabinet was devoted mainly to considering the best method of preventing the introduction of cholera into the United States. The secretary of state recently received a cable from Consul General Walker, at Paris, acknowledging the receipt of a sanitary telegram, saying it had been sent to Havre, Bordeaux and Marseilles. He further says it will be strictly observed; that there is no cholera in Paris yet, and the city is unusually healthy.

Commander Schley has received instructions from the secretary of the navy to remain at St. John's until there are twelve iron caskets constructed to receive the bodies of the deceased explorers. The survivors are all doing well, but still weak and suffering from nervous prostration. Lieut. Greely has gained from 120 pounds weight, 22d of June, to 169 pounds Friday the 18th. Sergeant Brainerd and others are pulling up proportionately.

Brackett, attorney for the St. Paul & Duluth Railroad company, has filed with the secretary of the interior, a protest against the confirmation of a large number of additional soldiers' homestead entries made on lands formerly embraced in the Mille Lacs Indian reservation in Minnesota. The company claims these lands by virtue of the fact that they have been declared to be public lands prior to the date that the right of the company's grant attached to lands within their thirty mile limit.

The last appropriation bill provided two new places at $1,400 per year, and Postmaster General Gresham at once filled them by the promotion of Miss Clara M. Ritcher and Mrs. P. L. Collins. Miss Ritcher is to have charge of foreign dead letters. She is a very talented lady, and can read and write seven different languages. Mrs. Collins is very expert in deciphering illegible addresses, and is to have charge of this class of business in the dead letter office.

As stated, the secretary of the interior has called for the resignation of Col. Conger, superintendent of the Yellowstone Park, and will appoint a Mr. Carpenter, a brother of ex-Gov. C. C. Carpenter of Iowa, in his place. Col. Conger is not a brother of the senator from Michigan, and is not related to him in any way. He is also from Iowa, and the senators of that state concur with the secretary of the interior in the belief that a change is necessary. There have been a great many complaints against Superintendent Conger by tourists and military officials, and a special agent who was sent to the park to investigate them reported in favor of his removal.

Rail and River News.

The report that the Canadian Pacific would remove their offices from the transfer at St Vincent to Emerson is correct. The Manitoba about a year ago erected buildings at the transfer and allowed the Canadian Pacific to occupy a portion, in order to facilitate the transfer of freight. The action of the latter road in determining to remove to Emerson will put the Manitoba to more expense and trouble. General Manager Manvel stated recently that the Manitoba intended delivering all business to the point desired by shippers at whatever part of the road. The change to Emerson will entail additional expense, but that will have to be borne.

The stores of Stein & Fisher, suit manufacturers, B. Gardner, elastics, and Welles, Goldsmith & Plant, ladies' cloaks, in New York, were burned. Loss $36,000.

In Toronto the stables of Thomas Hall, Parliament street, were burned. The roof fell in and buried several firemen. Thomas Gilbert was killed and others seriously wounded.

A fire at Billings, Mont., burned some of the principal business houses, as follows: J. H. Fenske, Babcock & Miles, Pendleton, S. S. Erwin, Rockwell & Terry, John Hanson, N. G. Mains, E. C. Culver, W. J. Allison, McKee Bros; J. Ryan, J, Zimmerman, J. Sprague. Total loss on buildings $34,000.

A man named George Wicks, with his wife and daughter aged five residing in Dunkirk, N. Y., started to go from Erie to his home in a skiff on the 19th inst. Since that time nothing has been heard from them. A heavy sea had been running, and it is thought all three were drowned. Wicks was in good circumstances, and prominent in political circles. The Chautauqua county shores of Lake Erie are being searched for traces of the missing people.

There is another failure in the New York dry goods trade, that of Edmund Yard, Jr., & Co., lace importers. Liabilities of about $1,000,000 and preferences of $500,000. The failure at this time is said to be precipitated by the hesitation of the banks in extending them legitimate accommodation; but it is mainly due to a speedy decline in prices and a depression in the market which prevented their disposing of their goods.

Official and scientific comment upon the Greely expedition deals mainly with the necessity and responsibility of the calamity marred it, and the value of its technical results. Nobody doubts that, with proper direction and management, the lives of the whole expedition might have been saved, though critics differ as to the particular measures of relief which should have been taken. As to the scientific results, observers all agree as to their value. Lieut. Lockwood, with a sledding party, achieved the most northerly point yet reached, and the observations of other members of the party extend geographical knowledge of the polar regions considerably. The experience of the sledding parties adds still more definite evidence than was in existance before, of the fact of an open polar sea northwest of Greenland.

In the Grant & Ward suit in New York ex-Senator Chaffee testified that in April, 1883, he loaned the firm of Grant & Ward $100,000 United States Government bonds. In October he loaned them $1,200,000. He also loaned them $125,000 West Virginia Central & Pittsburg railroad bonds. The governments were worth 23 to 25 per cent. premium. There was market value for the other bonds, but they sold at par and interest up to 6 per cent. at the time of the loan. The bonds were in the box U. S. Grant, Jr. He had left them there for safe keeping. U. S. Grant, Jr., had asked him to loan them to the firm, as they had not as much money as they required. Ward, he thought, had afterward told him the money obtained on the bonds was loaned to men who had large railroad contracts and would pay a handsome profit. He was to receive half the profits made by the firm from the use of his money. Altogether he had drawn about $840,000 as his share of profits. Chaffee said he had no written evidence of the transaction, so far as loans were concerned.

THE REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN.

New York Special:—Cleveland belongs to those namby-pamby democrats, called by some the "silk stockings," said Deputy Register McLaughlin, "and I regard him as a trimmer. Now, no true democrat likes a man of this character—pretending to belong to the democratic party, yet catering for the votes of the other party. It was that which killed Horace Greeley politically, and will kill Cleveland. Who are his supporters? The so-called Independent republicans—the trimmers of that party. The democrats, therefore, cannot consistently support such a man as thus."

The political sensation in Boston is the unearthing of fine, eloquent extracts of speeches by the Rev. James Freeman Clarke and E. Rockwood Hoar, made to a Fanuel hall ratification meeting in 1876, extolling Mr. Blaine and his conduct at the convention which nominated R. B. Hayes. As Dr. Clarke has recently been leading the bolt against Mr. Blaine and speaking of his following at least with unmeasured terms of disrespect, his warm and apparently very sincere eulogy of the Maine statesman is a sickening surprise for the young bolters.

The national Democratic convention, although not nominating the old ticket, have made a close approximation to it. It has the old tail—Hendricks. Gov. Cleveland is a nephew of ex-United States Senator Grover of Oregon, who was the Governor who certified that "Cronin's nose" was a Tilden elector in 1876—the only attempted steal in the campaign—and which proved unsuccessful, notwithstanding the advocacy of Hoadly. Hence the head of the ticket has at least a nasal relation to the Sage of Greystone.

The Unconditional club, of Albany, the oldest republican campaign club, in New York, which came into existence in the Grant canvass of 1868, met Friday, and organized amid great enthusiasm for Blaine and Logan. Nearly two hundred members were present, and by the end of this week the club will probably reach three hundred. It is composed of the most prominent and influential young republicans in the city. Several young Irish democrats joined.

New York, Special.—It is pretty safe to say that Cleveland will have very few Irish votes in this city or in the State. At a meeting of representative Irishmen, held in Clarendon hall there was a positive declaration of opposition to Cleveland. Speeches were made by Gen. Kirwan, formerly editor of the Montreal Post, Richard Murphy, Edward O'Meara Condon, Col. O'Flynn and others in favor of Blaine, and a resolution to endorse Blaine was carried by a two-thirds majority. It was also resolved that the committee on organization should attend the Blaine mass meeting at the Grand Opera house on Tuesday evening next. The Blaine boom has been fairly started in Irish-American circles, and there is no predicting where it will end.

St. Louis Special.—The Westliche Post, Carl Schurz' papers, after bolting the nomination of Blaine and Logan, came recently with the announcement that it would support the Republican ticket. That cause of this action lies in the fact that the Westliche Post's subscribers fell away by thousands, and the paper was nearly wrecked. It said:

The more we tried to familiarize ourselves with the idea of a Democrat at the head of our national administration the less were we able to reconcile ourselves to it. The longer this was agitated upon so much the more vivid became the reminiscences of the past, and to-day we do not find that we are justified in making any guarantee that a Democrat, be his name Grover Cleveland, even, would present an uncompromising front under all circumstances, to the medacing onslaught of the Southern brigadiers. We have criticised the Republican ticket thus far freely, but admit now with equal freedom that we have erred. We expected of the other party what the Republican party can best perform. Republicins can do no better than to remain true to their ticket.

A reporter who came through to New York on the train with John Kelly, and who talked with him on the situation, says John Kelly, while refusing to be interviewed, did not hesitate to say that he was very sorry this nomination has been made.

It is in my judgement most unfortunate. It means defeat. I am sorry that the party has acted so blindly. I do not believe it is possible for Cleveland to carry New York. As to what Tammany will do, I cannot answer now. The next meeting of the general organization will not be held until the first week in September. By that time the reports of the subcommittees and district committees will be in and we shall know just what the sentiment is. If Tammany voters do not want Cleveland, it is not likely they will do anything for him. I had an interview with Gen. Butler just before leaving Chicago, and he told me the ticket would be defeated in Massachusetts by at least 25,000 majority. Mr. Cummings, who was present when I was talking with Gen. Butler, said that the Worcester district would be lost.

New York Special.—Ex-Senator Windom of Minnesota, who is at the Fifth Avenue hotel, has just returned with his family from an extended visit to Europe. When asked about politics by a reporter, Mr Windom said: I am for Mr. Blaine, of course. Everybody knows that; and I am confident that he will be elected. I shall put myself in the hands of the national committee, shortly, and expect to do what campaigning I can to aid in that result. You can hardly expect me to talk upon politics in general, since I have been out of the country so long, and am generally fourteen days behind the news, of which I endeavored to keep the run through the newspapers. After the Democratic nominations are made and the issues joined we shall know better what can be said. I think Cleveland would be a weak candidate for the Democrats, and that Butler would be strong. I spent a day in Massachusetts since my return, and from what I saw and heard there I am confident Mr. Blaine will carry that state against any Democrat.

Rev. Dr. Edward Everett Hale, having been invited by the New York Independents to join the anti-Blaine bolt, replied: "It now seems possible for the solid southern oligarchy, by a combination with the voters of the worst wards in the city of New York, to regain the power they lost in 1861. Many gentlemen whom I highly respect ask me and others who have voted with the republican party to assist this combination. You ask me to. I do not think I shall—very much."

GEN. LOGAN'S DEFAMERS.

In the Senate Logan Replies at Much Length to the Charges as to Zuni Lands.

Washington, July 5.—Shortly after the senate was called to order, Mr. Logan rose and said: "Mr. President, I deem it due to my friends that I call attention to a certain statement I find copied in the public press as well as in the Congressional Record of the 27th of June. I am set down in the list of what are termed landgrabbers, as having in some mysterious way accumulated the vast amount of 80,000 acres of land. This statement is utterly without foundation in fact. The New York Herald of the 29th adds 30,000 head of cattle. I wish this were true, but there is no foundation for the statement. I would take no notice of the statement were it not for the charge that follows. The person who made this statement, after finding it was untrue, instead of doing justice to me, against whom he might, by his erroneous statenents, have done an injury, proceeded to put another false statement on record, as follows:

I might have said to the deluded soldiers of this land: 'What do you think of the great senator who, in his greed to absorb the country which belongs to the actual settler, in the land that was made for independent freeholders and small farmers; what do you think of the man who poses as a statesman and patriot, as the friend par excellence of the soldier, and who, under cover of his brother-in-law, went into New Mexico and tried to pre-empt most of the valuable land lying along her streams, and was only stopped by a public officer finding it out?' It belonged to the class which he professes the utmost friendship for, and who, from his manner and appearance, rumor says, has their blood in his veins—tried to steal from his own kith and kin hundreds of thousands of acres of land. [Great laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Taking from the unfortunate savage, who was unable to protect himself, until the honest secretary of the interior went there with a surveyor and took back the land for the Zunis. [Renewed laughter and applause.]

CALLS IT MALICIOUSLY FALSE.

Now, Mr. President, this statement is, so far as I am concerned, or any one else of whom I [illegible] what are the facts out of which this attack has been made? Capt. Lawton, Maj. Tucker and Mr. Stout located claims at Neutria Springs and lands adjacent in New Mexico, not, however, until after ascertaining from the general land office that the land was subject to location, being outside the Indian reservation, being some five miles from the Indian line and some twenty-five or thirty miles from the town of Zuni. So it will be seen the hundreds of thousands of acres of land that this man says I was stealing from the Indians resolves itself into three homesteads or desert act claims, located by two army officers and one citizen on the public land open to such entry, with which location, however, I had nothing to do. In order to prove the statement he had made, he read a number of letters. The first was a letter from the commissioner of the general land office, showing the land in question was subject to a location and entry as public land at the time, and if not the location would have been subject to cancellation. The next letter was from Maj. Tucker to Secretary Teller, giving facts in connection with the location of the lands mentioned by him and his associates, and protesting against any change by resurvey of the Zuni reservation. He says: "The charges against Senator Logan in connection with these lands are untrue."

EXHAUSTIVELY REFUTED.

The next letter from Capt. Lawton to Gen. Logan, refutes at great length the charges against the latter, and says:

There is not, nor has there been, any company or organization for the purpose of buying or owning land, raising stock or starting a ranch on the Neutria, in which you or any other person is or was interested. My entry of land on the Neutria was made in good faith for myself, and no other person has any interest in my location. Any and all statements that there has been a combination either to secure land or start a ranch for your benefit, or for the benefit of any other person other than these appearing on the record of the land office, is untrue.

James Stevenson of the United States geological survey bears the following testimony in the letter to Senator Logan:

Having had my attention called to statements in the Congressional Record of a recent date, indirectly charging you with fraudulently attempting to deprive the Zuni Indians of New Mexico of their lands, I beg leave to say that I am familiar with the facts and circumstances from a thorough investigation of the subject, made at the request of the corresponding secretary of the interior, and take pleasure in stating that the allegations thus made, are grossly unjust to you as well as Maj. Tucker and his associates and wholly without foundation.

The last letter of the series is from Secretary Teller to Gen. Logan. In it he says:

There is not the slightest evidence that any wrong was intended or done by the parties to the entries, or any law violated. The land was public land at the time these entries were made, and as such was open to entry by the public. The gentlemen who made entries were qualified to enter such lands and had a perfect right to do so, and they neither violated the law nor the rights of any parties whatever in so doing. I asked the executive order extending the reservation without understanding all the facts at the time. It gives me pleasure to make this statement in view of allegations to the contrary which have been made.

LOGAN GOES ON.

When Maj. Tucker and his associates were attacked through newspapers, said Logan, and charged with interfering with the rights of Indians and doing a great wrong, I defended them in a letter through the public press and otherwise as having violated no law, and as having committed no fraud on Indians or any one else. In that defense I asked the question: "If a soldier like Capt. Lawton could not locate a homestead or pre-emption, or whatever the location was within the distance he had to the Indian reservation, tell me how many miles a soldier should have to go away from a reservation in order to comply with the law?" This I did in their behalf. I now stand by what I did then. If this be a crime or fraud, my enemies can make the most of it. These men are all honorable men. Capt. Lawton was a gallant soldier from Indiana. He served all through the war with great credit to himself and honor to his country. Maj. Tucker is my son-in-law. He is a gentleman and a man who would not wrong any one. I presume the wrong in me is that Maj. Tucker is part of my family, and although he is innocent of any wrong in the premises, a baseless excuse was made to assail me through him. If their object was to draw me into his defense they have succeeded, and when any one thinks I have not manhood enough to defend openly my relative or friend when wrongfully assailed, he mistakes me. This, sir, is a full answer to this false, unprovoked and malicious slander, which I place on record, where all may have access to it if desired.

Washington Expressions on the Cleveland-Hendricks Ticket.

Washington, Special Telegram, July 12.—Senator Morgan was in the room of the senate military committee with Senator Logan. Logan listened to Morgan's comments, occasionally throwing in a word, but when asked for his opinion on the ticket, declined to say anything. When Morgan was discussing the Democratic platform, Logan remarked:

"Oh, it suits you because it means free trade."

"Well, it means free trade," replied Morgan.

Secretary Chandler says that the Democratic ticket is as week as the Democratic platform.

The thinking democrats and consistent advocates of democratic principles may vote for Cleveland, but there is nothing about him to attract the masses, the workingmen and the foreign element, or to enlist the sympathies of a single doubtful voter. He is no such man as could be expected to successfully confront Blaine and Logan in New York or anywhere a contrast of men and records will have an important influence.

Cleveland, he thinks, will lose New York by a majority but little less than that by which he carried it. The platform he regards as an absolute and ridiculous straddle on the tariff plank, on which the free traders, the tariff reformers and protectionists can all find a bid for their vote, and none the assurance of protection or help.

Postmaster General Gresham says he thinks the republican chances for carrying New York are greatly increased by the nomination of Cleveland.

"If Kelly bolts," he says, "Blaine can carry New York easily, but we can carry it anyhow. I presume some of the Independents will vote for Cleveland, but there is no certainty about that. They have two tickets before them now, and between this and the election they will have time to consider the matter."

"How about Indiana?"

"The republicans can carry the state. I don't think there is any doubt about Indiana going republican."

"Do you think the Independent movement in Massachusetts renders that state doubtful to the republicans?"

"I do not know. I can't speak for Massachusetts."

A reporter expressed surprise that Representative and Senator-elect Blackburn had not gone to Chicago.

"God forbid," he exclaimed. "That is none of my work."

"Don't you like the ticket?"

"I intend to support it with all the energy and ability I have got," was the evasive reply.

It was plain enough that Mr. Blackburn was disappointed. He wanted Thurman, he said, who would have stirred Democratic enthusiasm from Maine to California, and "have gone over the course like a thoroughbred." He was severe upon the anti-Thurman men of the Ohio delegation for having so obstinately refused to vote for Thurman.

Secretary Teller said:

I kon't know as yet what effect Cleveland's nomination will have on the Democratic voters, or what strength the opposition that is said to exist against him will develop. The Democrats have the faculty of batching up their family quarrels, and that adds another element of uncertainty. It is certain that the Democrats divided cannot carry New York. Hendricks' nomination will have great influence in Indiana.

Senator Sabin said that he did not think the nomination of Cleveland as strong as the Democrats could have made. In his opinion Bayard would have had a better chance of success. The Republican candidate would, however, have been elected, no matter whom the Democrats had nominated.

Coroner Muscraft has ended the investigation upon the dead bodies of the persons killed in the late riot. He enumerates fifty-three whose bodies he viewed. Of these he finds that Capt. Desmond was killed by unknown persons in the mob; one man, Goetz, shot himself accidentally; another, Senalz, was unlawfully shot on Sunday afternoon by the militia, and all the others were justifiably killed, they having failed to obey the command of the sheriff to disperse.

The navy department has paid the following claims for expenses incurred by state governments during the war of the Rebellion: Ohio, $90,256; New York, $54,046; Michigan, $42,846; [illegible]

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Household Miscellany.

TO TAKE OUT MILDEW.—Rub soap on the mildewed spot, make it quite wet, scrape chalk on it and lay it in the sun. Repeat if necessary.

Farmers wives. The following is an extract from a private letter: "I think the life of a farmer's wife is just what she makes it. A woman can make her duties a burden and her life miserable in any situation in life, for my part I am thoroughly sick of hearing farmer's wives and daughters spoken of as poor, miserable drudges, unfortunate beings to be pitied and looked down upon.

BRAIDED MATS.—Use a large sack needle and medium-sized hemp twine. The sack needles are four or five inches long, and have a flat, curved point. Pass the needle under the folds of braid on each side of the seam to be joined and draw the thread tightly, missing one or more folds of the outer braid when rounding a curve, or when necessary to keep perfectly flat. Lay the work on a table or on some flat surface while sewing, when joining the twine tie a firm square knot, and draw it through. Use only strong cloth, and sew the strips firmly when joining. Made in this way a braided mat will last for many years.

A lady writer in The Western Rural who took "a great deal of medicine," perscribed by several different, or indifferent, and expensive doctors, until she could not walk across the room without help," finally learned wisdom from bitter experience, discharged the physicians, eschewed drugs, ate plain wholesome food and not much of it, went gradually into the open air and, two years latter, is this season able to care for the garden, flower-yard and chickens, beside doing her "part of the housework."

"Fret not thyself, for anything!" Fretting never did any good at any time, it never made poor hired help any better; it never makes children any more careful or quiet, and it certainly never makes them love you any better. No! The worst thing, the most senseless thing a farmer (or his wife either) can do, is to fret. Fretting irritates even the animals you may be using; try the experiment; when they are working as nicely as you can wish, commence jerking the reins, talk, loud, scold them a little, and see how quickly they become unmanageable. And then fretting operates badly on the fretter; it makes him excited, peevish, and to feel that all the world is awry. No! don't fret, though things may not go just to your wish; take it coolly; think the matter over; nine times in ten the fault is your own, and if it is not, a cool head is worth a hundred times more than one in a fret.

It is one of the best recipes printed for gratuitous distribution by the National Health Society. Put three tablespoonfuls of coarse oatmeal into three quarts of cold water and boil it for half an hour; while hot sweeten to taste with brown sugar. Most people prefer it strained. This is very good mixed with cocoa, about half of each, as a hot drink, or it can be flavored with cloves and lemon peel boiled in it. If it is to be drank cold one-half ounce citric acid may be put to each two or three gallons. Lemon juice is preferable to the acid, but very much dearer. Rice or barley drink can be made in the same way, using broken rice or barley instead of oatmeal. Any of the above are excellent drinks for the harvest field and very cheap.

The Milk Cure.

New York Tribune: "The milk cure, as I understand it, is for the purpose of giving the stomach entire rest, or as near to that as possible, and by such rest to restore it to its normal condition. The directions are substantially these, viz: Milk in quantities to suit the condition of the digestive powers of the patient, to be given in regular quantities at regular hours, in each goblet of milk one tablespoonful of lime water, the milk to be taken slowly through a straw. The general rule is four ordinary goblets per day, four hours apart. As the stomach recovers its powers, stewed prunes and other light cooked fruits may be added until the patient recovers. My wife was in bed one year: Her digestion was worthless. She ran from 118 pounds down to sixty, and she was put upon a diet of skimmed milk and lime water, four goblets per day, and for twelve weeks she had no other nourishment. At the end of seven weeks unskimmed milk was tried and her stomach rejected it. At the end of twelve weeks beef tea was added at noon, and as she gained strength other food was added, and soon she took one meal of simple food, quail, rice, etc., each day, and in time, say six months, her digestion was restored to what it was before her sickness. To practice the milk cure one needs a very strong will and good common sense and judgment. My wife was not able to take the fruit with the milk at any time even after quail and steak would digest."

Management of Young Children in Hot Weather.

From the Philadelphia Times.

There are three sources from which harm to the children may be anticipated during the coming three months. These are the process of teething, indigestion and the heat. An account of the troubles incident to these circumstances would now be seasonable and possibly interesting to many. At all events these matters are standard topics of conversation among mothers, evidence that they at least know of the gravity of the troubles in question.

Although a thermometer is not exactly indispensible where there are young children, yet it is a great inconvenience, for until the external temperature rises to about 90 degrees, little trouble may be expected from the heat. Troubles due to the cause just named are best combated by frequent sponging of the face, arms, hands and feet with simple cool water. Children that are so treated will be much less liable to be effected by the heat and other matters now to be spoken of.

The liability to indigestion increases as the summer heat approaches the maximum point. In the treatment of this trouble the old rule about prevention will be especially useful. At this time the avoidance of fat and heated food and of unwholesome breast and other milk are very important points. The foods most suitable for summer use can be named in short order. Use the most nutritious and digestible substances that can be commanded. Meats baked or boiled used cold. Cold cup custard, rice pudding, cold, good ice-cream, milk and sponge cake are prime articles of summer diet for all, and especially for children who can use food other than milk.

The eruption of the teeth goes on most vigorously during the second year of the child's life, and makes unusual demands on its vital powers. This circumstance accounts for the more serious outlook of all the diseases that may occur at this period of the child's life. When a child is teething and appears in great general distress, with perhaps a hot and a dry skin, much relief may be afforded by allowing an abundance of cold water to drink and by a cool bath, followed by sharp rubbings of all parts of the body. But if, on the other hand, the child should be attacked by sudden vomiting and purging, with much apparent weakness and cool skin, medical advice should be had with all speed. While waiting for the coming of the doctor, a drop of the best brandy, in hot, sweetened water, should be given by the mouth. Hot spice plasters applied to various parts of the body, notably the stomach, would be useful.

Farm Notes.

When improving stock never use a half-blooded mare. The sire must be strictly thoroughbred, or uniformity in the offspring cannot be secured.

While the Percheron or Clydesdale horse is excellent for drawing large loads, the lighter hnd smaller animals are more active, and compensate with quicker move for deficiency in strength as compared with larger animals.

Mr. W. D. Hoard, the father of Wisconsin's dairy interests, says that "the logic of sound breeding teaches that no breed has yet been discovered which will combine and transmit Jersey results in butter, Ayrshire or Holstein results in cheese, or Durham results in beef."

A writer on the subject of the farmer says that mutton and lamb of his own raising should be so common on his table as to make unnecessary the continued use of salted meat, or of the weekly or almost daily visits of the butcher's cart. Fresh fruit and vegetables, bread of wheat, rye or Indian corn, sweet butter and fresh eggs, with a nice bit of lamb or mutton, make up a most appetizing bill of fare.

There is as much difference in eggs as in beef, according to The Poultry World. Those from a thin hen, poorly sustained with garbage, slops and little grain, spread in a thin, watery way over the dish, or look a milky white instead of having a lively, slightly yellow tinge. On the other hand, a plump, healthy hen, with daily rations of nourishing food, lays rich eggs which when broken retain their form, yield with more resistance and give the idea that you are beating something thicker than diluted milk.

Colonel F. D. Curtis has repeatedly recommended air-slaked lime for Gapes, forcing a little into the chick's mouth and holding the bill together a few seconds. Another mode of application suggested is to place a handful in a vessel, put in the sufferers and cover tightly for a minute or two, shaking slightly once or twice to stir up the dust, which being inhaled dislodges the throat-worms that cause the trouble.

Ripe Fruit Without Sugar.

It is a common saying, and has been accepted for many years, that "gooseberries are at their best for culinary use when still quite green," but custom is not always supported by fact. My experience, from long trial, is that fruit of all kinds should be fully ripe for any cooking purposes, requiring then very much less sugar, and the product being richer and higher flavored. A great deal of canned fruit is prepared when quite hard and unripe, which makes it look inviting, but it does not compare in quality with that which is put up ripe. Sugar when cooked with fruit renders it hard and indigestible, but the practice, now happily coming into use, of using no sugar when canning, but adding it when put upon the table, is a great improvement. T. B. P., also says that "gooseberries are taking the place of pieplant when it begins to fail." But pieplant does not fail during the summer months if there is sufficient rain to keep it in growing condition; besides, pieplant which is blanched or half grown in the open air is much inferior for all purposes to that which is ripe and fully grown as it needs air and sunshine to develop its good qualties.—Charles Downing.

Pure Air and Good Water.

The air about the dwelling should be sweet and untainted by the odor of slops, garbage and decaying vegetable matter. Buildings should be so located with regard to springs and wells that the water will be kept pure. I know wells the water from which is not fit to drink because of near proximity to certain outbuildings. A few years ago a family of three robust adults—neighbors of mine—died of blood poisoning from this very cause. A farmer once complained to me that the water in his well, when low, was unfit to drink. I showed him the evident cause and advised digging a well in another place. He did not do it, begrudging the expense. Within two years he lost several children by diphtheria, and then he dug a new well. Cellars should be thoroughly cleansed each spring, whitewashed, all vegetable matter removed, and ventilated every day.—Kinderhook.

Thinning Potatoes.

A New-Hampshire correspondent of The Mirror and Farmer, after pointing out the advantage in thinning potatoes —which he thinks as important as in the case of an overcrowded corn-hill—reports his own experience and opinions as follows:

"The largest yield I ever had of nice potatoes was by planting single eyes fifteen inches apart each way. I planted four inches deep, kept the ground loose, and did not hill. The yield was very large and nearly all fit for the table. Had the land been more wet, I should have planted less deep; if very wet I should have put seed on surface and hilled; if more light and dry I should have put seed six or eight inches into the ground and not hilled. If you are to put two or three or more eyes close together in a hill, does it do any good to cut them apart? I believe in planting the best potatoes; and if eyes, the best eyes from the best potatoes, and in having as near 27,878 stalks or plants (15 inches apart) to the acre, and as near evenly distributed as practical.

BOSSUET AND THE RING.

How a Famous Orator Electrified an Audience at a Funeral.

The Quarterly Review.

In 1669 Bossuet had delivered his celebrated funeral oration for the widowed queen, at whose death nothing but its suddenness prevented him from being present. In the following year, the daughter being suddenly struck, when at Versailles, by a mortal sickness, supposed to have been the effect of poison administered by the creatures of her reprobate husband, cried out in her agonies that Bousset should be instantly sent for and brought to her bedside. While couriers were dispatched in hot haste to fetch him from Paris she made her confession and received the last sacraments, much distressed, it is said, by the "inflexible severity" of the priest in attendance, and anxiously watching the door for Bousset's arrival. It was past midnight when he came, and she immediately exacted from him a promise that he would not leave her as long as she breathed. With the crucifix in his clasped hands on which the queen-mother, Anne of Austria, not long before had breathed her dying kiss, he threw himself on his knees by the bedside; and as the life of the ill-fated princess rapidly ebbed away he wept and prayed with her, with words so full of consolation and faith that the people of the court, who, as usual, crowded the chamber, were melted into passionate tears by the scene. Within an hour of her death, whispering in English, that Bossuet might not understand, she desired that a superb emerald and diamond ring she wore should be given to him as a memorial when all was over. She expired at 3 a. m., only nine hours after the seizure, and the ring with the message was immediately conveyed by Mme. Lafayette to the king, who sent for Bossuet, placed the jewel on his finger, and charged him to wear it always, and to preach the princess' funeral discourse. As soon as the incident got wind Bossuet was congratulated by the courtiers, who at the same time expressed a regret that the proprietors of the pulpit would scarcely admit of his mentioning a circumstance so honorable to the departed princess and to himself. "Why not?" was his reply; which, flying from lip to lip, excited an eager curiosity to see how the great orator would carry out his implied intention. It was not till near the end of the discourse that their curiosity was gratified, and it was in a way that took them by surprise. Among the virtues of the departed, Bossuet found occasion to commemorate not only her liberality, but the pleasing grace with which she enhanced the value of her gifts. "This art of giving gracefully," he added, "which she so well practiced in life, accompanied her—I know it—into the very arms of death." Those three words, "Je le sais," pronounced with a sudden emphasis and a gesture of the hand sparkling with the well-known jewel electrified the brilliant audience, which was so much moved by admiration of the orator's address in dealing with so delicate a matter as it had been previously thrilled by his pathos in depicting the consternation of that night of horror, when the precincts of the court rang with the terrible cry "Madam is dying—madam is dead.'"

A River Under Lake Erie.

From the Erie, Pa., Dispatch.

"I believe," said a well-known scientist to a reporter, "there is a subterranean river running from Lake Superior through Lake Huron under Lake Erie and emptying into Lake Ontario. There is no other way in which to explain certain mysteries connected with our great lakes. There is a continuous fall from Lake Superior to Ontario, and all the outlet that the upper lakes have that is known is the comparatively insignificant Detroit river. that stream never can care for all the great pressure and volume from above, and the theory of an underground river, such as I mentioned, seems to be most reasonable. All the St. Lawrence fishes are taken in every one of the lakes but Lake Erie. Why? Because they follow the the course of the subterranean stream, passing 300 feet beneath the bottom of Lake Erie, and enter the waters of the upper lakes. The great lakes above Lake Erie have an occasional flux and reflux of their waters, corresponding with ocean-tides save in regularity.

"The subterranean river, according to my theory, becomes occasionally obstructed by great obstacles that are constantly moving down from the lake bottoms. Then the channels or outlet are insufficient to carry off the great volume of water, and they are dammed back, and the lakes rise. Finally these obstructions are swept away by the irresistible pressure, the river flows naturally once more and the dammed waters subside. That is the whole mystery of the rise and fall of the tides in the great lakes."

Moved to Pity.

Women are among the most faithful agents of the society which protects dumb animals. Their self-approval is their only reward. One of these self-appointed agents lately prosecuted two men in New York. Says the Herald of that city:

Among the prisoners at the Tombs police court were two brothers. They had been arrested by a bridge policeman at the request of a young lady of Brooklyn. She was in court to prosecute them for cruelty to a horse.

The young woman said that on Monday afternoon, as she was about to cross the bridge she saw the men driving a half-starved horse attached to an express wagon. The animal got stuck in the street and refused to go. Then the prisoners, according to the fair complainant's story, unmercifully beat the animal with a cart stake and a whip. "The sight," she continued, "would have touched the stoutest heart. The poor brute whined piteously, and looking at me seemed to say, 'Can't you help me? please try.' I did help the poor thing, and got policeman Kane to arrest the men, on a promise that I would appear in court."

District Duffy commended the young lady for her tender-heartedness, and held the prisoners in default of three hundred dollars each for trial.

CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

There is reason to believe that before long the days of Broadway New York as the most famous promenade in the world, are numbered. Hitherto any attempt to get a railroad track on that street has been defeated, but the Tribune asserts that now the requisite assent of enough property has been obtained and a road propelled by cable is likely to be in operation within a brief period.

Tried by the test of increased real estate valuations the growth of New York city in the last three years has been something remarkable. The assessed value of this class of property in 1881 was $976,785,199, and the increase in nine years had been $140,049,219. According to the assessment rolls recently completed, real estate values this year have advanced to $1,119,761,597, an increase in only three years of $143,026,398.

There is now a very interesting and useful forestry exhibition at Edinburgh, Scotland, embracing the most complete variety which has ever been attainable in this department of human riches. It is interesting to note that in the British Isles, where wood is scarcely a necessity for fuel, that public attention is enlisted in behalf of preserving forests and growing trees that are useful and almost indispensable for other purposes.

A New York operator thinks he has discovered the secret of the enormous shrinkage of stocks. "The great secret of this never-ending shrinkage or values," says this gentleman, "which has now probably gone beyond the point where stocks begin to be a really good investments, is want of confidence in the official reports of railroad companies and the sworn statements of railroad officers. With New York Central selling at 96½, and paying eight per cent. dividends, it is evident that the public does not believe the reports issued by Vanderbilt as to the condition of the road; if they did the stock would go up to 150 to-morrow." It is probable that this popular view has had a good deal to do with the depreciation of certain classes of stocks.

The inexorable and oppressive burden of the military systems of Europe is shown in a strong light by statistics published in Germany. It is shown in the figures that 14,702 men were sentenced during the past year for attempting to emigrate for the purpose of avoiding required military service. Cases against 14,178 more offenders in this particular line are still pending. But worse still the number of other men from whom a reservice is due, and who during the year past refused both to report for duty and to furnish the required excuses for the failure to enroll themselves, amounted to the extraordinary number of 103,251. The imperial government attributes the trouble to the negligence of the officers whose duty it is to attend to the enrollment of the inhabitants.

A correspondent writes to the Toronto Globe that "so great has been the social distinction granted to members of the legal fraternity, so many and so splendid have been the prizes reserved for those learned in the law, that great numbers utterly regardless in many cases of their want of fitness have rushed into the study of the law, heedless of the already overcrowded state of the profession." It is believed however, that "when it becomes generally understood that multitudes of lawyers are continually on the verge of starvation (many having to depend on the hard earnings of their parents or on the generosity of rich fathers-in-law) those destitute of the qualifications necessary to forensic success will pause before entering the legal profession without the mental powers, the logical acumen, or the moral stability and integrity which are indispensable to permanent success at the bar."

Congress recently authorized the appointment of eleven skilled laborers in the patent office at salaries of $60 a month, and applications for the places been received from over 200 persons, while for three places as watchmen in the new State, War and Navy department Building, at less than $1,000 a year, there has been over 700 applications. These few places happen not to be subject to the civil service reform rules, and the contrast between such a greedy struggle on the basis of "influence" and the common-sense system of testing the applicant's capacity by an examination must impress even doubters as to the wisdom of the reform. The craze for official positions in Washington, even for those of extreme by limited emoluments and not above ordinary menial employments as regards honorable consideration, has been often deprecated, but it continues with unabated force, and no warnings or remonstrances seem to have any ameliorating influence. Hundreds of bright active young men of sufficient capacity to wing their way anywhere, bitterly rue the day when they beguiled from other occupations by the glamor of government service and Washington life which they have found to be anything but pleasant or profitable [illegible] hold them [illegible] any effort to get into broad fields of honorable ambition.

BLAINE'S ACCEPTANCE.

All the Issues of the Campaign Treated Exhaustively and with Strength and Directness.

Civil Service Reform Commended and the Republican Position on the Tariff Clearly Interpreted.

Mr. Blaine's Acceptance.

The following is Mr. Blaine's letter accepting the nomination for president:

AUGUSTA, Me., July 15, 1884.—The Hon. John B. Henderson, and Others of the Committee, etc., etc.—Gentlemen: In accepting the nomination for the presidency tendered me by the Republican national convention I beg to express a deep sense of the honor which is imposed. I venture to accompany the acceptance with some observations upon the questions involved in the contest—questions whose settlement may affect the future of the nation favorably or unfavorably for a long series of years.

In enumerating the issues upon which the Republican party appeals for popular support, the convention has been singularly explicit and felicitous. It has properly given the leading position to the industrial interests of the country as affected by the tariff on imports. On that question the two political parties are radically in conflict. Almost the first act of the Republicans, when they came into power in 1861, was the establishment of the principle of protection to American labor and to American capital. This principle the Republican party has ever since steadily maintained, while on the other hand the Democratic party in congress has for fifty years persistently warred upon it. Twice within that period our opponents have destroyed tariffs arranged for protection, and since the close of the civil war, whenever they have controlled the house of representatives, hostile legislation has been attempted—never more conspicuously than in their principal measure at the late session of congress.

THE TARIFF QUESTION.

Revenue laws are in their very nature subject to frequent revision in order that they may be adapted to changes and modifications of trade. The Republican party is not contending for the permanency of any particular statute. The issue between the two parties does not have reference to a specific law. It is far broader and far deeper. It involves a principle of wide application and beneficent influence, against a theory which we believe to be unsound in conception and inevitably hurtful in practice. In the many tariff revisions which have been necessary for the past twenty-three years, or which may hereafter become necessary, the Republican party has maintained and will maintain the policy of protection to American industry, while our opponents insist upon a revision, which practically destroys that policy. The issue is thus distinct, well defined and unavoidable. The pending election may determine the fate of protection for a generation. The overthrow of the policy means a large and prominent reduction in the wages of the American laborer, besides involving the loss of vast amounts of American capital invested in manufacturing enterprises. The value of the present revenue system to the people of the United States is not a matter of theory, and I shall submit no argument to sustain it. I only invite attention to certain facts of official record which seem to constitute a demonstration.

In the census of 1850 an effort was made, for the first time in our history, to obtain a valuation of all the property in the United States. The attempt was in a large degree unsuccessful. Partly from lack of time, partly from prejudice among many who thought the inquiries foreshadowed a new scheme of taxation, the returns were incomplete and unsatisfactory. Little more was done than to consolidate the local valuation used in the states for purposes of assessment, and that, as everyone knows, differs widely from the complete exhibit of all the property.

In the census of 1860, however, the work was done with great thoroughness—the distinction between "assessed" value and "true" value being carefully observed. The grand result was that the "true value" of all the property in the States and Territories (excluding slaves) amounted to fourteen thousand millions of dollars ($14,000,000,000.) This aggregate was the net result of the labor and the savings of all the people within the area of the United States from the time the first British colonist landed in 1607 down to the year 1860. It represented the fruit of the toil of 250 years.

After 1860 the business of the country was encouraged and developed by a protective tariff. At the end of twenty years the total property of the United States, as returned by the census of 1880, amounted to the enormous aggregate of forty-four thousand millions of dollars, ($44,000,000,000.) This great result was attained, notwithstanding the fact that countless millions had in the interval been wasted in the progress of a bloody war. It thus appears that while our population between 1860 and 1880 increased 60 per cent, the aggregate property of the country increased 214 per cent—showing a vastly enhanced wealth per capita among the people. Thirty thousand millions of dollars ($30,000,000,000) had been added during these twenty years to the permanent wealth of the nation.

These results are regarded by the older nations of the world as phenomenal. That our country should surmount the peril and the cost of a gigantic war and for an entire period of twenty years make an average gain to its wealth of $125,000,000 per month surpasses the experience of all other nations, ancient or modern. Even the opponents of the present revenue system do not pretend that in the whole history of civilization any parallel can be found to the material progress of the United States since the accession of the Republican party to power.

The period between 1860 and to-day has not been one of material prosperity only. At no time in the history of the United States has there been such progress in the moral and philanthropic field. Religious and charitable institutions, schools, seminaries and colleges, have been founded and endowed far more generously than at any previous time in our history. Greater and more varied relief has been extended to human suffering and the entire progress of the country in wealth has been accompanied and dignified by a broadening and elevation of our national character as a people.

Our opponents find fault that our revenue system produces a surplus. But they should not forget that the law has given a specific purpose to which all of the surplus is profitably and honorably applied—the reduction of the public debt and the consequent relief of the burden of taxation. No dollar has been wasted, and the only extravagance with which the party stands charged is the generous pensioning of soldiers, sailors and their families—an extravagance which embodies the highest form of justice in the recognition and payment of a sacred debt. When reduction of taxation is to be made, the Republican party can be trusted to accomplish it in such form as will most effectively aid the industries of the nation.

OUR FOREIGN COMMERCE.

A frequent accusation by our opponents is that the foreign commerce of the country has steadily decayed under the influence of the protective tariff. In this way they seek to array the importing interest against the Republican party. It is a common and yet radical error to confound the commerce of this country with its carrying trade—an error often committed innocently and sometimes designedly—but an error so gross that it does not distinguish between the ship and the cargo. Foreign commerce represents the exports and imports of a country regardless of the nationality of the vessel that may carry the commodities of exchange. Our carrying trade has from obvious causes suffered many discouragements since 1860, but our foreign commerce has in the same period steadily and prodigiously increased—increased indeed at a rate and to an amount which absolutely dwarf all previous developments of our trade beyond the sea. From 1860 to the present time the foreign commerce of the United States (divided with approximate equality between exports and imports) reached the astonishing aggregate of twenty-four thousand millions of dollars ($24,000,000,000). The balance of this vast commerce inclined in our favor, but it would have been much larger if our trade with the countries of America, elsewhere referred to, had been more wisely adjusted.

It is difficult even to appreciate the magnitude of our export trade since 1860, and we can gain a correct conception of it only by comparison with preceding results in the same field. The total exports from the United States from the declaration of independence in 1776 down to the day of Lincoln's election in 1860, added to all that had previously been exported from the American colonies from their original settlement, amounted to less than nine thousand millions of dollars ($9,000,000,000). On the other hand, our exports from 1860 to the close of the last fiscal year exceeded twelve thousand millions of dollars ($12,000,000,000)—the whole of it being the product of American labor. Evidently a protective tariff has not injured our export trade when, under its influence, we exported in twenty-four years 40 per cent more than the total amount that had been exported in the entire previous history of American commerce. All the details, when analyzed, correspond with this gigantic result. The commercial cities of the Union never had such growth as they have enjoyed since 1860. Our chief emporium, the city of New York, with its dependencies, has within that period doubled her population and increased her wealth five fold. During the same period the imports and exports which have entered and left her harbor are more than double in bulk and value the whole amount imported and exported by her between the settlement of the first Dutch colony on the island of Manhattan and the outbreak of the civil war in 1860.

AGRICULTURE AND THE TARIFF.

The agricultural interest is by far the largest in the nation, and is entitled in every adjustment of revenue laws to the first consideration. Any policy hostile to the fullest development of agriculture in the United States must be abandoned. Realizing this fact the opponents of the present system of revenue have labored very earnestly to persuade the farmers of the United States that they are robbed by a protective tariff, and the effort is thus made to consolidate their vast influence in favor of free trade. But happily the farmers of America are intelligent and cannot be misled by sophistry when conclusive facts are before them. They see plainly that during the past twenty-four years, wealth has not been acquired in one section or by one interest at the expense of another section or another interest. They see that the agricultural states have made even more rapid progress than the manufacturing states.

The farmers see that in 1860 Massachusetts and Illinois had about the same wealth—between eight and nine hundred million dollars each—and that in 1880 Massachusetts had advanced to $2,600,000,000, while Illinois had advanced to $3,200,000,000. They see that New Jersey and Iowa were just equal in population in 1860, and that in twenty years the wealth of New Jersey was increased by the sum of $850,000,000, while the wealth of Iowa was increased by the sum of $1,500,000,000. They see that the nine leading agricultural states of the West have grown so rapidly in prosperity that the aggregate addition to their wealth since 1860 is almost as great as the wealth of the entire country in that year. They see that the South, which is almost exclusively agricultural, has shared in the general prosperity, and that having recovered from the loss and devastation of war, has gained so rapidly that its total wealth is at least the double of that which it possessed in 1860, exclusive of slaves.

In these extraordinary developments the farmers see the helpful impulse of a home market, and they see that the financial and revenue system, enacted since the Republican party came into power, has established and constantly expanded the home market. They see that even in the case of wheat, which is our chief cereal export, they have sold, in the average of the years since the close of the war, three bushels at home to one they have sold abroad; and that in the case of corn, the only other cereal which we export to any extent, one hundred bushels have been used at home to three and a half bushels exported. In some years the disparity has been so great that for every peck of corn exported one hundred bushels have been consumed in the home market. The farmers see that in the increasing competition from the grain fields of Russia and from the distant plains of India, the growth of the home market becomes daily of greater concern to them and that its impairment would depreciate the value of every acre of tillable land in the Union.

OUR INTERNAL COMMERCE.

Such facts as these, touching the growth and consumption of cereals at home give us some slight conception of the vastness of the internal commerce of the United States. They suggest also that, in addition to the advantages which the American people enjoy from protection against foreign competition, they enjoy the advantages of absolute free trade over a larger area and with a greater population than any other nation. The internal commerce of our thirty-eight states and nine territories is carried on without let or hindrance, without tax, detention or governmental interference of any kind whatever. It spreads freely over an area of three and a half million square miles—almost equal in extent to the whole continent of Europe. Its profits are enjoyed to-day by 56,000,000 of American freemen, and from this enjoyment no monopoly is created. According to Alexander Hamilton, when he discussed the same subject in 1790, "the internal competition which takes place does away with everything like monopoly, and by degrees reduces the prices of articles to the minimum of a reasonable profit on the capital employed." It is impossible to point to a single monopoly in the United States that has been created or fostered by the industrial system which is upheld by the Republican party.

Compared with our foreign commerce these domestic exchanges are inconceivably great in amount—requiring merely as one instrumentality as large a mileage of railway as exists to-day in all other nations of the world combined. These internal exchanges are estimated by the statistical bureau of the treasury department to be annually twenty times as great in amount as our foreign commerce. It is into this vast field of home trade—at once the creation and the heritage of the American people—that foreign nations are striving by every device to enter. It is into this field that the opponents of our present revenue system would freely admit the countries of Europe—countries into whose internal trade we could not reciprocally enter; countries to which we should be surrendering every advantage of trade; from which we should be gaining nothing in return.

EFFECT UPON THE MECHANIC AND THE LABORER.

A policy of this kind would be disastrous to the mechanics and workingmen of the United States. Wages are unjustly reduced when an industrious man is not able by his earnings to live in comfort, educate his children and lay by a sufficient amount for the necessities of age. The reduction of wages inevitably consequent upon throwing our home market open to the world would deprive them of the power to do this. It would prove a great calamity to our country. It would produce a conflict between the poor and the rich, and in the sorrowful degradation of labor would plant the seeds of public danger.

The Republican party has steadily aimed to maintain just relations between Labor and Capital—guarding with care the rights of each. A conflict between the two has always led in the past, and will always lead in the future, to the injury of both. Labor is indispensable to the creation and profitable use of capital, and capital increases the efficiency and value of labor. Whoever arrays the one against the other is an enemy of both. That policy is wisest and best which harmonizes the two on the basis of absolute justice. The Republican party has protected the free labor of America so that its compensation is larger than is realized in any other country. It has guarded our people against the unfair competition of contract labor from China, and may be called upon to prohibit the growth of a similar evil from Europe. It is obviously unfair to permit capitalists to make contracts for cheap labor in foreign countries to the hurt and disparagement of the labor of American citizens. Such a policy (like that which would leave the time and other conditions of home labor exclusively in the control of the employer), is injurious to all parties—not the least so to the unhappy persons who are made the subjects of the contract. The institutions of the United States rest upon the intelligence and virtue of all the people. Suffrage is made universal as a just weapon of self-protection to every citizen. It is not the interest of the republic that any economic system should be adopted which involves the reduction of wages to the hard standard prevailing elsewhere. The Republican party aims to elevate and dignify labor—not to degrade it.

As a substitute for the industrial system which under Republican administration has developed such extraordinary prosperity, our opponents offer a policy which is but a series of experiments upon our system of revenue—a policy whose end must be harm to our manufactures and greater harm to our labor. Experiments in the industrial and financial system is the country's great dread, as stability is its greatest boon. Even the uncertainty resulting from the recent tariff agitation in congress has hurtfully affected the business of the entire country. Who can measure the harm to our shops and our homes, to our farms and our commerce, if the uncertainty of perpetual tariff agitation is to be inflicted upon the country? We are in the midst of an abundant harvest; we are on the eve of a revival of general prosperity. Nothing stands in our way but the dread of a change in the industrial system which has wrought such wonders in the last twenty years and which with the power of increased capital will work still greater marvels of prosperity in the twenty years to come.

OUR FOREIGN POLICY.

Our foreign relations favor our domestic development. We are at peace with the world—at peace upon a sound basis with no unsettled questions of sufficient magnitude to embarrass or distract us. Happily removed from our geographical position from participation or interest in those questions of dynasty or boundary which so frequently disturb the peace of Europe, we are left to cultivate friendly relations with all, and are free from possible entanglements in the quarrels of any. The United States has no cause and no desire to engage in conflict with any power on earth, and we may rest in assured confidence that no power desires to attack the United States.

With the nations of the Western hemisphere we should cultivate closer relations, and for our common prosperity and advancement we should invite them all to join with us in an agreement that, for the future, all international troubles in North or South America shall be adjusted by impartial arbitration and not by arms. This project was part of the fixed policy of President Garfield's administration, and it should in my judgment be renewed. Its accomplishment on this continent would favorably affect the nations beyond the sea, and thus powerfully contribute at no distant day to the universal acceptance of the philanthropic and Christian principle of arbitration. The effect even of suggesting it for the Spanish American states has been most happy, and has increased the confidence of those people in our friendly disposition. It fell to my lot as secretary of state, in June, 1881, to quiet apprehension in the Republic of Mexico, by giving the assurance in an official dispatch that "there is not the faintest desire in the United States for territorial extension south of the Rio Grande. The boundaries of the two republics have been established in conformity with the best jurisdictional interests of both. The line of demarcation is not merely conventional. It is more. It separates a Spanish-American people from a Saxon-American people. It divides one great nation from another with distinct and natural finality."

We seek the conquests of peace. We desire to extend our commerce, and in an especial degree with our friends and neighbors on this continent. We have not improved our relations with Spanish-America as wisely and as persistently as we might have done. For more than a generation the sympathy of those countries has been allowed to drift away from us. We should now make every effort to gain their friendship. Our trade with them is already large. During the last year our exchanges in the Western hemisphere amounted to $350,000,000—nearly one-fourth of our entire foreign commerce. To those who may be disposed to underrate the value of our trade with the countries of North and South America it may be well to state that their population is nearly or quite fifty millions—and that, in proportion to aggregate numbers, we import nearly double as much from them as we do from Europe. But the result of the whole American trade is in a high degree unsatisfactory. The imports during the past year exceeded $225,000,000, while the exports were less than $125,000,000—showing a balance against us of more than one hundred millions of dollars. But the money does not go to Spanish America. We send large sums to Europe in coin or its equivalent to pay European manufacturers for the goods which they send to Spanish America. We are but paymasters for this enormous amount annually to European factors—an amount which is a serious draft, in every financial depression, upon our resources of specie.

Cannot this condition of trade in great part be changed? Cannot the market for our products be greatly enlarged? We have made a beginning in our effort to improve our trade relations with Mexico, and we should not be content until similar and mutually advantageous arrangements have been successively made with every nation of North and South America. While the great powers of Europe are steadily enlarging their colonial domination in Asia and Africa it is the especial province of this country to improve and expand its trade with the nations of America. No field promises so much. No field has been cultivated so little. Our foreign policy should be an American policy in its broadest and most comprehensive sense—a policy of peace, of friendship, of commercial enlargement.

The name of American which belongs to us in our national capacity must always exalt the just pride of patriotism. Citizenship of the republic must be the panoply and safeguard of him who wears it. The American citizen, rich or poor, native or naturalized, white or colored, must everywhere walk secure in his personal and civil rights. The republic should never accept a lesser duty, it can never assume a nobler one, than the protection of the humblest man who owes it loyalty—protection at home, and protection which shall follow him abroad, into whatever lands he may go upon a lawful errand.

THE SOUTHERN STATES.

I recognize, not without regret, the necessity for speaking of two sections of our common country. But the regret diminishes when I see that the elements which separated them are fast disappearing. Prejudices have yielded and are yielding, while a growing cordiality warms the Southern and the Northern heart alike. Can any one doubt that between the sections confidence and esteem are to-day more marked than at any period in the sixty years preceding the election of President Lincoln? This is the result in part of time and in part of Republican principles applied under the favorable conditions of uniformity. It would be a great calamity to change these influences under which Southern commonwealths are learning to vindicate civil rights, and adapting themselves to the conditions of political tranquillity and industrial progress. If there be occasional and violent outbreaks in the South against this peaceful progress, the public opinion of the country regards them as exceptional and hopefully trusts that each will prove the last.

The South needs capital and occupation, not controversy. As much as any part of the North, the South needs the full protection of the revenue laws which the Republican party offers. Some of the Southern states have already entered upon a career of industrial development and prosperity. These, at least, should not lend their electoral votes to destroy their own future.

Any effort to unite the Southern states upon issues that grow out of the memories of the war, will summon the Northern states to combine in the assertion of that nationality which was their inspiration in the civil struggle. And thus great energies which should be united in a common industrial development will be wasted in hurtful strife. The Democratic party shows itself a foe to Southern prosperity by always invoking and urging Southern political consolidation. Such a policy quenches the rising instinct of patriotism in the heart of the Southern youth; it revives and stimulates prejudice; it substitutes the spirit of barbaric vengeance for the love of peace, progress and harmony.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

The general character of the civil service of the United States under all administrations has been honorable. In the one supreme test—the collection and disbursement of revenue—the record of fidelity has never been surpassed in any nation. With the almost fabulous sums which were received and paid during the late war, scrupulous integrity was the prevailing rule. Indeed, throughout that trying period it can be said to the honor of the American name, that unfaithfulness and dishonesty among civil officers were as rare as misconduct or cowardice on the field of battle.

The growth of the country has continually and necessarily enlarged the civil service, until now it includes a vast body of officers. Rules and methods of appointment which prevailed when the number was smaller have been found insufficient and impracticable, and earnest efforts have been made to separate the great mass of ministerial officers from partisan influence and personal control. Impartiality in the mode of appointment to be based on qualification, and security of tenure to be based on faithful discharge of duty, are the two ends to be accomplished. The public business will be aided by separating the legislative branch of the government from all control of appointments, and the executive department will be relieved by subjecting appointments to fixed rules, and thus removing them from the caprice of favoritism. But there should be rigid observance of the law which gives in all cases of equal competency the preference to the soldiers who risked their lives in defense of the Union.

I entered congress in 1863, and in a somewhat prolonged service I never found it expedient to request or recommend the removal of a civil officer except in four instances, and then for non-political reasons which were instantly conclusive with the appointing power. The officers in the district, appointed by Mr. Lincoln in 1861 upon the recommendation of my predecessor, served as a rule, until death or resignation. I adopted at the beginning of my service the test of competitive examination for appointments to West Point and maintained it so long as I had the right by law to nominate a cadet. In the case of many officers I found that the present law which arbitrarily limits the term of the commission offered a constant temptation to changes for mere political reasons. I have publicly expressed the belief that the essential modification of that law would be in many respects advantageous.

My observation in the department of state confirmed the conclusions of my legislative experience, and impressed me with the conviction that the rule of impartial appointment might with advantage be carried beyond any existing provision of the civil service law. It should be applied to appointments in the consular service. Consuls should be commercial sentinels—encircling the globe with watchfulness for their country's interests. Their intelligence and competency become, therefore, matters of great public concern. No man should be appointed to an American consulate who is not well instructed in the history and resources of his own country, and in the requirements and language of commerce in the country to which he is sent. The same rule should be applied even more rigidly to secretaries of legation in our diplomatic service. The people have the right to the most efficient agents in the discharge of public business and the appointing power should regard this as the prior and ulterior consideration.

THE MORMON QUESTION.

Religious liberty is the right of every citizen of the republic. Congress is forbidden by the constitution to make any law "respecting the establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." For a century, under this guarantee, Protestant and Catholic, Jew and Gentile, have worshipped God according to the dictates of conscience. But religious liberty must not be perverted to the justification of offenses against the law. A religious sect, strongly intrenched in one of the territories of the Union, and spreading rapidly in four other territories, claims the right to destroy the great safeguard and muniment of social order, and to practice as a religious privilege that which is punished with severe penalty in every state of the Union. The sacredness and unity of the family must be preserved as the foundation of all civil government, as the source of orderly administration, as the surest guarantee of moral purity. The claim of the Mormons that they are divinely authorized to practice polygamy should no more be admitted than the claim of certain heathen tribes, if they should come among us, to continue the rite of human sacrifice. The law does not interfere with what a man believes; it takes cognizance only of what he does. As citizens, the Mormons are entitled to the same civil rights as others, and to these they must be confined. Polygamy can never receive national sanction or toleration by admitting the community that upholds it as a state in the Union. Like others, the Mormons must learn that the liberty of the individual ceases where the rights of society begin.

OUR CURRENCY.

The people of the United States, though often urged and tempted, have never seriously contemplated the recognition of any other money than gold and silver—and currency directly convertible into them. They have not done so, they will not do so, under any necessity less pressing than that of desperate war. The one special requisite for the completion of our monetary system is the fixing of the relative values of silver and gold. The large use of silver as the money of account among Asiatic nations, taken in connection with the increasing commerce of the world, gives the weightiest reasons for an international agreement in the premises. Our government should not cease to urge this measure until a common standard of value shall be reached and established—a standard that shall enable the United States to use the silver from its mines as an auxiliary to gold in settling the balances of commercial exchange.

THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The strength of the republic is increased by the multiplication of landholders. Our laws should look to the judicious encouragement of actual settlers on the public domain, which should henceforth be held as a sacred trust for the benefit of those seeking homes. The tendency to consolidate large tracts of land in the ownership of individuals or corporations should, with proper regard to vested rights, be discouraged. One hundred thousand acres of land in the hands of one man is far less profitable to the nation in every way than when its ownership is divided among 1,000 men. The evil of permitting large tracts of the national domain to be consolidated and controlled by the few against the many is enhanced when the persons controlling it are aliens. It is but fair that the public land should be disposed of only to actual settlers and to those who are citizens of the republic, or willing to become so.

OUR SHIPPING INTERESTS.

Among our national interests one languishes—the foreign carrying trade. It was very seriously crippled in our civil war, and another blow was given to it in the general substitution of steam for sail in ocean traffic. With a frontage on the two great oceans, with a freightage larger than that of any other nation, we have every inducement to restore our navigation. Yet the government has hitherto refused its help. A small share of the encouragement given by the government to railways and to manufactures, and a small share of the capital and the zeal given by our citizens to those enterprises would have carried our ships to every sea and to every port. A law just enacted removes some of the burdens upon our navigation, and inspires hope that this great interest may at last receive its due share of attention. All efforts in this direction should receive encouragement.

SACREDNESS OF THE BALLOT.

This survey of our condition as a nation reminds us that material prosperity is but a mockery if it does not tend to preserve the liberty of the people. A free ballot is the safeguard of republican institutions, without which no national welfare is assured. A popular election, honestly conducted, embodies the very majesty of true government. Ten millions of voters desire to take part in the pending contest. The safety of the republic rests upon the integrity of the ballot, upon the security of suffrage to the citizen. To deposit a fraudulent vote is no worse a crime against constitutional liberty than to obstruct the deposit of an honest vote. He who corrupts suffrage strikes at the very root of free government. He is the arch-enemy of the republic. He forgets that in trampling upon the rights of others he fatally imperils his own rights. "It is a good land which the Lord our God doth give us," but we can maintain our heritage only by guarding with vigilance the source of popular power. I am with great respect, your obedient servant,

Personal Paragraphs.

Lord Tennyson, who appears in his old age not averse from explaining the meaning of his words, has lately favored an English correspondent with light upon a dark passage in The Lady of Shallott. Here is his communication: "'Little breezes dusk and shiver' may be taken to mean darken and shiver—the light and shade playing upon water in a light that is fitful." Is it not about time to start a Tennyson Society?

The Sultan of Morocco will not permit foreigners to acquire land in his country. On its becoming known to him that an American resident was renting lands for a term of years, orders were at once issued declaring that any lease exceeding the limit of twelve months was to be considered invalid, and further, when the Comte de Chavagnac, a French citizen who had purchased cerain mountainous tracts in the Riff county for mining purposes, endeavored to visit his newly and surreptitously acquired estates, he was not allowed to penetrate the district in which his property is situated.

A new church in Cleveland, Ohio, presented to the Wilson Avenue Presbyterian Society by Mr. Dan P. Eells, was used for the first time on Sunday. The land and the building cost about $37,000. The formal dedicatory service have been postponed until the fall, when Mr. Eells is expected back from Europe.

KILLING THE WARDS.

Recapitulation of the Case—An Indicted Man Turns States' Evidence—Sensational Testimony.

Special from Grand Forks, Dak:—The crime for which twelve men are to be tried for their lives, one after another, is a sad one. The trial will best be understood by rehearsing some facts which are undisputed. Charles Ward, aged twenty-five, and Frederick Ward, aged thirty, sons of Dr. E. P. Ward, of J. V. Farwell & Co., Chicago, were in April, 1883, managers of the townsite of Bartlett, Dak., and had a few days before their death built a shack on a valuable claim between Devil's Lake and Creel City, on which one John Bell, a liveryman in Devil's Lake, formerly of St. Paul, also had a shack. The night of April 22 they, with one Elliott, occupied the shack, and were attacked by a night party. The Wards were ordered off. They refused. The shack was riddled with bullets and Fred was shot down inside. Elliott and Charley Ward ran out, Charley falling with several mortal wounds. Elliott was permitted to escape after a severe beating. Fred was dragged out and the shack rifled. Their bodies were found exposed on the prairie the next morning. The father of the boys was within the bar when the case was called. He and Col. Farrington, whose son is a defendant, have both silver locks. The counsel were all present but Col. Ball, who was called to St. Paul. The jury was not complete, and on motion of Deputy District Attorney Pratt, the case went over to Thursday morning at 9 o'clock. The defense were ready to go to trial with Uline. The counsel have decided to try B. W. Lair of Devil's Lake, first. His special counsel is Hon. A. P. Ward of Cynthiana, Ky., who has been here for nearly a month.

Grand Forks, Special says: A not unexpected sensation in the trial of Lair was the testimony of Dick Turpin, one of the defendants, who turned state's evidence. After finding the Wards' bodies, it was proved Fred was near his shack lying on his back with hands clenched and feet drawn up, and Charley near Bell's shack, about forty rods away, lying on his face and shot in his back. Dick Turpin was produced and the indictments were both dismissed against him, and he testified in substance that on the night in question Uline gave him a shotgun, Farrington got the team, and they all drove down to Leopold's and got him, with the determination of putting the Wards off the claim of Bell. Lair had a rifle at Ward's shack. Bell called Ward out. Fred came to the door. Bell pulled him out and struck him. They scuffled around. Turpin saw Fred draw his revolver and then Turpin shot Fred, who ran away to the shack, leaned against it and fell down. The rest opened fire on the shack. Charley cried out: "I give up." He and Elliott then ran out, and some of them followed Elliott. Charley ran by him within two yards, and toward Bell's shack. When he got near them Lair, who was a yard away from Turpin, got down on his knee, took aim and shot Charley down. Ledford cried to him to shoot Elliott, who was running away. On cross-examination he admitted signing a statement in Noyes' office, denying having a gun or being within fifty yards of the shack. He was told that would save him. The rest had done the same, under the promise they were to have bail and not a hair of their heads should be harmed. No promise or threats had been offered, he said, for this statement, but as about six others proposed to make a clean breast of it, he thought it would be better to tell the truth than to lie.

The testimony of Elliott corroborated Turpin in the main. The additional light it gave was that he had been engaged by Fred Ward to move the shack from Charley's claim to Fred's, the same which Bell claimed. They got through about 9 o'clock the night of the tragedy. Bell had been there that evening. Mr. Irwin tried to get out what transpired at that interview. It was ruled out, however. This witness testified that both the Ward boys had revolvers. Charley's having an ivory handle. When Bell came up they were all in bed. There was a loaded shotgun in the corner, which Charley took and put on the bed, where he last saw it. Fred went to the door, having his hand on his revolver. Some words passed. Bell pulled Fred out, and they passed from the door around the shack. There was noise of pounding against the shack. Charley ran to the door and fired five shots with his revolver. Retreating behind the door he heard Fred say "I am shot." When Charley had shot they opened fire on the shack. He lay down on the floor. Charley closed the door and called out, "I give up." About sixteen shots were fired through the shack. He was caught and beaten but let go. Did not know any of them.

The evidence of the coroner's inquest was offered and Gov. Bates objected. Lair appeared at the inquest and admitted he was at the fracas and heard shots fired. In the argument in the morning during the recital of Turpin Dr. Ward was deeply moved and sat bowed with his face covered by his hands. Col. Farrington was also greatly touched. The defendant became deeply serious. It is said other prisoners will make a statement similar to Turpin's

Grand Forks Special says: The event of the day in the Lair trial was the opening for the defense by Erwin, which was a masterly review of the evidence adduced and the claim of the defense that their clients were there in pursuance of their rights, and were assailed by the Ward boys, who moved on Bell's claim armed and prepared to take it by violence. The effort consumed an hour and a half, and was listened to by a packed house. It made an incisive impression on the jury. The testimony for the territory consisted of Dr. Lane's evidence on the nature of the wound causing Charlie Ward's death.

As already intimated, the defense will be the justification. No attempt will be made to deny the presence of any of the parties. It will be claimed that the Ward boys were claim jumpers, and this claim was apparently valuable as a prospective Manitoba depot, that Bell lived on it eight months and was only temporarily off, that the Ward shack had been moved off before and the boys moved on it that night, armed, and with threats to make it hot for any party that would attempt to move them.

Grand Forks Special 11th:—The defense put John W. Bell, one of the defendants, on the stand, to prove his actual possession of the premises in question. He was permitted to tell that he occupied the house the Sunday named, but not to go into the question of title. Nearly two hours were spent in argument upon this question by Davis, Erwin, Van Arman and Ball. The court ruled all out pertaining to the question of claim of right as the defendants expected. Bell related the interview with Charles Ward about 9 o'clock of the night they brought on the shack, in which he told him to leave. He then went to Farrington's shack and Uline's, and gathered the party to go and carry off the shack from his claim. He did not see any gun or pistol in the crowd. They got to the Ward's shack after 11 p. m. He was told by Uline to do the talking. The rest were scattered around twelve feet from the shack. He went to the door, rapped, called, and told them he was prepared to move the shack, and they should come out. The door opened and Fred stepped out, with his right hand on a pistol.

"He struck me with his left hand," said Bell, "and I warded the blow and advanced on him. We tussled alongside the shack, bumping against it, to the window. Five shots were fired out of the door in about two or three minutes, and the flashes were toward me. We got around on the other side of the shack. There was a command to scatter out and shoot in the shack. There were several shots fired. Then Fred fell down in front of me with his hands near me. After he said, 'My God, I'm shot!' he never spoke nor moved."

Bell's further description was of Elliott pleading for life and Uline's saying, "Don't kill this man." On cross-examination Col. Ball subjected him to a severe test, and confronted him with his statement before the coroner, which were different. He varied some, and admitted some were false.

The defendants excepted to the land title controversy being ruled out, on the ground that it was public domain, unenclosed, unsurveyed and subject to peaceable occupation by any one choosing to do so, as long as he did not interfere with the improvements of others, and that the question of trespass did not arise in the case. The evidence for the defense was abridged greatly. The attorneys, however, have adroitly argued these questions in the hearing of the jury, and the effect of their speeches is apparent, though the evidence was excluded.

The defense is all in the Ward case, and the rebuttal on both sides closed the 12th. Counsel for the defense is preparing requests for instructions to the jury, which will be argued Monday, 14th and will consume all the day. The prosecution will give no instructions, but will reply to the requests, and have asked an early copy. The evidence in the forenoon was mainly given by the codefendants, Carpenter, McQueeny and Cole. Hugo McFadden testified to a conversation a month before the murder with Charles Ward at Bartlett, where Charles said that if he had been there when Creel's party moved the Ward shanty off the Bell claim he would have 'shot the stuffing out of them," and he was 'going to move the shanty back and hold the claim, if he died for it."

George Carpenter, sworn:

He was a druggist, twenty-five years old, and saw the beginning of the fray; was next to window; looked through; could see on the floor a double-barreled shot-gun moving about, Johnny Bell first spoke; called to Ward, "Somebody's inside;" Ward said, "All right, wait a minute;" witness told some of the boys there was a gun moving about and they might get shot. Fred stepped out in the door with his hands on his hips.

CHARLES WARD'S SHOOTING.

Charles rushed up and fired five shots before anything was done. Witness heard Pat McQueeny say "Boys I am shot. Lair and witness went to the east; did not see the fracas between Fred and Bell; saw Fred after he was down; Lair and witness was over 100 feet east of the shack; saw Charlie fall; don't think he stirred afterward; at that time Lair had no gun; he didn't fire then; Richard Turpin I did not see there.

Witness showed on the map how he ran down on the west side of the Bell shack, coming round and falling near the east side of the shack.

He was at the inquest; did not see the pistol of Fred Ward. On cross-examination said he did not see Lair have a pistol nor gun; the only gun I saw was in the shack; went with the party from the Headquarters building; there were three or four little parties; did not see any weapons in the hands of any of our parties from the time of going there to coming back; remember the incident of some other men coming out of the shack; he was told to throw up his hands; he threw them up, and Col. Uline said:

"DON'T SHOOT THAT MAN!"

I did not know any man was going to shoot him. I was thirty or forty feet from him. Ledfield, Maly, Mullarkey, Col. Uline and myself were about him. If there were others they were of the same party. There were no weapons there that I saw. Saw a shotgun in front of the shack after all was over. Ledfield wanted to take it along. Uline told him it was not his and he should let it alone.

Witness was confronted with the different statements made in his affidavit before the coroner, and said he was not correctly reported by Powell, who wrote the testimony. This was the complaint of others who had made statements.

Pat McQueeny, another defendant, said;

Am twenty-three; was behind Bell at Ward's shack when Bell called.

Bell said: "Hello, Ward."

Ward said: "Hello."

He soon opened the door and asked: "What do you want?,'

Bell told him he came prepared to move the shack. When Ward came out with his hands on his hips and said: "You s—n of a b—, I'll down you first!" Bell and he then scuffled, and Charley Ward came in the door and shot five times. He hit me in my arm.

Witness took off his coat and showed the mark of the wound on his right arm, showing also the position in which he was standing when struck.

I did not speak at once till I felt the pain, when I told the boys I was shot. I went about sixty yards from the shack to Uline. He gave me a handkerchief to bandage up my arm. To the time of this shooting not one evil word was said by us.

The peaceable reputation of the defendant was admitted. Rebuttal testimony before the coroner was admitted under an exceptional. An offer to prove the declaration of Fred Ward to United States Receiver Anderson shortly before his death of his purpose of going on Bell's claim, was ruled out by the court. The jurymen admonished very strictly in the duty to receive neither spoken nor written communication and to promptly report any attempt to communicate with them.

The greatest legal efforts ever witnessed in North Dakota are those seen and heard in the Ward cases. The prayers for charges embraced the usual ones in regard to the law of self defense, weight of testimony, credibility of witnesses and reasonable doubt. The special position predicated on the theory of the defense, that they went to the Ward shack only with the intent of removing trespassers will appear in the second request as follows:

If Charles Ward fired his pistol into the crowd with intent to wound or kill any of its members and before any act of violence by any of said crowd, without previously communicating to such crowd any request to depart, such firing was unlawful and felonious and could be lawfully resisted by the party to be injured to an extent sufficient to prevent the offense, or by any other person in defense of the person to be injured to the same extent, provided that the force of violence used in so resisting was not more than sufficient to prevent such offense; and if by means of such resistance Charles Ward was killed, it was done in self-defense and was justifiable.

On the point of threats they ask the following, in order to determine who made the first assault:

The jury may consider the testimony of the threats testified to have been made by Charles Ward before the fatal collision, even if such threats were not communicated to the defendant or heard by him.

In regard to non-participation directly in the killing, they ask the following:

If it is not proved beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant fired the fatal shot, and it is a reasonable hypothesis raised by the testimony that the fatal shot was fired by some other person than the defendant, then you must acquit him.

In reply to this Wallin, for the dictrict attorney, maintained that the principles of self-defense were inapplicable to this case and the defendant was not entitled to instructions upon that law. Mr. Van Arman further replied, reviewing the facts as proven, and admitted by the defense themselves. He held that what took place before Charlie Ward gave up ran out and was flying, for his life was immaterial. He denied in toto the position taken by the counsel for the defense, and said he was sure his honor would not be induced to participate in the attempt to give the jury an excuse to shield the most dastardly and unprovoked murder on a principal of self-defense which could not be invoked by this armed band of twelve against two persons. Gov. Davis briefly replied, saying that the learned counsel in effect asked the court to do what it had no power to do under the constitution—take away the question of fact from the jury whether the facts and circumstances in this case did not entitle them to inquire into the applicability of the right of self defense, and to instruct them substantially that they must find the defendant guilty of murder. The argument to the jury was opened for the prosecution by Deputy District Attorney Pratt, the bar being densly packed with ladies, almost to the exclusion of lawyers. He was responded to by Wellington in a most subtle and careful two hours' speech, in the course of which he alternately held Dick Turpin up as a model of courage and of cowardice, and as a teller of truth and a blackened perjurer and assassin, as it best suited the explanation of that nights' transactions. The defendant broke down, while some of the jurors, especially a few susceptible ones were moved to tears.

The efforts of Van Arman and Davis were the theme of general admiration, the former's for its familiarity with every legal principle, and the latter's for the ingenuity with which it clothed the weakest points of the defense and made them appear towers of strength. Ball's effort was also a strong one, and as usual had great weight with the jury.

In repelling the argument on the assumption that the settlement of the Northwest had been attained by many bloody affrays, he said that in a practice of sixteen years he had not heard of but one case beside this in which a homicide was committed in a land dispute in the Northwest.

Judge Hudson charged the jury at great length, defining homicide and its different degrees. He affirmed some of the points of the defense, but on the land controversy and self-defense principle involved, wholly overruled them. His instruction was as follows:

The controversy between Mr. Bell and the Ward boys over this claim is not involved in this trial. You have nothing to do with that. You could not adjust it if you should attempt it. Whatever the merits of that controversy may have been cannot now affect the guilt or innocence of this defendant and cannot in any event furnish a justification or excuse for this homicide. Such controversies should be settled in the proper form and not on this trial.

He stated this proposition in relation to the principal of self-defense:

If you find from the evidence that after the deceased, Charles Ward, had ceased firing from the door, he cried out that he gave up or surrendered, which was heard by those on the outside, and he was told to come out and did come out and run from the shack in an attempt to escape, and you find that when some distance from the shack he was shot and killed, this was murder, and nothing that had occurred previously furnished any justification for the killing, either by way of self-defense or otherwise—if this fact be true, the time for self-defense to be necessary had passed.

He instructed them that they might inquire whether any one else of the party fired the fatal shot, and whether the defendant was there with them for an unlawful purpose; charging them that if death resulted from this common unlawful design, whoever did it, all are equally guilty of murder. The defense have raised their exceptions to the charge. Under the law of Dakota the jury in murder cases must fix the penalty, either death or imprisonment for life in case of conviction. The jury was charged also in the manner of finding in case it is manslaughter.

MINNEAPOLIS, July 24, 10 a. m.

Col. Cobham Post, No. 90, G. A. R., is all right and got to the front in good shaps. I am proud of the boys.

W. H. TOPPING, Commander.

The way LaChapelle Catches Dudes.

Last Tuesday evening two young dudes went out for a walk, and when they came to Mr. LaChapelle's elk park they concluded to go in and interview the elk, of which the following is the result: "Well, Eddie," says Jim, "suppose we have some fun with the elk!" "All right!" says Eddie, and in they went, and after they had interviewed two of them, which were of the quiet kind, they made an attack on the old one that was known before as master of the pen, (and is yet, as the boys are agreed) but to the boys looked as pleasant as any of them, and was lying down in the corner taking his rest, but upon being urged to get up and exhibit himself, the boys can best explain his performance and give a full account of it. Jim says it was more fun for those who could look on than for him, for that elk went for him and knocked him down. A bystander asks "Where was Eddie?" Look on the side of the old shed, and out of reach of the elk, you will see him hanging to a board and standing on his head in such a way that he appeared on the street the next morning with the appearance of having the big head. He finally got away from the elk by running around a post and dodging the old fellow for awhile, and taking the same path that his partner, Eddie, had taken, and after winding his way along the shed to the top of the fence, he fell over it, but after picking himself up he found that he was not all there, for his hat still remained over on the battlefield; and after taking a revengeful look at the elk through a crack in the fence says: "Well, what does a hat amount to? I would not climb over there for a hat!" He now parades up the street with a bran new three dollar hat, but he declines to discuss the elk question with any one more than to say that Mr. LaChapelle ought, among his remonstrances, to get up one to keep the boys out of his elk pen, but he says it will be for the benefit of other boys, for, as to him, he will never go in there again; he also says that it was rather a queer way to treat visitors, and he also thinks that an elk can plead his own case without an attorney.

Some of our citizens seem to have a liking for meerschaum pipes. One day last week a poor unfortunate young man arrived in our city, a stranger, and without means. The only thing of value that he had was a fine meerschaum pipe that had been given him by his father years before. He went to one of our business men with the pipe carefully wrapped up in a silk handkerchief and told him a very pitiful story about having such hard luck and offering the pipe for the small sum of $10. It was indeed a very handsome silver mounted pipe, so the Crookstonite invested, the young man went away showing plainly how badly he felt at having to part with the pipe that his father had given him. The next day our friend started down street with his new purchase and feeling very proud of the same, but to his great surprise, before he had walked a block away from his own place of business he met another Crookstonite with a pipe precisely like the one he had purchased. For a moment he was struck dumb with astonishment, but he finally recovered himself enough to ask of Crookstonite No. 2 where he got that valuable pipe. He said that he bought it from a poor young man who had been unfortunate, and in the course of the day it was found that there were four of those "valuable" pipes in the city and they had all been purchased from that "unfortunate" young man, on close inspection of the pipes they were found to be a splendid imitation of meerschaum made of wood, the poor unfortunate young man, where, O where was he? Echo answers where. If there are any persons wishing to know anything more about the pipes we would refer them to Paul Bataglia or Toby Vallear.

The races at the summer garden last Saturday afternoon were a great success. There was quite a crowd assembled. At about 3:30 o'clock the first race was called. The judges were K. D. Chase, W. C. Lee and J. E. Baker. Two horses were entered, Prioress, owned by D. Jacobus, Paupau, owned by T. H. Bjoin. The horses were called, Prioress got the inside track and won the first heat in 2:58¼, Prioress also won the second heat in 3:01¼. Then the other horses were called. Anything-you-please, owned by M. Pepin, and P. J. L., owned by P. J. Lachapelle, P. J. L., won the first heat in 3:34¼, he also won the second heat, time, 3:30, this was called the colt race. The management were well satisfied with their first attempt in getting up a race, and wish to state to the people that they will try and get up something interesting on the track at least once a week.

A. G. Gallasch left for St. Paul last Monday to be gone about three weeks. He will visit Red Wing and several other southern Minnesota towns. Mr. J. Hack will act as treasurer during his absence. Mr. Gallasch left word at this office asking that the JOURNAL reporter kindly refrain from making any cute remarks in regard to his bringing the girl back with him, or anything like that. Of course we took the hint and will say nothing.

REPUBLICAN PLATFORM.

The Republicans of the United States in national convention assembled, renew their allegiance to the principles upon which they have triumphed in six successive presidential elections, and congratulate the American people on the attainment of so many results in legislation and administration by which the Republican party has, after saving the union, done so much to render its institutions just, equal and beneficial, the safeguard of liberty, and the embodiment of the best thought and the highest purpose of our citizens. The Republican party has gained its strength by quick and faithful responses to the demands of the people for freedom, and the exuality of all men; for a united nation, assuring the rights of all citizens; for the elevation of labor; for an honest currency; for purity in legislation, and for integrity and accountability in all departments of government, which accepts awew the duty of leading in the work of progress and reform.

We lament the death of President Garfield, whose sound statesmanship and long conspicuousness in Congress gave promise of a strong and successful administration, a promise fullp realized during the short period of his office as President of the United States. His distinguished success in war and peace have endeared him to the hearts of the American people.

In the administration of President Arthur we recognize a wise, conservative and patriotic policy, under which the country has been blessed with remarkable prosperity, and we believe his eminent services are entitled to, and will receive, the hearty approval of every citizen. It is the first duty of a good government to protect the rights and promote the interests of its own people, the largest diversity of industry most productive of general prosperity and of the comfort and independence of the people. We therefore demand that the imposition of shall be made, not for revenue only, but that is raising the requisite revenue for the government, such duties shall be so levied as to afford security to our diversified industries and protection to the rights and wages of the laborer, to the end that active and intelligent labor, as well as capital, may have its just reward and the laboring man his full full share in the national prosperity. Against the so-called economic system of the Democratic party, which would degrade our labor to the foreign standard, we enter our earnest protest. The Democratic party has failed completely to relieve the people of the burden of unnecessary taxation by a wise reduction of the surplus. The Republican party pledges itself to correct the inequalities of tariff and to reduce the surplus, not by the vicarious and indiscriminate process of horizonital reduction, but by such methods as will relieve the tax payer without injuring the laborerand the great productive interests of the country. We recognize the importance of the sheep industry in the United States, and the sad depression whice it is now experiencing, and the danger threatening its future prosperity, and we therefore respect the demands of their representatives and of this important agricultural interest for a readjustment of duty upon foreign wool, in order that such industry shall have full and adequate protection. We have always recommended the best money known to the civilized world, and we urge that efforts should be made to unite commercial nations in the establishment of an international standard, which shall fix for all relative value of gold and silver coinage.

THE REGULATION OF COMMERCE

with foreign nations and between the states is one of the most important prerogatives of the general government, and the Republican party distinctly announces its purpose to support such legislation as will fully and efficiently carry out the constitutional powers of Congress over interstate commerce. The principle of the public regulation of the railway corporations is a wise and salutary one for the protection of all classes of the people, and we favor legislation that shall prevent unjust discrimination and excessive charges for transportation and that shall secure to the people and the railways alike the fair and equal protection of the law. We favor the establishment of a national bureau of labor and the enforcement of the eight hour law, a wise and judicious system of education by adequate appropriations from the national revenues wherever the same is needed. We believe that everywhere the protection to a citizen of American birth must be secured to citizens by American adoption, and we favor the settlement of national differences by international arbitration.

The Republican party having its birth in a hatred of slave labor and a desire that all men may be truly free and equal, is opposed to placing our workingmen in competition with any form of servile labor, whether at home or abroad. In this spirit it denounces the importation of contract labor, whether from Europe or Asia, as an offense against the spirit of American institutions, and we pledge ourselves to sustain the present law restricting Chinese immigration, and to provide such further legislation as is necessary to carry out its purposes. [illegible] civil service, auspiciously begun under the Republican administration should be completed by the further extension of the reformed system already established by law, to all the grades of service to which it is applied. The spirit and purpose of the reform should be observed in all executive appointments, and all laws at variance with the objects of the existing reform laws should be repealed, to the end that the danger to free institutions which lurks in the power of official patronage may be wisely and efficiently avoided.

PUBLIC LANDS.

Public lands are a heritage of the people of the United States, and should be reserved as far as possible for small holdings by actual settlers. We are opposed to the acquisition of large tracts of these lands by corporations or individuals, especially of non-resident aliens and we will endeavor to obtain such legislation as will tend to correct this evil. We demand of Congress the speedy forfeiture of all land grants which have lapsed by reason of non-compliance with the acts of incorporation in all cases where there has been no attempt in good faith to perform the conditions of such grants.

The grateful thanks of the American people ore due to Union soldiers and sailors of the late war, and the Republican party stands pledged to suitable pensions for all who were disabled and for the widows and orphans of those who died in the war. The Republican party also pledges itself to the repeal of the limitation contained in the act of 1870 so that invalid soldiers shall share alike and their pensions begin with the date of discharge, and not with the date of abplication.

The Republican party favors a policy which shall keep us from entangling alliances with foreign nations and which gives us the right to expect that foreign nations shall refrain from meddling in American affairs. The policy which seeks peace can trade with all powers, but especially with those of the western hemisphere. We demand to its old time strength and effiency, that it may in any sea prhtect the rights of American citizens and the interests of American commerce, and we call upon Congress to remove the burden under which American shipping has been depressed, so that it again may be true that we have a commerce which leaees no sea unexplored, and a navy which takes no law from superior force.

Resolved, That appointments by the President to offices in the territories should be made from bona fiee citizens or residents of the territories wherein they are to serve.

THE MORMONS.

Resolved, That it is the duty of Congress to enact such laws as shall promptly and effectually suppress the system of poligamy within our country and divorce the political eclesiastical of the so-called Mormon church, and that the law so enacted should be rigidly enforced by the civil authorities, if possible, and the military if need be. The people of the United States in their organized capacity and not a mere confederacy of states. The national government is superior in its sphere of its national duty, bet the states have reserved rights which should be faithfully maintained. Each sbould be guarded with jealous care, so that the harmony of organiostion of the government may be preserved and the nation kept inviolate. The perpetuity of our institutions rest on the maintenance of a free ballot, an honest count and correct returns. We denounce the fraud and violence practiced by the Democrats in the southern States, by which the will of the voters is defeated, as dangerous to the preservation of free institutions, and we solemnly arraign the Democratic party as being the guilty recipient of the fruits of such fraud and biolence. We extend to the Republicons of the south, regardless of former party affiliations, our cordial sympathy, and pledge to them our most earnest efforts to promote the passage of such legislation as will secure to every citizen of whatever race and color the full and complete recognition, the possession and exercise of all civil and political rights.

CONSTITUTE A NATION

SYSTEMATIC VS. SLIP-SHOD FARMING.

Colorado Farmer: The fact that farmers, as a class, live with tolerable comfort and die short of bankruptcy, proves this occupation to be the most profitable one ever engaged in. Let any person who thinks this is assuming too much, study the comparative methods of carrying on various kinds of business. The farmer who knows how much any product costs him, after the first investment of purchase, is a rare bird. Whether a certain kind of feed pays, converted into certain meats, he can only tell by guess. Precisely the cost per acre of his last year's wheat crop is a problem he has not studied, though he may have mastered the calculus ten years before. Whether barley or beans may be most in demand in his market doesn't appear in the calculation. "Everything goes," to use the slang of the period. Apply this lack of plan to any other business you will, and see the result. A dry goods merchant who does not keep careful book accounts goes to the wall. (Fifty to one he goes there anyway.) The grocer who does not carefully study the needs of his market soon shuts up shop. Let a livery man keep a number of horses more than he needs or horses unsuited to those needs. The livery business will sink him. Yet the farmer leaves Plenty of horses standing round that are not at all what he needs, and they only eat their heads off—not his. He keeps cows that consume enormously, and give milk short in quantity or thin in quality, and finds that this poor management does not throw him very deeply in debt. Let a real estate or insurance agent fail to make the very most of every opportunity to "turn an honest penny," and he has to make his living by turning dishonest ones. The farmer though leaves honey wasting in his fields and buys glucose syrup. He throws away his buttermilk and buys lard by the pound. He fails to set out fruit trees, shrubs and vines, and buys natural acids, or does worse by going without. He leaves the chicken house too foul even for fowls, and finds chickens don't thrive in the West. He lets straw and manure lie in unused masses about the place, and discovers that his land isn't as fertile as he used to think it. He turns his cattle out on the plains and buys his butter.

FIRE AT DEVIL'S LAKE.

Forty-four Buildings Consumed.

Special Telegram to the Journal.

DEVIL'S LAKE, July 28th, 1884.

A fire started in this city at 2 o'clock a. m. and burned nearly all the blocks east and west of Kelly avenue and north of Fourth street. The fire originated in Graham's jewelry store, west of the Lake View Hotel, burning that house, G. S. Converse' general store, A. H. Mainerd's furniture store, Bennett Bro's drug store, M. C. Camp's drug store, post office, Inter-Ocean printing office, Moore & Dodd's meat market, G. W. Maurice baker shop, North Shore Bank, Townsite office, R. S. Thompson's dry goods store, Lee Bro's general store, C. O. Nash's hardware store, J. A. Despon, restaurant, ten real estate offices, eight saloons and eight dwelling houses. But very little damage outside of buildings, which are all insured. The furniture and merchandise was nearly all saved. No one hurt.

FARMERS' CONVENTION.

Farmers' meeting called to order by H. G. Palmer, of Marshall County. The call read. W. R. Edwards of Marshall County was elected chairman and A. E. Bradish, of Polk County, elected secretary, C. S. Smith, of Kittson County, elected assistant secretary. The vice-presidents elected were Chas. Canning, Norman; H. G. Palmer, Marshall; Peter Cornelius, Polk; Louis Berthiaume, Polk; E. N. Davis, Kittson; Dr. Collins, Grand Forks; After this there were interesting speeches from representatives from all parts of the country. Then there was a committee on legislation and a committee on resolutions appointed. The committee on legislation were M. R. Brown, Polk; E. N. Davis, Kittson; Alex. Running, Norman; H. G. Palmer, Marshall; W. T. Collins, Grand Forks; Committee on resolutions were C. S. Smith, Kittson; W. T. Collins, Grand Forks; A. E. Bradish, Polk; W. R. Edwards, Marshall. The meeting then adjourned until Saturday 10 o'clock a. m.

JULY 26th.

The Farmers' Convention was called to order at 11 a. m., W. R. Edwards in the chair. Hon. H. Steenerson was invited to address the meeting, which he proceeded to do, explaining plainly to the people the law given in the statute; also showing that the law was all right enough, providing it was enforced, after which he was tendered a vote of thanks. The next business in order was the report of the committee on legislation and transportation. The following is the report:

We recommend that a committee of five be appointed by the chair to co-operate with a similar committee already appointed on legislation. Said committee to report at a mass meeting to be held at Grand Forks on July 20th and 31st, 1884.

H. G. PALMER,
Chairman of Committee.

Committee appointed were C. S. Smith, Kittson County; Chas. Canning, Norman County; H. E. Cooke, Polk County; W. E. Wood and I. F. Houston. The meeting was then adjourned until 1 o'clock p. m.

At 1:30 p. m. the meeting was called to order and Prof. C. L. Whitney, State Lecturer of Michigan, gave a very interesting lecture. Next in order were the resolutions offered by the members of the convention, which were as follows:

WHEREAS, The people of the Red River Valley are now, and have been, subjected to the imposition of oppressive charges upon the transportation of their marketable products, as well as upon the supplies necessarily imported into the country; charges, which at present prices leave no profit to the producer; and.

WHEREAS, The reduction of rates promised by the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway has been made; therefore

Resolved, That in view of the fact that the present tariff on wheat (15 to 17 cents per bushel) is largely above the average charge of all the roads in the United States and, with elevator charges, amounts to one-fourth, or even more, of the entire value of the crop; and, in view of the immense crop soon to be harvested and offered for transportation, and the low price likely to be had, we ask, and demand, a reduction on the present freight rates of one-third, from all the stations on the line of this road upon the crop to be transported this fall.

Resolved, That we believe such a reduction will afford a living profit to the road and would be no more than justice to the farmers and business men, and entirely within the bounds of reason.

Resolved, That the chairman and secretary of this convention be instructed to furnish copies of these resolutions to the corporation above named.

Resolved, That the entire subject of railway and elevator regulation, taxation of railway lands and other property, and kindred questions, demands immediate and thorough attention by the Legislature soon to be elected, and that the prosperity of this region depends largely upon the result of such legislation.

Resolved, That farmers and business men of this Valley are urged to see to it that the ordinary political methods are not allowed to be practiced in the selection of machine candidates who are not the choice of the farmers and business; and to this end leading farmers in each town are requested to endeavor to get a full attendance at the caucuses of the respective political parties that only men of known integrity and thoroughly identified with the interests of farmers are chosen at the nominatory conventions.

Resolved, That we will assemble to discuss and to agitate this important question, until the desired objects shall have been secured, either by direct concession in response to our demands, or by legislation by the sovereign people.

YOUR FIRST VOTE.

My son, you will cast your first vote for President next November. I don't want to influence your vote. I don't want you to vote for a certain man just because other men do. I want you to sit down and think about it before you vote. I want you to be able to give a reason for your vote. I want you to go to the polls in good company. As a young man of progressive ideas, I want you to be abreast of the world and shoulder to shoulder with the times when you walk up to the polls. I want you, on entering politics, to align with the party that has the purest and most progressive record. I don't care a cent, my boy, whether you are a Republican or Democrat. There are honest men, patriotic citizens, good Christians in both parties. Only, I don't want to see you walk up to the polls and cast your first vote for the party.

That upheld human slavery as a divine institution;

That bought and sold men, women and babies like so many mules;

That fired on Fort Sumter and the American flag;

That for nearly five years fought to destroy the Union;

That opposed the issue of greenbacks when the Government was fairly perishing for the want of them;

That organized mobs and riots to oppose the draft;

That swept American commerce from the seas with armed privateers;

That is the party of Boss Tweed and Jefferson Davis;

That polls its heaviest majorities in the most vicious and ignorant precincts;

That is strongest in the States where the percentage of illiteracy is greatest;

That has opposed every liberal and progressive measure in legislation during the last quarter of a century;

That was the defender of slavery;

That is the defender of Mormonism;

That slandered Garfield; and

That assassinated Lincoln.

Now, as I said before, my son, I don't care whether you are a Republican or a Democrat. Choose for yourself. Just keep away from the crowd whose record I have very briefly outlined. Find the party to whom this record belongs, and then forever keep away from it. You need not be particular with which party you unite if you don't join that one. Always vote against that party and you will always vote about right. I am a Republican, but I will shake hands with fraternal love with any Democrat who votes against that record. That kind of a Democrat is always a good enough Republican for me.

P. S.—I have never found that kind of a Democrat.—[Burdette.

Mr. John O'Brien, of this city, left for Devil's Lake City this morning. He has a brother there in the harness business whose store was burned. His name did not appear in the list of those whose houses were burned, but Mr. O'Brien has received a telegram since.

Selling at cost, regardless. We will sell from our fine selection of watches, clocks, jewelry, etc., etc., for the next 10 days in order to make room and give us space to handle for the fall trade, the largest and finest stock in our line ever brought to the Northwest.

BERTHIAUME, BRO'S.

Fargo Republican: The board of commissioners of Clay County, Minn., yesterday passed a resolution requesting Auditor Storla, who was recently appointed receiver of the United States land office at Crookston, to decline the appointment and remain in his present position.

Mr. Filiatrault has made arrangments with L. N. Scott, manager of the St. Paul Grand Opera house to book companies for the Crookston Grand Opera house. This shows that "Fil" is on deck, ever anxious and ready to cater to the wants of the amusement-loving public.

The French settlers of Polk County have arranged for a mass meetng to be held at Gentilly on Sunday Aug. 3d to consult among themselves upon the coming county ticket. Large numbers of the French citizens of Crookston intend to go. The meeting will convene at 2 o'clock p. m., at the school house.

The St. P., M. & M. R. R. are indefatigable in their efforts to advertise this country. Some time ago they adopted the plan of giving, during the harvest season, excursions at greatly reduced rates, and this has proved so successful that they are encouraged to repeat it this year. The first excursion to Devil's Lake will take place in August, commencing on the 5th. This will be a rare opportunity for any wishing to see what this country is made of to do it on reasonable terms.

Lee & Herrick, proprietors of the Valley Mills, have shut down for repairs as they have finished the old crop and will not start up again until the new crop comes into market. They have have had a successful year and their orders for eastern markets are so large that they could ship all that they manufacture. The last twenty-four hours the mill ran they made 225 barrels of flour, and they have now on hand about 1,000 barrels of their best brands for home consumption.

Mr. Kirsh, of Euclid, was in the city last Thursday.

Mr. D. H. Fisk, of Ada, arrived in the city this morning on business.

Our streets have been crowded with teams to-day, and our merchants are beginning to smile.

The Crookston Roller Mills are still running, and are turning out their splendid brand of flour at a great rate.

The Cleveland men in our city have all sent for Cleveland hats, and it will not be long until the boys will be wearing plugs.

Frank Barney and Frank Lycan, who represent two of St. Paul's best grocery houses, were in the city interviewing our merchants this week.

We understand that there will be some changes in some of our business houses before long, but as yet we can give no particulars.

Tom Harris was about the last one of the veterans to return from below and says that the meeting was the grandest affair that he ever saw.

Our merchants are all beginning to buy goods for the fall trade, and they are all looking forward for the largest trade this fall that they have ever had. Let it come.

The Central house has been crowded again this week. This house with S. P. Norton as proprietor, is certainly becoming one of the most popular houses in this country.

The Board of County Commissioners have been in session this week and up to-date had not adjourned, so that we were unable to publish the minutes, but will give the same in full next week.

The St. Paul Jobbers' Union intend making a raid throughout the Northwest, starting from St. Paul on Monday next. No pains will be spared by our enterprising citizens to show our young city up as she deserves.

Peter Cornelius had the misfortune to lose a valuable horse one day last week. His men were stacking hay and the horse dropped dead in the harness while standing by the stack. Its death was supposed to be caused by excessive heat.

John N. Ives has returned from a visit east and brings with him a Hall's Patent Type-writer which is an elegant and useful little machine. He says he is bound to fix it so that compositors hereafter cannot lay all the errors in legal composition to him.

The best five cent cigars is at the Red Star Grocery, Broadway. [51-tf]

So far the Northwest has escaped the scourge by hail and has every reason for thanksgiving for the bountiful harvest now ready for the sickle of the happy husbandman. A very few have been visited by the fell destroyer but as a whole we have been very fortunate and a few days now will see the magnificent crop of 1884 safely garnered.

COL. COBHAM POST AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Fifty-seven members of Col. Cobham Post No. 90, accompanied by the Crookston Cornet Band attended the grand reunion at Minneapolis last week. Some of them took their wives and all unite in saying that it was the biggest thing our State has ever seen. The Crookston post, headed by their band made a fine appearance on the parade among the thousands who participated. They were conspicous not only by the fine banners which they carried but also their soldierly appearance, fine military bearing and numbers being one of the largest from such a distance. The following is a list of the comrades in attendance: W. H. Topping, F. W. Zwickey, B. F. Zarracher, S. P. Norton, J. O. Miline, C. H. Jafferson, Wm. Kistenmacher, Martin Corelette, Chas. Truax, J. EARLY MARRIAGES.

The Two Sides of the Picture Matrimonial—Small Incomes, Hasty Weddings and Long Regrets—The Dancing Man's Value in Society.

Philadelphia Press.

So long as the cat is left in company with the cream jug the cream will be absorbed," and so long as young people of both sexes are allowed to meet freely in social intercourse there will be more or less marrying and giving in marriage.

It is greatly to be feared that with the proverbial thoughtlessness of youth, the young people will not stop to consider the question of ways and means, nor calmly calculate whether they shall be able to gather sticks in sufficient quantity to keep the matrimonial pot boiling. Tom, with a lover's ardor, will probably forget to inquire, before marriage, whether Jemima is capable of cooking dinner, while Jemima, on her part, is just as likely to be left in blissful ignorance whether Tom has a bank account, outside of his salary, which will ensure there being a dinner to cook as well as a kitchen wherein to cook it.

It is all a mistake to say that two people can live as cheaply as one; for proof controvertive you have only to ask for rates at any boarding-house.

For example, Augustus manages to support life quite endurably on his salary of $10 or $15 per week; perhaps even maintains a certain position in society thereon, but he would never dream of asking Augusta to share it. If he did, Augusta, with her worldly wisdom, would think him demented or tipsy. Six dollars a week pays for his bedroom on the fourth floor of the respectable boarding house, which he patronizes, or, perhaps he rents a small furnished room, and trusting to occasional invitations to dinner, takes his meals on the European plan. The rest of his salary, with close economy, keeps him in clothes, gloves and cigars, with an occasional theatre ticket and admission to the opera on gala nights. His well-kept dress suit does not often need renewal, and dancing men are always in request at parties.

But what on earth could he do with a wife? Angels and ministers of grace defend us. Where are Augusta's dresses to come from? How is even the board bill for two, instead of one, to be paid? How could they expect "people" to visit them? So he dances on, hoping vainly to find a rich wife, while she, on her part knows that her duty to herself requires that her husband shall be able to give her at least the luxuries to which she has been accustomed and keeps detrimentals at a safe distance.

Or if they forget themselves so far as to marry, in all probability both of them are miserable, since neither can help looking back with longing eyes to the world whence they have shut themselves by their wedding.

To insure happiness in married life there must be perfect support, thorough sympathy as well as sincere affection between the twain who have been made "one flesh." When there is wealth and to spare, less may answer, but for the wedded pair who, while two in heart, must bear the privations of poverty as one, life is hard indeed. While love may not actually "sweeten sugarless tea," it undoubtedly does much to render the cup less nauseous. That woman can not be altogether unhappy who knows that she is the light of her husband's eyes—that man cannot be utterly discouraged who knows that, come what may, his wife believes in him thoroughly.

While it is not always a safe experiment, a man, if he be worthy the name, will often work the harder, and win success in the face of apparently insurmountable obstacles because he has given hostages to fortune. More than one man has won his laurels chiefly because he could not bear to disappoint the woman whose faith in him might have moved mountains, when left to himself, he had probably sat down content with a little success.

A good wife is seldom, if ever, a hindrance to a man, and it has passed into a proverb that "marriage either makes or mars a man." "It is not good for man (still less woman) to be alone," and, however willingly single blessedness may have been chosen, there are few who in such case do not sometimes feel how hard a thing it is to look at happiness through other peoples eyes." Still marriage is by no means to be lightly entered into. As a wise old lady used to say, never marry anybody until you are quite sure that you cannot be comfortable without them.

But if two people be of sound health in mind and body, love each other truly, and have a reasonable certainty of an income sufficient to keep the wolf from the door, let them not fear to marry, provided always that they are willing to give up all attempt at fashionable display, and without dread of Mrs. Grundy, steadily to live within their income and for each other.

The famous speech of Micawber on domestic finance should be framed in gold as a wedding gift to every young couple—it contains the whole secret in a nutshell.

In marrying under any circumstances do not hope for happiness pure and simple; it is not to be found on earth. Married or single, you will have trouble, and the troubles of married life, being less selfish, are usually easier to bear. When two people love each other truly, troubles serve only to bind them closer together; certain it is that gold tried in the fire can never more be doubted.

The Causes of Malaria.

In the investigation into the causes of malaria in Italy it is found that two-thirds of the malaria districts are on hillsides and mountain slopes, but that the absence of one of the specified conditions prevents the development of the disease-cause—for instance, a marsh that is pestilential when half drained is harmless when flooded; if it were possible to cover an ague tract with thick sod the fever would disappear. An illustration of the inherent character of the poisoning germs in certain soils is given. A woman had malarial intermittent fever, which yielded readily to treatment, but returned when she resumed her usual avocations. Her physician remarked that her relapses supervened whenever she left her bed-chamber and resumed her ordinary life in a well-warmed sitting room. This room was ornamented with growing plants. These were removed, and from that day her cure was complete. It was supposed that a malarial taint in the soil which nourished the plants was developed by the heat of the sitting room.

A New Haven Sunday Eighty Years Ago.

Thus a sense of duty induced them to violate the law themselves in order to compel its observance by others. The death-like dullness and absolute privation of sound which prevailed throughout the day can hardly be imagined. The labor of eating dinners, prepared on the previous Saturday, seemed to be looked on as a lamentable necessity, and though such noises as coughing and sneezing were excused if quite spontaneous, it was directly forbidden to induce them by taking snuff, or carelessly letting your liquor go the wrong way, I know not whether the chattering of a man's teeth in an ague fit would have been considered reprehensible, but in case of your hands becoming dirty I am persuaded that it would have been held more correct to let them remain so than to resort to the labor of using soap, water and towel. Under the influence of this mournful contrast to the pleasurable tranquility of the light-hearted, innocent gaiety of a European Sunday I conceive myself abstracted from the world, or rather like the personage in one of the Arabian Tales who wandered into a petrified city, and in the midst of human habitations beheld no sign of life. But while every noise was totally suppressed indoors, what does my reader suppose he would hear or observe were he to take his seat with me at one of the inn windows and survey the streets? For the most part he would hear nothing, for when the inhabitants were allowed to issue from their doors they stole about the highways like so many spirits or like the mysterious heroes in Mrs. Radcliff's romances, so light were the movements and their steps so inaudible. The principal object in sight would be those guardians of the peace already mentioned, looking like a detachment of Cromwell's body-guard as they marched to and fro with the utmost precision and solemnity, arrayed in the square-cut garments which betoken their office. Perhaps, at last, some luckless pig would waddle forth from an avenue upon a muddy research. Alas! his first grunt of triumph, as he lighted upon some spoil, would serve as a signal to his enemies, one of whom would secure him on the instant, drive him ignominiously home to his sty, and there execute retributive justice for his pagan disregard of sacred ordinances by forewith dispatching him. Or should some caitiff dog, or even thoughtless puppy, in profligate contempt of the law, begin frolicking and barking in the road, he would be summarily shot upon the spot. Or perhaps some gentleman cat, amorously disposed, would be so unfortunate as to commence an ill-timed feline serenade under the gutter of his adorned tabby, the vigilant street-keepers, attracted by the sound, would rush to the place, and at the moment perhaps when a tender response was awakening in the bosom and the throat of Grimalkin, and the passionate duetto of the hapless pair rising to a climax, both would be assailed with a battery of staff and stones, to the interruption of their loves and great peril of their lives.—The Manhattan for August.

A Long Pneumatic Tube.

New York Graphic: A company is getting ready to build a pneumatic tube for carrying letters and small packages from Chicago to New York. The idea at first seems impracticable, but on examination it turns out to be feasible. Two tubes are to be made of brass, which will run side by side, although it is said one tube will be tried at first. A powerful engine with an exhaust-wheel is to be stationed at one end. It is said that if the tube is properly made and planted no air will escape. The right of way it is believed can be secured for nothing, or at a nominal expense, and the main cost will be the tube and the engines and stations. A letter, a sample of grain, or package of any kind which is to be sent, is inclosed in a leather ball. A ball presents the least friction as a rolling object, and the leather is to be stiff and heavy. A continuous current of air is passing through the tube constantly. With one pipe the plan is to reverse the engine every hour—the first hour forcing air into it at the Chicago end and sending packages to New York, the next hour exhausting the air at Chicago and drawing the packages as quickly back. The men who have it in charge do not say how long it will take to send a package this way, but claim to be able to do it in less than a minute. Stations will be established at the important cities on the route. It is expected to pay a large profit, and to do the business of the telegraph companies, express companies, and the mail. They say the scheme of sending crude petroleum by a pipe for long distances, as is now done, was laughed at at first and that this one is more practicable, if possible, and not nearly so costly, as the pipes are to be small and can go around curves and over hill as well as on level.

Wealth at Newport.

A New York gossiper writes: "Among other New Yorkers who will spend the summer at Newport are the Astor brothers (John Jacob and William), also the Goelet brothers (Robert and Ogden), and this quartette party represents $125,000,000, principally in real estate. Pierre Lorillard and Henry G. Marquand may also be considered rich, being estimated at a couple of millions apiece, but how small this seems compared with an Astor. William R. Travers is at Newport notwithstanding hard times in Wall street, but Jim Keene, who last year had a splendid cottage there, is now compelled to seek a cheaper summer resort. The newly elected Bishop Potter has a fine cottage at Newport, and pays taxes on $25,000 there. Among the younger New York clergy in the same resort is Roderick Terry, son of John T. Terry, of the firm of E. D. Morgan & Co. He owns a house in Madison avenue and is a pastor of a rich church with a millionaire father besides. What a contrast to some of the poor clergy who can scarcely get enough to pay rent.

I CANNOT TELL YOU.

"Will you marry me, Violet, as your father wished?"

The girl turned and laid her hand in the questioner's with the simple answer confidingly uttered:

"I will."

And then Violet Allyn was betrothed to Carrol Danton, just one day after the cruel stroke that had left her fatherless.

She was but sixteen, and love as she was to know it in later years, was a sealed page to her as yet; but her whole respect and esteem had been long since won by the noble man whom her father had loved during the last years of his life as a son.

Carrol Danton was twice her age and had seen much of the world, but surely never in any clime could his eyes have rested upon a loveliness more perfect than that of his betrothed.

In her deep mourning garb, her sweet face, surrounded with its aureole of pale gold, seemed to him as fair as an angel's.

They were married, and a brief happy year flitted by. Though outwardly the same, Violet was a child no longer.

With her now life and duties new thoughts and capabilities had sprung into immediate being, and an emotion, overmastering and absorbing, had taken its dominion within her heart.

Her love for her husband in its intensity almost frightened herself, and it served to render her shy of expressing herself through actions or words, lest she should appear ridiculous; and thus, though he recognized the affection that was so thoughtful for his every comfort, Carrol little dreamed of the real depth of the tenderness that filled his young wife's heart for him.

Although it occupied a large portion of his time to attend to the extensive estate which his wife had brought him, Carroll's own business interests, which he had retained, nothwithstanding his wealthy marriage, compelled his occasional absences from home.

At such times, at his desire, his cousin Maria Danton, about his own age, and therefore much older than Violet, installed herself at Allyn Hall as companion for his young wife.

Could Carrol have looked into the future, he would as soon have placed a viper amid the bouquet of fragrant flowers which was his daily offering to his wife, as to have introduced into his happy home one who came there with the intention fully formed of working, if it came within her power, no good, but deadliest harm.

All her life, despite entire lack of encouragement, Maria Danton had loved her cousin. She was very plain, and keenly sensitive to the fact, and aroused a demon of jealous hatred within her breart. But she had managed to conceal so well her real feelings under a garb of cousinly affection and interest that Violet, as Carrol, had been deceived.

She had been at the Hall three weeks, during which Carrol had been away from home. His return was expected at the expiration of another week, but, unexpectedly, he came several days sooner.

Late one evening, full of eagerness to see once more the dear little wife from whom he had been separated so much longer than ever before, and to enjoy her surprise, he entered the drawing room unannounced, to find Maria there alone.

An hour passed. Satan had placed at last the coveted opportunity within Maria Danton's reach, and she used it so skillfully, vailing her malice under an aspect of grave and sorrowful concern, that when Violet entered the room, her fair hair clinging, wet with dew, about her forehead, and a shawl enveloped her slender form, it was to shrink back in startled surprise at the expression upon the two faces that met her eyes.

Her train laid, with an evil smile Maria made her exit from the room.

Time passed, and no sound of altercation penetrated the closed doors. But the traitor without smiled still more evilly as, a half hour later, she heard the hall door close with a resounding clang, and a few moments after a light footfall go falteringly, with many pauses, up the stairs.

To her husband's natural query as to where she had been thus alone at such a late hour, Violet had replied that she was unable to give him an answer.

When she realized the suspicions that were filling his mind, terror had seized her, and she had vowed to him that there was no occasion for them.

"Then give me the explanation I ask," he said. "I will brook no secrets. I can give my trust either in all, or not at all. Violet, as your husband, I command you to tell me who it is you have met clandestinely every night for a week."

At the conclusion of his sentence an indignant light flamed in Violet's face.

"I see now who it is that has poisoned your mind against me," she cried. "No one but Maria could have known so much concerning my movements. Carrol, if you choose to believe and trust her before your wife, I have nothing further to say or plead."

"Then you refuse to tell me what I ask? Violet, I have given you a husband's affection; it surely calls for something better than reserve and duplicity. For the sake of your own happiness and mine, I implore you to be frank. Innocence has no fear; it is only guilt that cowers and trembles."

But, though tears drenched her cheeks, "I cannot tell you what you ask," was all the answer Violet gave to her husband's moving appeal.

More words passed, angry and bitter upon one side, passively heard upon the other; and then the husband and wife parted, and Violet was left alone in her girlhood's home, a child in years, with more than a woman's heritage of suffering.

The next morning, without waiting to bid farewell to the hostess whose happiness her secret spite had blasted, Maria Danton left the Hall.

Six years have now run their course since the above. It is morning, and upon the sands of a quiet watering place two gentlemen are strolling together—one handsome, with a frank, good-humored face, the other tall, dark and very grave.

"I am so glad to fall in with you, old fellow," the younger one is saying, "where have you kept yourself since we met in Paris?"

"Abroad," is the answer. "I only returned last week, impelled by a longing to set foot once more upon my native soil; but I find now that I am here that I have no desire to remain. The associations revive the old pain too keenly. I shall take the next steamer out again if nothing happens to change my determination."

Mark Blair looked up into the dark face beside him curiously; but he had not known his companion long enough to possess the clew to its gloom.

With ready tact he turned the conversation.

"Well, while you are here you might as well have a little social enjoyment. What say you to making a call with me to-night? I have an aunt who has a villa here who is the soul of hospitality, and would be charmed, I know to make your acquaintance. Will you come? By-the-by, she has a friend visiting her who is as beautiful as a Peri, and is a magnificant musician."

"The latter is an inducement," Marks companion answered. I am passionately fond of music. But I fear my society manners are sadly out of repair. However if you wish it, I will accompany you willingly."

And so at 9 o'clock, just as the young moon flings her pale radiance over the waters, the gentlemen walk slowly along the path to the villa, whose grounds slope in a succession of terraces down to the sands.

As they near the house they retard their steps, for through the open window sweet sounds steal out upon the night air.

Pausing beneath the balcony they listen.

The song is a sad one, and is sung in a voice whose melting pathos penetrates one man's heart with a potency so strong as to cause his face to pale and his limbs to tremble beneath him.

He laid his hand upon Mark's arm with an urgent pressure.

"Do not go yet," he said. "Wait and see if she sings again."

"All right," Mark whispered back. "But if you are charmed with her voice, just wait until you see her face."

But the song ended; there came not another. Instead, a tread of feet and rustle of silken drapery above their heads apprised them that the secret songstress, accompanied by another, has emerged from the room into the balcony.

Another moment, before the two men had time to make their presence known, they became the unintentional listeners to an ardent love declaration.

"I have looked in vain this whole week for an opportunity to speak with you alone. Oh, Violet, thank you, thank you, for granting it to me at last. Surely, you know what I am going to tell you—how madly, desperately I love you. Violet, your manner to me has never given me any encouragement, but I can not believe that I am wholly indifferent to you. Such devotion as mine must win some return."

A soft voice interrupts him.

"Do not thank me, Cousin Ralph," it says; "I indeed understood your desire for an interview, but I have only granted it to you to show you the hopelessness of your attachment."

"Why 'hopelessness?' There is utter despair in that word. You are your own mistress, young and beautiful, capable of loving and of inspiring love. Why say 'hopelessness?'"

"Because, comes the sad reply, "it is the right word for me to use. Cousin Ralph, I have loved; but he who alone possessed my heart is cold in his grave, and all my hope is buried with him. Ralph I am now going to tell you something that will cause you pain, and what, had it not been for this avowal, you would never have known.

"One day, as you remember, six years ago, you came to my house, in the absence of my husband, to beg from me the means of assistance and concealment. In a fit of passion you had challenged a fellow student to an unlawful duel. You had fought and had fled, wounded yourself, from the field where you had left your contestant, as you thought, mortally wounded.

"You had succeeded in reaching the Hall before the alarm had been sounded and the pursuit begun. I listened to your story with horror. You implored me, by the ties of blood and old acquaintance, and for the honor of our name, to hide you until your hurt should be healed, and you could make your escape to another country. I did so.

"The excitement in the town ran high, for the young man whom you had wounded lay between life and death; but at imminent risk to myself. I concealed you in an empty tool house within my own park, and ministered myself to your wants. By my action in thus befriending you I ruined my whole life.

"My husband returned two days before you effected your escape. A treacherous member of my household aroused his suspicions. My solemn promise to you bound me in iron fetters, and when he questioned me, and implored me, if it were indeed possible to explain my mysterious nightly absences from my home I was obliged to remain silent.

All that sustained me through that dreadful interview was the hope that in a brief while you would be far away and safe from the disgraceful consequences of your rashness, and then I could tell my husband all. But that hope was not to be realized.

"He left me in bitter anger, and I have never seen him since, nor heard from him, until a year ago a friend abroad sent me papers containing the account of the loss of a French steamer, one of whose ill-fated passengers he was. I thought then I should die, but God willed it otherwise.

"Cousin Ralph, surely you will never approach me again upon a subject that can only add one more pang to the sorrow that through you—I must say it, though it wound you—must forever bar the entrance of happiness into my heart."

There is a moment's pause, then a man's troubled voice breaks it:

"And it was my hand that wrought you this suffering! Though he I wounded recovered from his hurt, and my hand is free from the blood of a fellow-being, I have slain a soul! Cousin Violet, forgive me if you can—I can never forgive myself."

There is a sound of retreating footsteps, and a woman's sob; then, unable to control any longer the emotions that impelled him, deserting his friend, and climbing with agile quickness up the balcony supports, Carroll Danton stands before the wife he had lost, but had never ceased to love, despite the torturing doubts that had embittered the last dark [illegible]

"My wife!" he cries, "my injured Violet! It is your husband, not dead, but living and pleading [illegible] your [illegible] from your own [illegible]. Do you not know me? Do not shrink from me. It is indeed your Carroll asking upon his knees pardon, for the sorrow he has caused you to suffer."

The cry is full of an unutterable agonized longing, and as Violet hears and feels herself gathered close into an embrace that proves beyond mistake the life and well-being of the husband she has deemed dead, happiness once more springs joyously back to the throne to which it has been a stranger for so long and dreary a while.

And thus Mark Blair learns the secret of his friend's sadness, and feels no small gratification at his own share in the blissful reconciliation.

WEALTH UNCLAIMED.

Millions of Dollars in the Treasury Awaiting Unknown Bondholders.

A curious fact shown by the United States Treasury's balance-sheet at the close of the year's business is that there is nearly $20,000,000 of outstanding government securities on which the money is due and uncalled for, writes the Washington correspondent of the Louisville Commercial. On all of these interest has been closed, and there can be no possible reasons for the holders to delay presenting them for redemption. Some of them have been due for many years. On some of them there is due large sums of interest, which have not been called for, so that the interest on these alone amount to $347,000. What has become of these documents and why they are not presented is something that no one can find out. Some of them have matured a half a century ago and are still unheard from and unpresented. Of the old debt, which matured prior to January 1, 1837, there is still outstanding $57,665 of principal and 64,174 of interest. Of the Texan indemnity stock, which matured 50 years ago, there is $20,000 yet outstanding not presented. Of the 5-20s of '62, which matured more than ten years ago and on which interest ceased at that time there is still outstanding $355,250. Of the 10-40s of '64, which matured five years ago, there is yet unrepresented $178,850, with interest of $15,460 also due and unpaid. Of the 6 per cent consols, which matured two years earlier there was $276,600 yet unrepresented, and of the 6 per cent consols matured in 1879 there is over half a million dollars yet uncalled for, with interest matured, $56,990. Of the 5 per cents, which matured in 1881-82, there is still nearly $300,000 unrepresented, though the interest ceased at maturity. Of the compound interest notes of 1864, which matured in 1867 and '68, over $200,000 are still out and uncalled for, while of the 7 30's of the same year, which matured more than 15 years ago $133,800 has never yet been called for, nor has some $20,000 of interest on them been demanded. What has become of these bonds which represent so much money is hard to understand.

Some of them have probably been destroyed, perhaps the majority of them, though it is proper to add that the bulk of the $19,000,000 due and unpresented is of that which has fallen due within the past year, and which will doubtless be presented when the well-fed and leisurely coupon-clippers realize that there are no more coupons to be clipped upon them, or that, if so clipped, they will not be honored because of the fact that the bonds have been called. There are, however, millions which have been due many years, and have not been paid simply because they have not been presented. Some of these have doubtless been lost by fire and flood, others laid away as permanent investments of some fund, or perhaps forgotten in some dusty safe or mouldy pigeon-hole. Why or how it is that such large sums are still outstanding and liable to continue so, is not even within the comprehension of the most experienced treasury official to answer.

What Fast Trotters Cost.

Dan Mac was not at home, but one of his lieutenants said:

"I suppose if any young fellow with a lot of money in his pockets wanted to buy a fast trotter to give his dust to the rest of the boys on 7th avenue he would come here to Dan Mace's; for what he doesn't know about trotting stock isn't worth knowing. During the season we have from 60 to 100 horses to sell on commission, and we have a yearly sale of trotting stock. A man needn't pay so very dear for a fast trotter, unless he wants something that can go faster than 2:30. If he is satisfied with an animal that can trot somewhere in the neighborhood of 2:40 he can get one for $1,000.

"You see all the farmers all over the country are trying to raise fast trotters. If they get a colt that in his sixth year can do a mile in 2:25, and he is of a fashionable strain—Hambletonian, Ethan Allen or General Knox—he is worth $1,000. But as animals that can make 2:35 are very much more numerous than those that can make 2:25, there is a great disproportion in the relative value. One is cheaper than he ought to be, and the other dearer. It is the supply that does this. Isidore Canfield paid $15,000 for Maxey Cobb, but he can trot the mile to road wagon in 2:21¼. Capt. Jake Vanderbilt gave a big price for Boston, but he has done it to road wagon in 2:20. Shepherd Knapp lately sold his team for $20,000 to Chicago parties. B. Smith owns a horse called Dodd, for which he paid a big price. Mr. Eastman drives a pair of fast ones, Bob Acres and Captain Jack. "Al" Hinckley drives his father-in-law's team—Col. Rookafeller's—the ones that took the premium at the first horse show. William H. Vanderbilt drives Aldine and Early Rose, and he has driven Aldine and Maud S. a mile in 2:15¼. One cannot calculate the worth of such animals. They are like big diamonds. If you want to buy them they cost enormously. But they hold their value, even better than big diamonds.

"They come from all parts of the country, nor has there yet been any one state more noted than another for the production of trotting stock. The stud book is kept with the greatest care and just as much study and thought are used in breeding as in thoroughbreds. Of course the trotter is not a thoroughbred, though the word is sometimes incorrectly used. But the [illegible] can be done by breeding from carefully selected stock."

FARM, FIELD AND FIRESIDE.

Boys and House Work.

Rural New Yorker: It has long been a theory of mine that men would make better husbands than the majority of them do, if they had been taught the rudiments, at least, of house-work. Some might reply as a bright boy did, who differed with me on this subject: "Do you want your daughter to do a man's work? To go into the stable and harness up horses and all such work?"

"No," I replied, "I do not want her to have it to do, but I want her to know how to do it, in case of an emergency."

I am always provoked to see a great, lazy boy, read, play, or sit around idle, while his mother and sisters make mend and darn for him. And his mother I feel out of patience with. I have seen girls of a family, who were attending school along with their brothers, were obliged by their mother's rule to make theit own and their brother's beds before going to school, and to do their own mending and darning, and that of their brother's beside. This would have been all right if the boys had been at something equally useful, but no, they were out-of-doors, playing ball, or something similar, on Saturdays, and in the mornings looking over their lessons, or "bothering around" until school-time. It is not just, but there are few families in which there are boys and girls, that the girls don't get imposed upon in some such way.

I know of a man who, when he was growing up, was taught by his mother not only to darn, but to make bread, which requires strong hands to make good; to wash dishes, never forgetting to rinse them in hot water, and in fact to keep the house as neat as mother did, and as careful about keeping out the flies.

Yes, and two others, who, in case of sickness, company, or the wife's absence, proved themselves as "handy as a girl!" about the house, and a great deal more so than some hired girls. They had no experience in such work previous to their marriage, but they were men quick to catch an idea, and like to be useful on all occasions.

I also know a young woman, a farmer's wife, who has never during her married life, been away from home for more than a day at a time, because her husband and the boys "would starve to death." She had no daughters, and her sons scorn to learn "girls work."

And when, as it sometimes happens, the poor woman gets flat on her back, father and sons are helpless, and must run for some neighbor. She often says: "Oh! if I had only made my boys learn house-work while they were small, how much it would have saved me."

The Oleander.

In its native state the Oleander is a riverside plant, and as such likes good living, being born to mud, water and warmth. As the shoots made in one season flower the next if well ripened, it is always desirable to get a strong growth on the plants as early as practicable. Therefore, they should from the early spring be given a warm, light place in which to grow, and receive liberal supplies of weak, liquid manure. An excellent way to summer small sized plants is to set them in a rich flowerbed or border until about October 1, when they must be potted again. After the blooming season of plants in pots or boxes is over, some of the old soil should be removed from the roots and they be reset into a receptacle a little larger than the old one, using a rich loam to fill in around the roots. It should be well known that this handsome shrub possesses some poisonous principles, for if the hand is cut when pruning it, a dangerous wound may result. Pruning as a rule is not necessary to the plant, but it may be well once in some years apart to cut it back with a view of improving its general shape.

Home Decoration.

Fan scrap bags and scrap bags of colored silk or fine woolens covered with lace have a place among household decorative fancies.

An exchange gives the following hints in the way of floor decoration: If the diningroom floor is of pine, paint it a light gray. When dry, paint a border of green. Having sketched a group of leaves upon a sheet of tin, have the tinman cut it out like a stencil letter. By placing this upon the green and painting over with a darker hue quite a pretty border will result. The possession of artistic talent will obviate the necessity of asking help from the tinman.

The mosaic piecing that has so long reigned supreme has a formidable rival in the genealogical patch-work. A quilt recently exhibited gave a list of the children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren. The squares were in the form of trees, and a flower at the extremity of each limb bore a child's name. Here is a field for delightful labor for those that can trace their lineage to William the Conqueror. The coat of arms will occupy a conspicuous place upon the ancestral quilt. It is rare that so excellent an opportunity is afforded to cover ourselves with the glory of our ancestors.

About Feather Pillows.

Many a housewife is deterred from making satisfactory and needed changes in pillows from the fact that it is almost impossible to do anything with feathers without losing and scattering them. If this plan is pursued she need have no further trouble: Suppose that she wishes to increase the size of a pair of pillows by adding the contents of a third pillow to them; divide the pillow in two parts by tieing a string tightly through the center, then rip about a quarter of a yard at the end, and rip the same length at the end of the pillow that you wish to increase, then join these two cases and sew them together; by so doing you can shake the feathers into the case without scattering them at all. When they are out of the small case, rip the seam and sew the case firmly. In buying ticking it is always well to buy the best; you will save a great deal of time and energy if the ticking is so firm and closely woven that feathers do not find their way out to blow about the room.—N. Y. Post.

Farmer's Short Notes.

The Lake Voorhees cattle ranch in Wyoming territory comprises 1,000,000 acres of land, and one pasture of 20,000 acres is inclosed by a single wire fence. It will easily accommodate 75,000 cattle.

In small gardens tomatoes should never be allowed to lie on the ground. Supports in the way of horizontal wires or slates fastened to upright posts pay for the trouble they cost. The fruit will be earlier, more plentiful and so much nicer if kept up out of the dirt.

The best development of size in potatoes gained in experiments in cutting potato seed at the Ohio agricultural station was obtained on plots where seed was cut to one and two eyes, and where the ordinary cut (four and five eyes to the piece) was planted fifteen to eighteen acres between hills. There was no appreciable difference in the size of the potatoes where whole small potatoes were used. The heaviest yield was gained where the half of a whole potato was employed as seed.

If you were to work hard in this hot sun a whole half day without water, wouldn't you suffer greatly? The horses need it, and suffer as much without it as you; can't you manage to give them a drink in the middle of each half day; a barrel filled and drawn to the field will last one pair of horses for several days. Try it and see how grateful the poor animals will be, and how much better you will enjoy your drink. It pays to look after the comfort of the teams!

There can be no reason why orchard grass should die out of the land while clover does well excepting that the clover overpowers the grass by its superior vigor. This may be caused by an excess of potash and lime in the soil derived from liberal dressing of ashes, which encourages the clover to the injury of the orchard grass. In time the reverse will take place, and the clover will die out, giving the orchard grass a better chance. Orchard grass once well established will remain for a great many years—20 or 40 or more—in the soil, and generally it does well on dry soils, although it grows vigorously even on moist, swampy meadows.

Mr. P. C. Reynolds, of The American Rural Home, seconds Professor Blount's suggestion in reference to Improvement of Seed Wheat, not all at once enough for fifty or one hundred acres, but: "Every farmer can walk over his wheat field before harvesting and select a few of the strongest stools, and from those stools he can select the largest, most productive heads. The grains from these heads, planted on rich soil and well cultivated, would probably produce stronger wheat than the average of the field from which the original heads were plucked, and in this way seed-nurseries could be formed."

Improvement Contagious.

Let a man begin a work really advantageous, and the good sense of neighbors will see it. Let a man "fix" his front fence, paint his house or arbor, clear his back yard, or dispose of old rubbish, hoop skirts and tin cans, and people are not slow in noting the improvement. Now let a dozen or a score of men join together by mutual promise in such an enterprise, and those who hold out against improvements sooner or later will join the swelling company. "If one duck drinks all will drink." "If one sheep jumps the fence all will jump." In neighborly influences the case is likewise. The thing needed is a good healthy gossip upon matters commonplace.

The Farmer and the College Graduate.

Father.—"Well, my son, what did you study at college?"

Son.—"Oh!—French and—er—Greek—and Latin—and——"

F.—"Now, what is the Latin for cart?"

S.—"Why, cartibus, of course,"

F.—"And what is the Latin for fork?"

S.—"Fork—fork—er—er—forkibus!"

F.—"What is the Latin for hay?"

S.—"Hay?—hay! why, hayibus."

F.—"Just see here, then! If you don't take that forkibus, and pitch that hayibus into that cartibus, I'll break your backibus."

Wheat Farming.

Like every other commodity, wheat rises and falls in the market in perfect accord with the law of demand and supply.

It is not at all likely that there will be any of the foreign wheat-growing countries. Climatic conditions are good, and the product is good. India wheat recently exhibited in Chicago proved to be better than our grain dealers expected. Tropical wheat is not so good as that grown in colder latitudes; but it is evident that we can not calculate on that to be any special service to us as farmers. Russia produces first-class wheat and so does Australia. Then, we have Canada right at our doors, as good a wheat country as lies under the sun.

It is an established fact that wheat grows well in cold latitudes, and that as a general thing, it is not profitably grown in the tropical regions. It is equally well understood that in colder climates the variety of crops is less in number than in warmer places. That argues that the northern farmers will continue to raise wheat as much from necessity as from desire. They can not grow some crops that are profitable farther south, and they can get little profit out of stock. In warmer latitudes farmers have opportunities that their northern neighbors do not enjoy. They can change from one thing to another as occasion requires and make money out of all.

These considerations tend to teach us that the days of profitable wheat farming in the southern one-half of our country are passed. Our Kansas farmers are intuitively falling into this line of thought. Many of them this year have little if any more wheat growing than they expect to use in their own families. But they are doing more than formerly in other directions. It costs twenty-five cents to thirty cents to take a bushel of wheat from Topeka to New York. That is cheap—very low, but it is a large percentage of the value of the wheat. It will be wise to shorten up a little in our wheat and lengthen out in corn and meat.—Kansas Farmer.

CROOKSTON, - - - MINNESOTA.

Railway shares have taken a sudden and material advance, caused partly by good weather and the prospect of good crops. Shares in some interest paying companies were at a ridiculously low figure, and as confidence is restored they take the position in the stock list to which they were entitled, but it will be some time before what are called fancy stocks can regain their former place.

Dio Lewis reaches the conclusion that consumption is found in every climate. Inhabitants of the frozen region, and those who live under the equator, die of consumption. As to the United States, there is no doubt that New England has the largest ratio of mortality from consumption. But the difference is slight, and is probably accounted for by her immense cotton, woolen, and other great factories, and her very close houses, and by the hereditary tendency in families.

The wholesale destruction of forests along the Ohio Valley, within the past ten years, may have had something to do with the alarming drought that is said to prevail within a radius of 150 miles from Cincinnati. The grain fields and pastures are parched. There are signs of an almost complete failure in the crops of the Kentucky tobacco fields; and the corn of southern Ohio, Indiana and northern Kentucky is sadly inferior to that of previous years.

The manager of one of the leading business houses of New York shows his wisdom, according to his own testimony, by advertising largely during the dull season. He says: "Just as soon as we find a lull in trade we begin to do extra advertising and make larger inducements than ever, and we find people will buy even in what is called the dull months of the year if you will make it an object for them, and also let them know by well-worded advertisements just what you have got to sell."

An English periodical states that of the more prominent English statesmen Gladstone has been 51 years in Parliament, Lord Granville 47 years, the Duke of Argyle and Lord Kimberly 37 years each, Lord J. Manners 40 years, Lord Salisbury 31 years, Lord Northcote 28 years, and Lord Hartington 27 years. Of American statesmen Webster served as the representative of the people in the House and Senate 27 years, Henry Clay 23 years, John C. Calhoun 21 years, Charles Sumner 23 years and William H. Seward 12 years.

Physicians often speak of the very large number of persons who imagine they have some form of heart disease, and Dr. Gibbons, a distinguished medical writer says: "Diseases of the heart, when known to the patient, are very apt to create anxiety and despondency. The same effect follows a belief that such disease exists, even when there is no disease. In the great majority of persons who suffer from this apprehension, there is no real disease—nothing but a functional disturbance or palpitation due to disorder of the stomach."

Speaking of people who raise an alarm of cholera over common summer complaints, the New York Sun says: "When epidemic cholera visits a country it takes care to make its presence known beyond a doubt, without the aid of premature alarmists." It is well known that many people have been subjected to cholera from fright alone—or rather, fright was the predisposing cause. The effects of anxiety and terror can scarcely be exaggerated. Even in times of real danger it will be well to remember the moral conveyed in the old couplet:

"The coward dies a thousand deaths;
The brave man dies at once."

The Boston Herald, in addition to many interviews on the business and commercial outlook, publishes "special dispatches" from Mr. H. Vanderbilt and Mr. Jay Gould, on the financial and business situation of the country. These gentlemen are presumed to be as much interested as any others in the country, from their connection with railroad enterprises. They profess to have many optomistic views of things, and can see nothing that is not of the color of the rose. Mr. Vanderbilt believes that "by November everybody will be satisfied that the panic we have had has been a good thing for the country and a sufficient reason why people and corporations should live within their means." Mr. Gould is not so concise in the expression of his opinions, but he says practically the same thing. His advices lead him to the conclusion that in both quantity and quality the country will be blessed with a phenomenal harvest, while the crop prospects in Europe are far from favorable. He says the present crop has been raised on a lower basis than was ever before known as labor and all the necessaries of life have been at bottom prices. As a result he believes that farmers can sell their products cheaper than before and still make a profit. Arguing from these conditions he reaches the conclusion that [illegible] general business and railways will find themselves in better [illegible] for many years. It is quite evident that Messrs. Vanderbilt and Gould are no longer on the bear side of the market. [illegible] property.

French civilians and madarins, however, assert that the lives of foreigners are not safe. The English flagship is landing sailors to act in defense of Foreigners in Foo Chow. China's merchant fleet has been sold to an American firm for 5,250,000 taels, nearly $7,300,000. War to all appearances is imminent.

The report of Col. Majendie, C. E., and Col. A. Ford on the recent explosions in Scotland Yard, etc., London, has just been published. The inspectors give it as their deliberate conviction that the dynamite used was not of French manufacture, but was from the Repauno chemical factory, Philadelphia, an article manufactured for commercial purposes, and sold by authorized agents of the manufacturers in all parts of the United States. They are further of opinion that the late explosions were a continuation or a repetition on a more timid and less effective scale of the railway station outrages of February last, and carried out doubtless under the same direction.

Married on Her Death-Bed.

Philadelphia Special:—The dying request of Miss Jennie Freeman, daughter of Superintendent Freeman, of the Pennsylvania Coal Company's works at Dunmore, was that her lover, Edward Mucklow, might be brought to her bedside so that their marriage might take place. Thursday they were united in the presence of the bride's father and sister. Miss Freeman, who is about twenty-five years old, is the victim of consumption, and had willed considerable property and stocks to Mucklow, who will now be able to claim it with a husband's right. The scene at the bedside was very touching. The bride was propped up with pillows. Her eyes were bright and flashing, her cheeks tinged with the hectic flush of the disease which had wrecked her life. The groom sobbed frequently. She became unconscious shortly after the ceremony, and her death is looked for at any moment.

Conviction of Dynamiters in England.

London Telegram:—The trial of the dynamiters at Warwick was concluded Aug. 1. McDonnell, who pleaded guilty to treason and felony, was released on bail to appear any time if called upon. James Egan was sentenced to penal servitude for twenty years and Daly for life. Daly's defense was very able. He argued that nothing had been proved against him except that he had borne an assumed name, but the queen moved about under an assumed name. Why had he not as good a right? He asked for justice, not mercy. He was gratified that he was on trial before Englishmen. There was no clap-trap as in Ireland. The prosecution, he said, failed to show that he joined a plot coerce the government. Daly denounced the detectives and officials of Dublin castle. The latter, he said, had reduced Dublin to the condition of Sodom and Gomorrah. He admitted having buried nitro-glycerine in a garden, and that he had explosives in his possession, but contended that this fact did not constitute treason or felony. Daly was arrested in London April 10. When seized he had two infernal machines in his overcoat pockets, two more under his inside coat and another in his breast pocket. He is an American. Eagan was arrested the same day at Birmingham as the accomplice of Daly and also on the charge of having explosives in his house. Eagan was previously secretary of the Wolverhampton branch of the land league. The arrest of McDonnell was effected about the same time Eagan and Daly were captured.

Dairying Business in Minnesota.

Col. R. P. McGlincy, secretary of the Elgin (Ill.) dairy board of trade, and of the Northwestern Dairymen's association, states that he had just returned from a trip through Southwestern Minnesota, and had found the dairy interest increasing there, especially in Martin county, and an inclination on the part of the farmers to engage more generally in that branch of agriculture. This was more especially the case, because a number of dairy farmers from Illinois have purchased lands in that county, to which they will remove this fall and the coming spring. One farmer in Martin county has been milking fifty cows this season and selling his cream to a creamery in the neighborhood, there being three very large creameries in the county; all of which are manufacturing a larger amount of butter than during last year. Being asked about the quality of the butter made in this state, Col. McGlincy said that during a recent trip to New York butter dealers in that city assured him that Minnesota butter was running uniform in quality, extra fine in flavor, and was possessed of a solidity rarely attained by other Western butter; that it was held at the same price as that of the famous creameries of Elgin, Ill., and all this has been brought about by an intelligent study of the creamery system. All that is necessary to give Minnesota butter a world wide reputation is for the farmer to aim at quality. From information received, the colonel is of the opinion that Minnesota will lead the other northwestern states in the display of butter at the New Orleans world's exposition. This feature he feels should enlist the co-operation of every dairyman in the state. Col. McGlincy will deliver addresses at a number of the county fairs throughout the state on dairy and stock matters during the coming fall.

GOV. CLEVELAND.

The Democratic Committee Notifies the New York Governor of His Nomination for the Presidency.

A committee of the Democratic National Convention, consisting of one person from each state and territory, headed by Col. W. F. Vilas, of Wisconsin, waited upon Gov. Cleveland at Albany on Tuesday, and officially informed him of his nomination for president:

Gov. Cleveland, who had stood meanwhile as intent listener, replied as follows:

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Committee: Your formal announcement does not of course convey to me the first information of the result of the convention lately held by the Democracy of the nation; and yet, when as I listen to your message, I see about me representatives from all parts of the land of the great party which, claiming to be the party of the people, asks them to entrust to it the administration of their government, and when I consider, under the influence of the stern reality which the present surroundings create, that I have been chosen to represent the plans purposes and the policy of the Democratic party, I am profoundly impressed by the solemnity of the occasion and by the responsibility of my position. Though I gratefully appreciate it, I do not at this moment congratulate myself upon the distinguished honor which has been conferred upon me, because my mind is full of an anxious desire to perform well the part which has been assigned to me. Nor do I at this moment forget that the right and interests of more than 50,000,000 of my fellow citizens are involved in our efforts to gain Democratic supremacy. This reflection presents to my mind the consideration which more than all others gives to the action of my party in convention assembled its most sober and serious aspect. The party and its representatives which ask to be entrusted at the hands of the people with the keeping of all that concerns their welfare and their safety should only ask it with the full appreciation of the sacredness of the trust and with a firm resolve to administer it faithfully and well. I am a Democrat because I believe that this truth lies at the foundation of true Democracy.

I HAVE KEPT THE FAITH

because I believe if rightly and fairly administered and applied. Democratic doctrines and measures will insure the happiness, contentment and prosperity of the people. If, in the contest upon which we now enter, we steadfastly hold to the underlying principles of our party creed, and at all times keep in view the people's good, we shall be strong, because we are true to ourselves and because the plain and independent voters of the land will seek by their suffrages to compass their release from party tyranny where there should be submission to the popular will, and their protection from party corruption, where there should be devotion to the people's interests. These thoughts lend a consecration to our cause, and we go forth not merely to gain a partisan advantage, but pledged to give to those who trust us the utmost benefits and honest admiration of national affairs. No higher purpose or motive can stimulate us to supreme effort, or urge us to continuous and effective party organization. Let us not fail in this, and we may confidently hope to reap the full reward of patriotic service and well performed. I have thus called to mind some simple truths, and trite though they are, it seems to me we do well to dwell upon them at this time. I shall soon, I hope, signify in the usual formal manner my acceptance of the nomination which has been tendered to me. In the meantime I gladly greet you all, as co-workers in a noble cause.

Really Loves Freddie.

There has been a good deal of gossip in New York for the past few days concerning Mrs. Langtry's motives in returning to England at this time and her expectations for the future. A gentleman, whose business relations with the Jersey beauty from the time of her first arrival until she stepped on the gang plank of the Arizona last Saturday morning were of the closest nature, said:

"I have no doubt in the world that if Mrs. Langtry were free to-day to make her choice she would marry Gebhardt in a moment. She is desperately in love with him and has been for a long time. I think I know enough of her, too, to say that when it comes to a question of the heart, that Mrs. Langtry would sacrifice a good deal to accomplish the fulfillment of her desire. She is a womanly woman after all, and it is because she has felt that in the outcome the world would find that she was acting only from the purest motives in receiving Mrs. Gebhardt's attentions that she has permitted them this long. There were some business affairs remaining unsettled between us up to the time of her departure, which compelled me to go down to the steamer Saturday morning. She was surrounded by a parcel of reporters who were insisting on taking up every moment she had, and I was about to go away in despair when she sent word to wait for her in her stateroom, which I did. Gebhardt was present. He looked after her every want in the most tender and most matter-of-fact manner. She received his attentions in the same way. Well, now, it did not take an old fellow like myself long to see how the land lay. I can tell you, Gebhardt is said to be a fool, but I think the boys will find out that he is going to have the prettiest bride in New York within a year.

The Situation in Dakota.

The condition of the wheat crop in Dakota has not changed since the last report. From the latest reports it is learned that the damage by the storms in the vicinity of Tower City will reach 10,000 acres or a total of 100,600 bushels. This will not effect the general crop and is but as a drop in the bucket. A special from St. Vincent says the farmers of that section of the Red River valley are now prepared to harvest their hay, which is a very fine crop. Wheat and oats are fine. Crops are far in advance of anything that has been seen for years, but will not be ready to cut for three weeks yet. Reports of crops from Rolette and Cavilier counties in Dakota are very flattering. A light frost visited that locality Monday night and the night before, but as yet has done no material injury, though in some cases its effects were quite visible, but it was not so severe as to injure wheat or oats.

G. S. Barnes, president of the Northern Pacific Elevator company, in an interview, takes a rather conservative view of the situation, and while sanguine as to the average yield, thinks that farmers should be prepared to expect low prices for their product. He draws his inferences from the fact that advices from the wheat fields, not only of the Northwest, but of the country at large, place the average prospective yield at an even higher aggregate than the most sanguine have imagined. If any accident should happen to the fast ripening grain, an accident that would have more than a local influence on the situation, there might be reason to expect fair prices; but Mr. Barnes does not look for aught else than a generous yield, and consequently bases his opinion on what is already in sight. In the vicinity of Fargo, he says the crop will be fair, but out toward Bismarck, where last year there was a great deficiency, this year there will be a big crop.

There is considerable trust in the wheat along the Winona & St. Peter road in Southern Dakota, and smut is doing a great deal of damage in the vicinity of Big Stone and Milbank. With these exceptions, the crop is doing quite well. Corn is progressing rapidly, and will soon be out of the way of drouth.

Claimants under the acts of June 3, to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men, and of July 5, to relieve certain soldiers from the charge of desertion, should make application to the adjutant general for the amendment of their records, and having secured this, the second auditor of the treasury can take cognizance of and act upon claims for pay. The intermediation of a claim agent is unnecessary.

A volcano has been discovered in the Behring sea, which is in a constant state of activity. It is described as a dull gray irregularly cone-shaped hill, about 500 feet in height, from the sides and summit of which great volumes of vapor were arising.

Hand & Ellsworth, paper merchants of New York failed. The firm has been in business twenty-two years, had a large trade, owned a mill four miles from Peekskill, New York, which cost $40,000.

Some of the watering place hotels employ public entertainers. These are women of talent, who play on the piano, sing, and in every way make the time pass pleasantly to the guests, for the compensation of the board and a small salary.

MINNESOTA NEWS NOTES.

MINNESOTA'S BIG HARVEST.

Preliminary Estimates of the Statistical Bureau on the Total Crop of the Present Year.

The total acreage of wheat for 1884 is 2,733,744, an increase of 233,700 on 1883. The total yield, based on an acreage of fifteen bushels per acre will be 40,006,160 bushels, an increase of 4,109,297 on 1883.

The increase in acreage is mostly in the northern part of the state, but the increased average yield is in the southern countries. Clay county shows an increase of 17,308 acres. Otter Tail county, which is one of the largest wheat producing countries in the state, has increased her acreage from 1,419,452 to 1,118,500, Goodhue county, which had 140,000 acres last year, barely holds her own. Morrison county shows a falling off of about 7,000 acres, and Mower county has 10,000 acres less than last year. The decrease in these counties is due to the increased interest in other crops and in stock raising. The effect of the partial failure of the corn crop last year is seen in the decreased average this year, there being only 507,248 acres against 532,868 in 1883. The yield, however, promises to be the largest for several years. With the present outlook and the absence of early frosts it is safe to place the total corn crop of the state at twenty to twenty-four million bushels. The lowest average estimate yet made is thirty-five bushels per acre, but barring accidents, it will probably be very much larger than that. Barley shows an increased acreage of 17,149 acres. The yield promises to be the largest known for several years. From reports already received from the harvest which is now about completed, the average yield will be about twenty-five bushels per acre, though some favored localities will produce a much larger yield. The total crop it is safe to say will not fall short of $7,000,000. The quality of the grain is excellent and is turning out much better than was at first expected.

The oats crop shows a large increase over last year, the total acreage being 1,016,105, against 933,237 in 1883. The yield will be large, as the crop is turning out fully as well as expected. The total number of bushels will be about 35,563,675, an increase of 3,823,834 over 1883. The total acreage as given of all kinds is 4,334,601.

The estimates of damage to crops of all kinds by storms, drouth, bugs, etc., in 1883, are interesting. The total loss of wheat was 695,439 bushels, the most damage being by hailstorms. Of corn, 5,503,012 bushels were damaged by frost, the total loss from all causes being 5,651,907. The total loss of oats was 443,873 bushels, and of barley 163,408.

SUMMARY AND COMPARISON.

The total yield for 1884 is given as follows:

Wheat	40,006,160	Oats	31,739,841
Corn	16,264,560	Barley	5,710,450

The acreage by comparison is as follows:

Wheat—		Corn—
1883	2,507,171	1883	639,840
1884	2,733,744	1884	507,248
Increase	233,700	Decrease	31,592
Oats—		Barley—
1883	933,237	1883	273,539
1884	1,016,105	1884	281,813
Increase	82,868	Increase	8,274

Bishop John Ireland.

Bishop John Ireland, by right of succession, is now Bishop of Minnesota, owing to the retirement of Bishop Thomas L. Grace.

The following announcement was made on the first day of August:

To the Clergy and Laity of the Diocese of St. Paul:

Owing to our advanced age and increasing infirmities we have found the duties of the episcopal office so very onerous that we seriously for sometime past entertained the thought of asking the supreme pontiff to be relieved of them. The sense of our inability longer to fulfil these duties in a manner satisfactory to ourself or as efficiently as they might be discharged, was no small addition to the cares and anxieties necessarily attendant upon the administration of the diocese. The growth of the diocese and the large increase of the number of priests, churches and institutions, has added proportionately to the weight of the burden, while our ability to bear it has grown less with failing health and increasing years. These reasons presented in earnest prayer to the holy father have moved him to graciously grant our petition. Rt. Rev. Bishop Ireland, under his appointment as our coadjuter, succeeds to the title and office with its incumbent duties, of bishop of St. Paul. He enters upon the office not a stranger in the diocese, but fully acquainted with the condition of its affairs. The deep love we have for the diocese, for its clergy and people, which has strengthened with years, gives, indeed, poignancy to the separation, but we are consoled in the assurance that in Rt. Rev. Bishop Ireland clergy and people have one whose affection for them is as our own, and that with his well known piety, zeal, energy and abilities, the diocese will be all the more prosperous under his administration.

THOMAS L. GRACE.

BISHOP OF THE DIOCESE.

Bishop Ireland, who succeeds Bishop Grace, is widely known as one of the most zealous and eloquent bishops in the Catholic hierarchy in America. He was born at Burnchurch, County Kilkenny, Ireland, on the 11th of September, 1838, and is consequently in his forty-sixth year. His parents, both of whom are now living in St. Paul, came to America when he was eleven years of age, and after a three year's residence at Chicago, the family moved to St. Paul, where the bishop's father Richard Ireland, engaged in business as a builder and contractor. At Chicago Bishop Ireland attended school at "Saint Mary's of the Lake." Shortly after his arrival in this city he entered the cathedral parish school on Wabasha street, and his aptitude and diligence attracted the attention of Bishop Cretin, who, in 1853, sent him, in company with Rev. T. O'Gorman, now pastor of the Immaculate Conception church, Faribault, to Meximeux, Ain, France, under the care of Rev. Father Ravoux, at present the vicar general of this diocese. The bishop and Father O'Gorman were thus the first two ecclesiastical students from Minnesota. At Meximeux the bishop remained four years in preparatory study and then entered the seminary at Heyeres, Var., where, under the direction of the Marist Fathers, he completed his theological course in four more years. He returned to St. Paul in the fall of 1861, and was ordained priest by Bishop Grace on Dec. 21st of that year. Bishop Ireland's subsequent career and labors in behalf of the church and of temperance and emigration are well known. Though the administration of the diocese is henceforth in the hands of Bishop Ireland, Bishop Grace will probably still continue to reside in the state, and will certainly remain for sometime in St. Paul. His retirement is a source of deep regret to all who know him; not that they do not feel that he leaves his diocese in able hands, but his kindness and courtesy have made him thousands of friends who regret that his failing health should have necessitated his retirement from active life. The twenty-five years of his administration have been years of great prosperity and phenomenal growth for the Catholic church in this section, and the bishop transfers to his successor one of the wealthiest and most important dioceses in the United States.

Warner Davidson, a very bright and promising young man of Morris, has been taken to St. Peter, having suddenly become violently insane.

Granite Falls young men are fitting up a gymnasium.

Emil Graff's barn blew down in Nobles county the other day killing his little daughter.

A man named Fox was fined $5 for a drunk at Glyndon and sent to Moorhead jail. He cost the county $18 and did fair to increase this to $30, when the county commissioners chipped in and paid the fine from their own pockets.

Mr. J. B. Hodaff, of the Mankato Preserving company, has ten acres of tomates under cultivation. This crop he will use in his business. He expects to put up from 60,000 to 65,000 cans of tomatoes, 85,000 cans of corn and 15,000 cans of beans this season.

Under the law in Mexico, soldiers are permitted to kill persons who resist arrest, or after being captured attempt to escape. Revolutionary forces in Guerrero were recently attacked, and Gen. Pinzen and six soldiers who were taken prisoners were killed while attempting to escape. Two general officers were also killed in Yucatan, and one in the town of Morelia.

At a meeting of the Mankato board of trade a resolution was adopted opposing the issuing of $50,000 in bonds for street improvements and waterworks.

Fifth Minnesota District.

The Republican congressional convention of the Fifth district for the purpose of nominating a candidate as the successor of Hon. Milo White, representative, met in the new court house at Austin. The convention was called to order by Chairman Wilkins. Maj. O. D. Gould was elected temporary chairman. After transacting the usual formal business, Mr. White was nominated as his own successor, and elected, Steele county alone being against him. He made a brief speech of acceptance. The chairman announced the following congressional committee for the ensuing year.

George A. Andrus (at large), chairman; Lars O. Hamre, Filmore; G. J. Lomen, Houston; J. C. Slade, Winona; Clint L. Luce, Freeborn; O. D. Ford, Wabasha; L. S. Peck, Dodge; W. A. Sperry, Steele; G. L. Case, Mower.

F. W. Fetigo was arrested in Fergus Falls stupidly drunk and bearing on his person letters to friends telling them to take care of his body. He still wants to kill himself.

A Faribault boy had fifty birdshot picked out of his hide the other day. He had been dieting on fruit in his neighbor's garden.

Last week's gale unroofed the Wabasha county workhouse. No injury was done inmates.

Hon. W. H. Officer is slowly recovering from his protracted and serious illness. He is able to be about the house during part of every day, but has not yet been out of doors.

Nels Anderson, a Swede, was drowned in the bay at Duluth, while bathing. The body was recovered. He leaves a wife and five children.

William W., youngest son of Gen. T. L. Rosser, died at the summer residence of the family at Lake Park, Lake Minnetonka, from blood-poisoning. The trouble is traced to a colored stocking worn over an abrasion, and what at first proved to be but a temporary trouble proved fatal.

Mrs. Alice Walker, who lived in Sam Judd's house in Marine, has been arrested for setting it on fire, on the evidence of an accomplice.

Officer Laughlin of Minneapolis, shot on Saturday, the the 26th, by Cantieny, a desperado, died on Monday. Cantieny was taken to the St. Paul jail to save him from lynching.

J. B. Babcock, one of the most prominent and respected citizens of Jackson, died aged forty-four years.

A barn, twenty tons of hay and a horse, belonging to Hans Markson of Havanna, burned.

Mr. LeFleur of Moorhead, while at work on a church in the town of Moland, fell over thirty feet Thursday, striking on his head and causing a severe depression of the skull, making him unconscious. The operation of trephining was made, but the patient has not returned to consciousness. It is feared that he has suffered internal injuries.

Now that the Northern Pacific has completed the preliminaries toward securing the lease of the Oregon Railway and Navigation company, the ratification and other formalities will be gone through with in a few days.

Monsignor Capel preached in the St. Paul cathedral Sunday.

George Liessim, aged twenty-five, living a few miles west from Winona, in a fit of temporary aberration stabbed himself several times in the face, throat and body. He was overpowered and taken to Winona. His wounds are serious.

The Minnesota Editorial Association met at Mahtomedi (White Bear Lake) on Monday, Gov. Davis delivered an address and the following officers were elected: For president B. B. Herbert; vice-presidents, A. W. McKinstry, W. J. Whipple and S. G. Pease; corresponding secretary, Maj. T. M. Newson; recording secretary, Liberty Hall; treasurer, D. Ramalay; executive committee, H. P. Hall, H. A. Castle, W. H. Nimmocks. The members started on Wednesday for an excursion to Lake Superior.

Rye, oats and barley are about harvested in southern Minnesota, and the yield, as far as reported, is fully up to expectations.

Traverse county farmers will hold a convention Aug. 4, to elect delegates to the farmer's senatorial and representative convention, to be held at Herman, Grant county, Aug. 5. The latter convention will include representatives of the farmers, laborers and tradesmen, and will consider the question of relief from corporate oppression.

A meeting will be held at Herman, Aug. 2, to organize a brotherhood of Union veterans of the late war.

Brown & Bagley will build a saw mill at Cloquet with a capacity of 5,000 feet per day.

Edward Ellis, a boy four years old, had his hand severed at the wrist by a mower a Blooming Prairie.

Nels Nelson, a Swede, while under the influence of liquor, proceeded to take a bath in St. Louis Bay Sunday afternoon and was drowned.

Ex-Mayor John L. Prince of St. Paul, entertained most brilliantly Monsignor T. J. Capel.

Mrs. Ellen (Meadowcroft) Gosleo of Lyletown, Minn., was seriously burned by attempting to kindle a fire with kerosene. Her clothes caught fire and before the flames were extinguished her limbs were severely burned. She has been confined to the bed since the accident. Her husband, in assisting to put out the fire, had his hands so badly injured that he cannot work for several weeks.

The St. Paul police caught William Rex, a $1,700 defaulter from Chicago.

C. F. Cornelissen, general store, Fergus Falls, has assigned to Anglo & Perkins. Monardi Brothers, crockery, Fergus Falls, have been attached by Allen, Moon & Co., St. Paul. Both the involved concerns are small.

Between Big Stone lake and Lake Traverse an artesian well 400 feet deep, with a flow of 400 barrels in twenty-four hours, rising to a height of 100 feet above the ground has just been finished.

A lot of rowdies from Ortonville, Minn., went over the lake to Big Stone City, Dak., and created a disturbance at a camp meeting, going through several tents, scattering the contents and destroying what they could, insulting and frightening the women and children. They also badly maltreated Rev. O. E. Murray, but did not injure him seriously. The fellows then fled, and are being sought by Dakota officers.

R. O. Balstad, of Fergus Falls, has been held for trial for stealing a steer from B. A. Clarke.

Prof. H. H. Kingsley, of the Alexandria, schools, has accepted the position of assistant professor of mathematics at Michigan university, Ann Arbor.

Fergus Falls Special:—The Ames & French farm, seven miles west, eighteen hundred acres under cultivation, was swept with the hail Thursday, and some parts of it are not worth harvesting. A. L. Cole's 150 acres near the city limits are cut up so that the field presents the appearance of being harvested. B. A. Peabody put his losses at $1,500. The Wemple farm was also all cut up, and a strip of about two miles through the town of Western is minus a crop. The loss will probably be 15 per cent of the crop tributary to this section. The storm cut a tract of country in the shape of a letter U, coming from the northwest to the city limits, thence southwest to the Grant county line, traveling about fifteen miles and cutting an average path two miles wide. No window lights on the windward side of houses escaped. Stones were picked up ten inches in circumference and piled against the sides of buildings a foot deep. The loss may reach $75,000 to $100,000, or much more if any other sections not heard from were visited by the storm.

W. F. Gorrie, late suprintendant of schools of Mankato, has accepted the position of suprintendant of the city schools of Watertown, Dak., to which he was called at a largely advanced salary. Mr. Gorrie was for eight years superintendant of Stillwater schools before going to Mankato.

The storm laid a large portion of the grain around Red Wing as flat as if the roller had gone over it, but most of it will rise up. The berry is filling splendidly, and while some fields will be injured somewhat, on the whole but little damage has been done.

The assessors report 8,656 head of horses in Nicollet county; 13,636 cattle; 90 mules; 4,026 sheep and 5,317 pigs. The total valuation of personal property is $1,024,820. Real estate amounts to $2,500,627 of property is exempt from taxation.

Mr. Frank Breuer, of the wholesale hardware firm of Breuer & Rhodes, St. Paul, died at his residence near Lake Como. This news will be sudden to his numerous friends in St. Paul and the northwest, where Mr. Breuer has been a prominent and honored citizen for twenty-seven years and well known fireman.

The will of H. P. Ernst of St. Paul, the man who was drowned at White Bear lake a short time ago, was filed for probate. His wife procured a divorce from him at the last term of the district court, on the ground of adultery since which time the will was made. The will devises to the wife $3,000 life insurance from the German Life Insurance Company of New York, $2,000 from the Banker's association of St. Paul, $1,000 from Lodge No. 14 of the sons of Hermann of Milwaukee, and all his personal estate and property. The will also devises to the three children $3,000.

Jacob Albert and wife of Waseca were drowned while in a row boat on Clear Lake. A young man was rowing the boat rapidly and threw one of the oar-locks out, overturning the boat. He only was saved by clinging to the overturned boat. The drowned people were about thirty years old, and had charge of Maplewood Park grounds, and formerly lived at New Richland.

A little son of Mrs. Schirisner, four years old, was run over by a train on the Minnesota Valley road near Sleepy Eye, and horribly mangled, dying in an hour.

An unknown man was run over and killed by a train between Plainview and Blakely, Minn.

During a heavy thunder shower at Brown's Valley lightning struck the barn of William Barnett, a mile east of town, setting it on fire and totally destroying it. A threshing machine and engine standing in a shed attached to the barn was also burned. Loss, $2,000; no insurance.

Frank Breuer, a prominent business man of St. Paul for a quarter of a century, died recently.

The honors paid to Bishop Grace at St. Paul on the occasion of his silver jubilee were worthy of the man and of the occasion. The eloquent address of Bishop Spaulding, one of the most notable of pulpit orators of the church, was fitly framed in a setting of imposing ceremonial and generous personal tribute.

Francis Murphy, the temperance reformer, is coming to St. Paul.

The railroad war at Pipe Stone rests quietly in the courts at present.

The Northwestern Car Company at Stillwater, of which Senator Sabin is President, is getting "out of the woods." Settlements have been made with the largest creditors and stockholders, and it is predicted that the concern will soon be on its feet again.

H. H. Young, state statistical agent of Minnesota, makes the following report as to the present condition of the wheat crop of that state: The average is 2,757,218 acres, and the average per acre will be sixteen bushels, making the total yield fully forty-four million. There is very little damage by the late storms, certainly not more than one-fourth of 1 per cent, so that the aggregate will hardly fall below 44,000,000 bushels. Oats, barley and rye crops are also excellent, and corn is as good as can be. The estimate of 44,000,000 is regarded by some as too conservative, the general opinion being that the wheat crop will exceed 45,000,000 bushels.

The Reunion of the Army of the Tennessee will take place at the Hotel Lafayette' Minnetonka Beach, Aug. 13 and 14. The Programme of the two days is as follows: On Wednesday morning, Aug. 13, at 10 o'clock, there will be a business meeting. In the afternoon there will be an excursion on the lake and a lunch at Lake Park hotel. In the evening the annual address will be delivered by ex-Gov. C. K. Davis. On Thursday morning the annual ellection of officers will take place, and in the afternoon another trip on the lake is provided for. A banquet in the evening, as elegant as can be served, will close the meeting for 1884. For the first time, at this meeting, wives, daughters and sisters of members will share the good times.

Ganser's brewery at Owatonna was burned Monday evening. It was just being completed, being enlarged by stone additions to the brick main building, and new engines and machinery were being put in. The cost of the building was about $16,000, and of the machinery, etc., about $3,500; insurance $2,000 in the North American on building, and $2,000 on contents on J. Newsalt's agency.

The store of O. E. Erickson, of Atwater, was closed by his creditors, Foote & Johnson of La Crosse, H. G. Harrison of Minneapolis, and his stock will be sold at auction.

Harvest in Minnesota will begin the first week in August in nearly all parts of the state. A few fields are ready now, and some cutting will be done this week; but the work will not be general before the 5th to the 7th.

Mr. C. E. Marvin, of Rochester, has been appointed general superintendent of the entire dairy interests of the World's exposition at New Orleans, and has accepted the position.

The members of the Tenth regiment Minnesota volunteers, to the number of about fifty, met July 24, at the headquarters of that regiment, at Camp Beath, and effected a permanent organization. Gen. S. P. Jennison was elected president, Maj. E. C. Saunders vice president, and H. A. Mosher secretary. It was decided to hold a reunion of the regiment at Waseca, Minn., about June 1, 1885. All comrades of the regiment are requested to send their names and addresses at once to the secretary at Waseca.

Seven tramps were arrested at Fergus Falls for fighting among themselves and attempting to rob a Swede.

Jacob R. Hickok of Lyle, fell from his buggy in a fit, and was dragged for a mile, being dead when found.

The trustees of school district 84, Le Sueur, have $100 in the treasury and wish to build a school house. The voters in the district do not want a building and have so voted. The trustees inquire of Superintendant Kiehle whether they have the right to build without the consent of the district. The answer is "No." It is possible for them to rent a building, and they could pay enough rent to any one who would erect one to warrant his presenting the structure to them.

The old Ninth Minnesota regiment will hold a reunion in Mankato, commencing Tuesday, Oct. 28, and continuing three days. J. Dane, C. Keysor, George W. Mead, C. M. Jost and L. T. Mathews, of Mankato, have been appointed a committee of arrangements. The corresponding secretary of the regiment is Paul Seegor of Windom, Minn., to whom communications from members may be addressed.

The accounts of the state treasurer for the close of the month show balances in treasury of $1,039,534.11, of July which a deduction for reserve fund overdrawn leaves a balance of $936,705.04, deposited in the First, the Merchants', the German-American, the Second, and the St. Paul Nationals and the Bank of Minnesota.

Articles of incorporation of the Swedish-American Bible Seminary were filed in the office of the secretary of state recently. There is no capital stock specified. Its object is the instruction of students for the ministry and for missionary work, and the institution is to be located in St. Paul.

SECRETS OF THE SCAFFOLD.

Does Unconsciousness Immediately Follow Decapitation by the Guillotine?—Surgeon Velpeau's Astounding Experiment and Its Appalling Results.

The prisoner was one of those who do not play at cards; neither fear nor hope was discernible in his face. He was thirty-four years of age, dark, of middle height and very well built; his hair on his temples was commencing to turn slightly gray; his eyes were nervous, rarely opened to their full extent; his forehead bespoke large meaning powers; his speech was low and quick; his hands leaden-colored; his physiognomy had the stiff expression of a man formally precise in his utterances; his manners implied studied refinement. Nevertheless, M. de la Pommerais had been condemned to suffer the extreme penalty under articles 301 and 302 of the penal code for having administered fatal doses of digitalis to a lady of his acquaintance premeditatedly and through motives of avarice.

Suddenly the sound of rifle-butts echoed on the pavement of the corridor; the turning lock squeaked harshly; the door halfed opened; there was a glimmering of bayonets in the penumbra without, and M. Beauquesne, director of La Roquette, appeared upon the threshold accompanied by a visitor, whom M. de la Pommerais recognized at one glance as the illustrious surgeon, Armand Velpeau. The two colleagues were left alone, face to face.

"M. de la Pommerais," said Dr. Velpeau, "your pulse reveals a rare coolness and firmness of character. The mission I have undertaken (and which I trust will be kept secret) has for its object a sort of offer which, even though addressed to a physician of your energy—to a mind well tempered in the positive convictions of our science and wholly free from the fantastic dread of death—might seem either criminally extravagant or criminally derisive. But we know each other, I believe, and you will therefore take my proposition into serious consideration, however singular it may seem to you at first."

"You have all my attention, sir," replied La Pommerais.

"You are certainly well aware," continued Velpeau, "that one of the most interesting question of modern physiology is whether the least gleam of memory, of thought, of veritable sensibility, persists in the brain of man after the severing of the head from the body."

At this unexpected overture the condemned prisoner started; then, recovering his calmness, replied:

"Well, just as you came in, Doctor, I happened to be discussing that very problem with myself—a problem which now, of course, has a two-fold interest for me."
